THE INDIAN POLICY.—The appointment of Mr. C. G. Hammond, of Chicago, as Indian Commissioner has given the country a renewed hope that the pacific measures adopted toward the Indians will not be surrendered to scalpers like Gen. Custer. In this connection the statistics of the Indian Bureau of British North America prove the benefits of a liberal policy. The Bureau has in charge 85,397 Indians. Less than $200,000 was expended in 1873, and yet those on reservations were supplied with interpreters, physicians and teachers; their public works, such as bridges, school houses and churches, are kept in order, and they are aided when their houses are destroyed by fire or their crops fail. The chiefs receive salaries of from $20 to $100 per annum, and their tribal influence gained by the salaries paid them is found to be more effective than an armed police force in securing piece and good order. Some of the Indians' schools are supported by themselves, some by the Government, and the remainder by churches and missionary societies. Liquor-selling to Indians is strictly forbidden, and the prohibition is enforced, and the tracts allotted to the tribes for reservations are kept free from intruders.

THE GERMAN WAR.—That the struggle between Bismarck and the Pope is no child's play is sufficiently plain from the fact that during a single week in August the Catholic papers reported five arrests of Romish priests, eleven expulsions, and twenty sequestrations of church property. Four Catholic societies were dissolved and inquiries instituted into six others. The Catholic club, organized for political purposes, are receiving special attention. There are five hundred and thirty-three of these associations scattered throughout Europe, and Prussia has nearly one-half the number. These are significant figures, and justify the German government in the strict inquiry now progressing. Rome will not be shaken off from this strong Protestant country without a struggle. If she loses Germany, and on the issue there presented, her hold one very Protestant country will be paralyzed. The German church laws of 1873 and the supplementary laws passed this year are probably misconstrued by many Protestants as severe and arbitrary, framed specifically for the Catholics. This is a mistaken view. The Prussian laws are general in their nature and apply to all confessions. If there is any persecution in the case Protestantism suffers equally with Catholicism. The law of 1873 provides that all religious societies shall be independent in administration while subject to the laws of the State. It provides that all ministers shall have a liberal education, saying nothing of what theological cast this shall be; and the Catholic institutions of learning are sufficiently numerous and competent. The government also retains the right of objection to a ministerial candidate if he is too ignorant, is a convicted criminal, or a plotter against the public order. The bishops are also restrained by the law from inflicting any punishment upon their subordinates or the laity which pertains to the civil law. These are the regulations against which the Ultramontanes rebel. The German Catholic Union, the central association of the papal church in Germany in its late General Assembly declared open war on the "so-called modern civilization" in general, and the constitution of the German empire in particular. Our confident temper inclines Americans to expect the overthrow of the papal power, but German Catholics think differently, and have announced, No peace until our own terms are accepted. Protestants everywhere have an interest in Germany they do not sufficiently recognize. Let prayer go up for the success of God's truth against the fearful power of modern Babylon.

AT HOME.—While we regard with increasing interest the contest in Germany, priestcraft is daily developing a fearful power in America. The common school and Bible in it are the chief points of an attack in which extraordinary and reckless measures are being used. Dr. Miller, pastor of the Plymouth Baptist church in New York, not long since preached a sermon advocating the use of the Bible in public schools, which was reported in the papers, and attracted some attention. He received an anonymous note of warning, and subsequently two pistol-shots were fired through the window of his study. The political maneuvers of the papists are sometimes unaccountable. Thus it is reported that they are canvassing the city of Brooklyn from house to house with the questions, Do any Catholics live here? Do you hire a Catholic servant? In the late Constitutional Convention of Ohio an effort was made to change the Constitution and obtain a division of the public school fund, but they were defeated. The Convention was then denounced, Catholics urged to vote against it, and now their journals glory in the result as a Catholic victory; while it is well known that the Constitution would have been defeated had every Catholic in the State voted for it. Thus the Catholic Telegraph, of Cincinnati, says: "We are glad to record that the Catholics of the State voted unanimously against this instrument of oppression. The result of the vote teaches them the immense power they wield in defending their rights and resisting injustice when they stand united. This is an important and beneficial lesson to be remembered in the future. When division ceases victory is sure to follow us. We have, in the success of our opposition to the late Constitutional fraud and robbery, a double cause for joy—in the defense of the most sacred right we have marshaled the Catholics of this State into one unbroken army." American Protestants may well be on their guard against this invidious foe to their dearest institutions—the safe-guards of their liberty. And before it is too late let every Christian see that nothing is left undone to defeat the power of the priest and bring the souls now in his chains to a blessed liberty in Christ.

Difficile.

Oh, it is hard to work for God
To rise and take his part
Upon the battle-field of earth
And not, some times, lose heart.

He hides himself most wond'rously;
As though there was no God;
He is least seen when all the powers
Of ill are most abroad;

Or he deserts us in the hour
The fight is almost lost;
And seems to leave us to ourselves
Just when we need him most.

It is not so but so it looks;
And we lose courage then;
And doubts come whether God hath kept
His promises to men.

But right is right, since God is God;
And right the day must win,
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin.

Arguments Against College Fraternities.

BY DR. J. W. NEVIN, PRESIDENT OF FRANKLIN AND MARSHALL COLLEGE.

College fraternities, as they are called, have grown to be an evil in our institutions of learning of the most serious kind.

1. They are a foreign, outside interest in the body of a college, which necessarily preys like a cancer on its proper life. A college exists for a certain end, determined by its own constitution; and to reach this end effectually, it must have all its forces and activities regularly organized in the service of a single system. Free associations and movements may be allowed among its students, so far as they fall in harmoniously with the idea of such a general academical life, but not otherwise. When they take upon them the form of an organized continuous power outside of this life, and in no real union with it, they must necessarily tend only to its destruction. And this, precisely, is the character of the fraternities here noticed. They are an outgrowth from the college system, which is no part of it properly, while yet it seeks to draw the life-blood of the system continually to its own separate use. It matters not what the objects of these associations may be otherwise, they have nothing in common with the general interest of the collegiate education. With regard to this, they are, at best, of the nature of an excrescence, a mere fungus, which cannot thrive without eating out more or less the vitality of the college at other points.

2. This is seen at once in the bad influence which these fraternities exert over the prosperity of the regular literary societies, which have been regarded all along, heretofore, as a main arm in the educational work of our American colleges. These literary societies fall in naturally and organically with the academical life of the institutions to which they belong, are a part of it, and cannot be sundered from it, without the greatest damage and loss. But it is notorious now, that the so-called college fraternities are found to work unfavorable everywhere on such older, purely literary organizations. They are bringing into our colleges a new and altogether different principle of organization, a mere "club spirit," which is essentially hostile to the old academical spirit, and the full triumph of which can be nothing less than fatal at last to the whole idea of college literary societies in their past form. This is not speculation simply, nor fancy; but in some of our older colleges, the literary societies have already virtually perished, and in all of them, the societies are no longer what they were in earlier days.

5. It is not to be emagined that the fraternities are, in their own constitutions and workings, free from moral evil. Some may be so, but others may be quite the reverse. The system at least has in it no safeguard or guarantee against possible abuse, and in this view it is terrible to think of ingenious youth when they first come to college, being allowed to commit themselves blindly to its dark and utterly irresponsible guidance. The fraternities in question assume to be a sort of federated power in the bosom of the proper college, acting by different societies outside of its direct supervision, with weekly private meetings, for ends and purposes that nobody is to know anything about excepting the societies themselves. These ends are not literary, or academical, in any true sense of the term; they are social, such as belongs to convivial clubs. Who may not see the moral danger that is involved in the very conception of such an order of things as this in a college; and how, if carried out to its full consequence, it must revolutionize at last the old meaning of a college altogether?

6. The dissipating, demoralizing influence of the system is aggravated still farther by the affiliation in which these fraternities stand with others of the same name in other colleges. This gives rise, as we know, to exchange of delegations, mutual festive receptions, and other meaningless solemnities that cannot possibly go forward without much waste of time and money; and that should be considered for the undergraduates of a college, out of place and out of character altogether.

7. The waste of money it brings with it in other ways, forms a very serious objection to the fraternity system; especially when it is considered how large a proportion of the students who are drawn into them, have no money to spare for any such object. All can see how membership in any of these clubs becomes very soon a temptation, not only to idleness but to vain outside pretention, and an improper lavishness of expense in different ways. It is especially humiliating when beneficiaries of the church, having the Christian ministry in view, allow themselves to be seduced in this way into such unnecessary extravagance.

8. Another grand objection to all such irresponsible college corporations is found in the power they have to destroy the true law of freedom and independence among the students, and to substitute for this what is a law only of the poorest sort of slavery and bondage. They are parties, cliques, clubs, bound together in narrow circles around some factious private interest, and to this they insist on making all else bend without regard to any really public end whatever. Like what are called "rings" in business or politics, they interfere with the course of true merit in college life, and try to "corner" things everywhere to their own advantage. In this way particularly, their baleful influence is felt upon the literary societies. . . . . In this view, all who feel an interest in college education, whether otherwise opposed to secret societies or not, should set their face sternly against the fashion of college fraternities, not just because they are secret, but because in their very nature they are opposed to the true idea of a college, and tend to destroy it wherever they are allowed to prevail.

Let the church, through her several classes, take peremptory rule with regard to her beneficaries and candidates for the ministry. Let parents and guardains, who send their sons or wards to college, use like peremptory authority against their joining any society not approved by the faculty. Let there be such cooperation all around, and in due course of time the nuisance may be abated.—Selected.

A Fraternity Vision.

BY A. THOMPSON.

It was customary in old times for the younger members of a noble family to enter the army or take holy orders. To day all America is taking orders and each of them professedly holy. As at the whistle of Roderic Dhu up sprang the Highlanders, so at the beck of the men of darkness lodges and grangers spring into formidable and gigantic growth, and cast their dark shadows over the future of a sufficiently troubled land. Did the farmers feel the tyrannical exactions of rich and unscrupulous monopolies, and like a wakened Samson stretch forth the hand of a giant to grip their enemies? The lodge-men saw the movement, threw themselves into the current, and straightway a seven-storied brotherhood spread from ocean to ocean, and honest farmers were set to whispering and exchanging grips behind guarded doors, as if they lived in times of deadly peril and every man outside was an enemy.

But the grange was for the farmers only,—what a pity that other laborers should be excluded from the loving and benevolent arm of a secret society. S. evidently thought the lodge-men, for in the twinkling of an eye, up rose the "Sovereigns of Industry" and in three months there were more monarchs in the United States than blessed the old world in thirty centuries.

Shakespeare speaks of the astonishment of Richard at meeting so many kings on the battlefield, and Scot relates an incident in the wars of the Percys', where one of the Douglas giants, hewing his way into the enemies' lines with his terrible battle-axe and smiting down several clothed in the robes of royalty, as still another presented himself, cried out in amazement, "Where did all these kings come from?"

Gods fought in the wars of Greece, nobles in the "wars of the Roses," and hereafter "Sovereigns" shall fight in the wars of the United States, for should an enemy invade our land we will send against him an army of "Sovereign," carpenters, masons and tailors to square and trowel and hammer him with the goose, till the same fate overtakes him that befell the widow's son within the walls of the great temple.

These are but the heavy skirmish line of the black batallions that lie behind; among which we see the eagle plume of the "illustrous order of Red Men." Magnificent savages, how their hearts must thrill with bygone memories, as they wheel in the giddy circles of the buffalo dance! I wonder to what tribe they belong; though doubtless the Apaches. Do they ever take the war-path as of old and return with wampum belts beautiful with hanging scalps? Who shall penetrate the wigwams of the modern "Lo" and bring us the desired information?

But who are these, their long white beards floating in the beams of the silvery moon? Who but the ancient and honorable order of Druids; from the depth of the primeval British forests these "venerable fossils" make their appearance. The dark ages shoving up their hoary heads in the bright light of to-day. We had thought Ossian's grandfather made an end of these, when the mighty Trenmore lifted the sword and Trathal led his father's hosts to battle. "Dark dwellers of the rock," what histories of the past can you unfold? What tales of Fingal in the days of his pride? of Ossian, "King of song," and Oscar his warlike son? What of the tragedies of rock circles and stones that sway in the wind, and all the mighty chiefs, whose spirits rode to the sky on beams of lightning and are now hunting the airy deer and steeds of wind?

The scene changes. The Druids roll about them their misty garments, and go to sleep. A band thunders forth Hail Columbia ere Vice-president Colfax steps to the front, and after him in solid batallions an army of the Odd(est) Fellows that this round world ever produced. This is a fraternity universal, with an equality worthy of the commune. The highest offices of the order are open to all its members. If they only pay the dues, and take the degrees, no mental incapacity or moral inequality need stand in the way. See that city loafer transformed into a "Noble Grand." Around him flash the lesser nobility of the lodge. Colfax mounts the platform, and proves from the Bible, the Koren, the Shastas, and Confucius that Odd-fellowship is that elephant on whose back this great world rests. And now if you are not convinced that all fellows ought to be odd, and all ladies, Rebekahs, it must be, as Queen Elizabeth would have said, from a plentiful lack of common sense. Amongst all these there is one hydra too terrible for jesting, too powerful to be lightly attacked. Around it, as around a center, wheel the greater and lesser planets of the same dark system. With one foot upon the throat of the law and the other upon religion, it hisses between its dragon teeth, I am King. And this monster, Freemasonry, hydra of the nations, we will consider hereafter.

The Rhode Island Legislature.

A communication from S. L. Morse, to the Southbridge (Mass.) Journal contains the following: In the General Assembly of R. I., 1831, it was resolved, "That a committee of four with such others as the Hon. Senate may think proper to add, be and they are hereby appointed a committee fully to investigate and inquire into the causes, grounds and extent of the charges and accusations brought against Freemasonry and Masons in this State, and that said committee, so far as may be necessary to enable them to perform their duty, be empowered to administer oaths, to examine witnesses and to call for books and papers." (Oct. session.) In the senate, read the same day and concurred, with the addition of Mr. Connell. True copy; Witness, H. Bowen, Secretary. After holding sessions for two months, and examining over one hundred witnesses, two-thirds being adhering Masons, this committee report on p p 36. "It is agreed and sworn to by both Masons and seceding Masons, that the Masonic obligations (as administered in this State) are now all made public." On page 37, "The committee therefore may confidently affirm that the public are now in the possession of the whole of Masonry as practiced in this State." On page 72 the committee conclude by saying that the Masons owe it to the community, to themselves and to sound principles, now to discontinue the Masonic institutions. Signed by B. Hasard, James F. Simmons, Levi Haile, Stephen B. Cornell, Committee. Besides it has been five times judicially proved that the exposition of Masonry by Wm. Morgan is true. This is confirmed by the great army of those who have renounced the institution as dangerous to our liberties and an enemy to the Christian religion, also those who are almost weekly leaving it for the same reasons, including some of the best men in the country, and we have an array of evidence that ought to convince any reasonable man. If human testimony can prove anything, it proves that Freemasonry is anti-republican and anti-Christian.

Plain Reasons against Odd-fellowship.

The principles of our government are founded upon the Golden Rule, and embodied in the Constitution. The wise and good men who framed that instrument knew that it could not be sustained if free speech and free press were abridged; therefore they inserted them in the constitution as an inherent right, never to be suppressed. This was done in order that every principle and system might be publicly examined so that we would be able to choose the good and reject the bad.

If the exercise of free speech and press are so important, it is the duty of all who can, to use them, and any system that shrinks from public examination and forbids it, exists in direct opposition to the fundamental principles of our government.

Odd-fellowship is a system of insurance, whereby the strong and healthy combine, and leave out the aged, the extremely poor, the feeble and cripples, and then call it a benevolent system. Both as a benevolent and an insurance institution it is a humbug.

The Odd-fellows of Kansas, it is said, paid $7.50 each in 1872, and but $2.50 was applied to their kind of benevolence. The $5.00 was spent, I suppose, in running the machine. And to add the price of the regalia and value of time spent would doubtlessly equal $7.50 more. Therefore it would cost $12.50 to get $2.20 of benevolent insurance money applied.

The benevolent people sent the yellow fever sufferers aid, and had it distributed without distinction. The Odd-fellows of the United States sent their contributions, with what they begged, and ordered it distributed only to the Odd-fellow sufferers. The process would be about this: Coming to a distressed family—Do you belong to the Odd-fellows? No. Then suffer away; we have nothing for you. Next, are you Odd-fellows? Yes we are. All right. And then gives them of the good things donated. Behold our benevolence! True benevolence is not selfish, but false benevolence is always selfish; and by this you can always distinguish it.

I have known Odd-fellows to charter cars to convey the corpse of an Odd-fellow, and much time and money spent uselessly, whilst cases of destitution were neglected. Dives gave Lazarus crumbs from his table; but they gave nothing.

The system also embraces a kind of heathenish religion. They do not offer up their prayers to God in Christ's name in their lodges, nor at the death of a brother Odd-fellow. Thus they are heathenish prayers.

Feeding the pride with pompous titles and great display, and helping each other to secure more than a just share of rights give it its life blood.

That religious belief, or knowledge, is best which "thoroughly furnishes a man unto all good works," and when a man possesses this he can have no use for the bogus insurance and bogus benevolent system called Odd-fellowship. A. H.

Universalism.

It belongs to the vagaries of this evil time to endeavor to secure for Universalism a respectable place in the church. Journals that make loud claims to orthodoxy, and whose claims are recognized by latitudinarians in all denominations, maintain that a person may be a Universalist without forfeiting his right to be a communicant in an "orthodox" church. It has even been strongly insisted, among the Congregationalists, that a candidate for the ministry, who avows his acceptance of Universalist tenets, should not on that account be rejected.

Such facts are well adapted to making the impression on the ill-informed, that Universalism is rather an innocent speculation than a "damnable heresy" calculated to ruin souls. Men are the more easily misled by it, because the error is so accordant with the wishes of the natural mind, and commends itself to the superficial sentimentalism which cannot endure any thought of righteousness as asserting itself over against wrong-doers. It is one of those devices of Satan which display his cunning craftiness, as it soothes to slumber again the soul that is aroused by the thunders of the law. Its apostles are incessantly crying peace when there is no peace; and many are the simple souls who heed the cry and trust its seductive tale, many of them, alas! to be undeceived only when it is too late.

The penalty of death was from the beginning announced against sin. By the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation." That this implies the eternal punishment of all who refuse to have any part in the free gift unto justification offered in Jesus Christ, is not only an inference from the general announcement, but is expressly declared. "Then shall he say unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire; prepared for the devil and his angels," "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Matt. 25, 41–46. The attempts made to break the force of these and similar passages by pretending that the word everlasting does not mean everlasting, is vain. Any doctrine of the Bible can be set aside by such a process, and if the principle is once admitted, nothing can be regarded as certain, however plainly the Scriptures may teach it. And in this case the pretense is peculiarly unfortunate. It can deceive only those who are determined to be deceived. For the very same word is used in reference to the torments of the wicked and the bliss of the righteous. These shall go into everlasting life, those into everlasting punishment. The word translated everlasting in the one case and eternal in the other, is one and the same. If everlasting does not mean everlasting when applied to punishment, neither does it when applied to life. The argument that is used to prove that the punishment of hell is only temporary, would prove also that the bliss of heaven is only temporary. It is a wicked perversion of God's Word.

This is manifest also from the fact that the punishment of unbelievers is described by other terms as unending. We would refer as an instance to our Lord's words: "It is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than, having two hands, to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Mark 9, 43–44. This is the "everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." It shall not be quenched, and the worm that gnaws those who are cast into it never dies. "The devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever." Rev. 20, 10. "The smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever; and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name." Rev. 14, 11. God will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. 3, 12.

It was from an eternal torture that our blessed Saviour came to deliver us, not from a mere temporary punishment. Those who believe in him shall be saved with an everlasting salvation. Those who reject him have no hope in time or eternity. They remain in their sins and perish forever. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John 3. 36. Universalism is a system of human reason that sets aside this truth and disparages the name and work of our Redeemer. It belongs to the delusions to which St. Peter refers: "There were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction." 2 Pet. 2, 1. Its breath is poison; shun it!—Lutheran Standard.

Eulogizing the Dead.

. . . In an hour comes a change over the public mind. Denunciation is stopped; criticism, even the mildest, ceases; eulogy takes its place, and all agree in elevating to the stars the dead journalist or statesman. Those who had for a score of years been the most bitter in their opposition, outrival their opponents in strewing flowers upon the graves of the deceased. Not only so, but all parties combine in covering up the personal vices and faults of the deceased, in magnifying their virtues, and giving them a home among the saved.

All this is natural enough, we admit. Death calms and subdues the mind, allays animosities, and magnifies virtues. And if conscience hints that we were unjust to the man while living, it is a cheap penitence to praise him when dead.

Another feeling also impels some writers to glorify the dead man who when living was far from immaculate in character. The eulogist may be as far from perfection as the one he would eulogize. If then he can persuade the public and himself that death has transformed a sinner into a saint in the person of the departed, why may it not work the same beneficient change in him when his last hour comes? Thus, while concealing and glossing over the personal sins of another, he is able to forget or excuse his own. And further, it is true that the sins of the dead should not be magnified nor even mentioned unless truth and morality demand it.

What do truth and morality demand in the case of public characters? We speak of all who have engrossed a large share of the nation's attention.

Truth demands that if public characters are held up for imitation, they shall be truthfully presented. If the highest eulogiums are pronounced, and our youth are called to aspire after the same eminence, and no word of condemnation is uttered of the known vice or errors, then a false view is presented, and injury done to public morals.

It is not true that the evil of a man does die with him. It often becomes more fatal as years roll on. If he have inculcated false principles in politics or in morals, he may be called to his account long before the disastrous harvest is gathered from his sowing.

Shall his memory be held up for admiration because he was endowed with splendid powers, and no word of condemnation be uttered for the perversion of those powers to vicious purposes? Such seems to be the course of many leading organs of public opinion in our day.

The ancient Egyptians would not allow the body of the dead to be embalmed, and thus in their view consigned to immortality, until his debts were paid and his accounts settled with the living; surely a wiser course and juster by far than the unstinted eulogizing of the dead, whatever the follies or iniquities of their lives.

The greatest talents and the widest range of influence, unless consecrated to the service of God and the highest welfare of man, but lay their possesser under the sterner accountability to that God who gave them, and who will call him to account for their improvement.—Am. Messenger.

Many centuries have passed. Has the world become wiser and better? That it is more humanized (using the term in its proper sense) is certain. I doubt, however, if men of the world act upon other principles than they did when our Lord was on the earth. Is the church itself near to what he prescribed? It think it is; yet how far from what may and should be attained! Let us believe that God will, in his own time accomplish the work which he has inaugurated. The commandment comes to us with solemn and inevitable responsibility. If much is given, much will be required.

The great drawback to a devout life is the influence of worldly usages. What we are accustomed to see daily, does not call forth the same antipathy as would an isolated or unusual wrong. The low standard of morality in the general habit of men, has a damaging effect even upon the conscientious. There is a subtle power in continual familiarity with corrupt practices. Something more than mere impulse, however strong, is required for successful resistance. The mind should be instructed in the perilous consequences of even the slightest departure from rectitude. While intellectual perception must be conceded not to be a substitute for moral intuition, or what may be termed the monition of conscience, it is nevertheless true that the misunderstanding of the tendency and ultimate results of every departure from right is an important safeguard.—Dana.

We would commend to the sober second thought of our German citizens those words of which the Rev. John Hall lately uttered in St. Louis:—"If I were of sufficient importance to get the ear of my German brethren, I would say this to them—Like you, I am an emigrant; like you, I have settled in this land; like you, I have made it the home of myself and my children. I would say, bear with a word of counsel; do not quarrel with the institutions of this land; do not try to shake them to pieces, especially this one, on which the Sabbath rests; for it is by the maintanance of such institutions by this American people that have made this land worth our coming to, and worth our while to seek a home in it for ourselves and children.

Those who sink under persecution, or are impatient in a sad accident, put out the fires which the Spirit of the Lord hath kindled, and lose those glories which stand behind the clouds.—Jeremy Taylor.

—Annual Meeting of the North-east Pa. Association, Nov. 3d, in Free Methodist Hall, Wilkesbarre, Pa. It is proposed to organize a State Association in connection with this meeting. Communities, churches, any organized body opposed to secret societies, are requested to appoint immediately, good men, citizens, clergymen, any suitable person to attend said meeting, report to the following committee: NATHAN CALLENDER, Greene Grove, Luzerne Co.; M. D. MCDOUGAL, Wilkesbarre; A. L. POST, Montrose, Pa.

DORA, Ind., Oct. 8, 1874.

DEAR FRIENDS:—The State Association will hold its first annual meeting on the 28th and 29 of October at Dublin, Wayne Co., Ind. Let every one who can do so come to this meeting, and aid us in the work of systematizing and perfecting the State organization. Those who can not come and desire to assist us financially, will send their contributions to Rev. A. Butler, Dublin, Wayne Co., Ind., who is president of the State Association and who will pay the same to the treasurer, and report through the Cynosure. Entertainment will be provided for all who attend. Brother Stoddard has promised to attend; and Bro. J. T. Horne, Andrew Zeek, Joseph Bennet, and Rev. Wm. M. Givens, all seceding Masons, are expected to be present.

BRETHREN OF INDIANA, do not fail to do your duty in this matter. If you desire the work kept moving, and a State organization maintained, then do all you can to that end, otherwise it cannot be done.

Respectfully and sincerely yours in the cause of truth, JOHN T. KIGGINS.

Jottings From the Field.

CARTHAGE, N. Y., Oct. 1, 1874.

DEAR K:—Perhaps the friends would like to hear again from the work in New York. Since my last bulletin, I have to record more active operations. I have spoken in McLean, Tompkins Co., in the Baptist house of worship. Gave there three lectures to good and attentive audiences, among which were found a number of Masons, who on the whole behaved very well, except on the third night when I spoke on the aporetta—or secret workings of the order. Then there was some noise, but not enough to make a serious annoyance. The pastor of the church, Eld. W. J. Betts, is a young man of promise, and is developing into a good worker in our cause. He was unfortunately called away after hearing my first lecture. I found a good home—that which the weary lecturer so well knows how to prize—with Bro. John Hart, who with his wife and interesting family made me forget many of the discomforts incident to my work. Husband and wife are good and true friends of our reform, and are now readers of the Cynosure.

From McLean I stopped off to attend the session of the Cortland Baptist Association. Found here one good Anti-mason among the ministry of the body, Rev C. A. Smith. He desired me to come before the Association as an agent in a ten minute speech, I smiled at his innocence, and told him to interview the committee having that business in charge. He did so, and came back, as I felt sure he would, with a decided refusal to admit the subject. This same brother being a member of the committee on resolutions, then asked me to write a resolution for them. Desiring still farther to test my brethren, I wrote out a very mild thing and committed it to the chairman of the committee, who just then entered the room. He took it, claiming that he was an "Anti-secret man to the back-bone." He might have been to the back-bone; but certainly no farther, as events proved. He took the resolution with others; but alas! the third on the committee, L. W. Olney, overruled the other two and my resolution was not read; but the chairman, Eld. Phillips, read all the rest, and then after a pause, said: "A gentleman has handed in a resolution on secret societies, and as the committee [of three only] were equally divided as to the propriety of presenting it, I would like to have the sense of the body as to reading it. This was followed by a portentious pause. The poor man of resolutions stood in awful expectancy, as having been guilty of throwing a fire brand among the brethren. Heads were raised, brows were corrugated, heads were lowered. There was a calm such as sometimes preceeds a storm. At length a brother rose to his feet with a jerk, and looking round as if for some support, broke the awful silence with a move to lay that resolution on the table, and dropped into his seat, as if relieved of a heavy load. This motion found no second from the perplexed company; if it had I was prepared for a mild suggestion. At length a brother rose, and as though hardly sure of his position, yet dimly sighting the truth, hinted that the resolution not having been read was not in their possession and could not therefore be laid on the table, and finding no response, he, or another, cried out, "I move we don't want to hear it read!" To this, for a moment, there was no response. After a long breath the body resumed its ordinary work, and anti-Christ found he had nothing to fear for this latter manifestation from that body of disciples.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 2d, found me at Dryden, Tompkins Co; but when I went to the place for speaking I found it locked and the key gone,—I suppose with its owner,—to camp-meeting. While on the way to D. I saw on the cars several ministers of the Reformed Methodists. One of them, Rev. Mr. Waldron, told me they were on their way to conference at Otisco, and wished me to come and speak to them on my mission. Being thus thwarted in my purpose at Dryden, I turned back, reaching the place of said conference about noon of Thursday. After dinner I went to the meeting, was introduced to the body by brother W. They received me very courteously and made me by vote an honorary member and then went on with their work. This is, I believe, the smallest of the Methodist bodies, having but two small conferences, one in this, and the other in the New England States. I was much interested as they went on with their work. As each minister gave in his report of work, and his receipts for that work, I was surprised at their statements. The highest sums received were, one, between one and two hundred dollars, and one I think reach-$254,00. I looked upon this body of self-denying ministers with admiration and wonder, as they spoke of their labors, trials and triumphs. But those two highest salaried brethren drew my thoughtful attention. They certainly did seem to me to be superior to their compeers,—far from it. How came they to be so highly favored? I fancied—was it all fancy?—that they manifested a feeling of superiority over less favored associates. My darkened mind could find no solution of the puzzle until upon inquiring I learned that these fortunate ones were Free and Accepted Masons, the only ones in the body! Thus were the high salaries accounted for.

At length it was proposed that an opportunity be given Bro. Barlow to speak on secret societies. Again was given me to see the appalling terrorism of the lodge over the church of Christ. Then came a pause, and a shudder seemed to pass over the assembly. Our two Masonic brothers said nothing, but looked unutterable things. The clerk finally rose and mildly suggested that the body had so much work before it that it would be impossible to find time for me to speak. The venerable chairman sustained this idea in a few pertinent remarks. The breath of some began to flow more freely, until the brother who had the appointment for the evening said he would give up his time to me. Every reasonable objection being thus removed a vote was taken, and the required permission was given me, most of the brethren proving true to their reformatory principles.

I accordingly spoke to a house full of people who seemed to be deeply interested as I unfolded to them the anti-Christian character of speculative Freemasonry. In the morning one of the preachers, who declared himself to be a thorough going anti-secret man, spoke of the Masonic preachers as being very angry while I was showing up the Christlessness of Masonry, and thought the conference had done wrong in inviting me to speak, and said he did not vote for it. He did not believe in making the craft brethren angry. They were too small as a body to be split up any more, &c. I suggested to him that, like Gideon's army, they might be all the stronger by a little more depletion, and left him to ponder over the apparent paradox.

My next appearance was at Summer Hill, Cayuga Co., Sept. 5th, where I became the guest of Rev. C. A. Smith, already mentioned, for whom I preached on Sabbath morning. The evening of the same day I spoke in the Congregational house of worship, Rev. Mr. Switzer, pastor, on the Religion of Masonry. Had a good and attentive congregation, many coming a long way—one Mason nearly six miles. On Monday evening I lectured in the Baptist house, and again in the Congregational on Tuesday evening to the largest audience I have had yet. The afternoon of that day I spent with the pastor of the church, who is an Englishman. He seemed much interested in the subject, but acknowledged that he should be almost afraid to be engaged as I was against the secret monster. At the close of my remarks, however, he, as well as Bro. Smith, followed me with some strong and hearty words of endorsement. I had great reason to be encouraged in my efforts here. Seed was sown in good soil and much fruit may be expected.

On Wednesday, Sept. 9, I was at Groton, Tompkins Co., where I assisted in forming a town organization, and spoke to good congregations that and the following evenings. You already have enough of this from Bro. Barnetson. Suffice it to say, I think it will prove a live society, as it is well officered, manned, and womaned, too, and means business. Bro. Hart, the President, is, I believe, the right man in the right place, while Rev. E. Barnetson, the Secretary, is one of whom I can say I wish we had many more like him.

Sept. 17 and 18 found me at Linclaen, Cenango Co., where I gave three lectures in two days, the nights were dark and stormy, and, of course, the audiences were small; but what they lacked in numbers they made up in spirit. The meetings were held in the Seventh Day Baptist meeting-house. Returning from the meeting the first night a sad accident occurred. Schuyler Olin, Esq., who had acted as chairman of the meeting, a heavy and lame man, somewhat in years, while crossing a bridge some four feet high, was overtaken by the man with whom I was riding, and, in trying in the dense darkness to get out of the way, he stepped from the bridge and, striking his side either on the end of a projecting plank or the abutment, was seriously injured. Here, also, the friends thought much good was done; and here I sold more certificates of membership than at any other place.

On the 19th and 20th I spoke in De-Ruyter, Madison Co., in the chapel of the Institute. Had good congregations, with a fair sprinkling of Masons. They, however, made no disturbance. Here I found a home with a Mr. Stillman, an intelligent, kind-hearted member of the Seventh Day Baptist church.. Mr. S., while in his house, put in my hands the records of the old "Moriah Lodge," of De Ruyter,for (as the Secretary hath it) "Ano Lucias 5809 and 10." The document was found some time ago under an old building, and falling into good hands it has now come to me. It bears external and internal, if not infernal, evidences of its authenticity. I propose to give your readers a specimen of lodge going from "labor to refreshment," as understood and practiced at that time. This will be best illustrated by the following bill of expenses as it appears on the records for June 22, 5809.

"Expenses this eaving as follows :
1 pint of rum by Bros. A. and L., and others before lodge opened—
5 Gills handed to Bro. W., by wife—
4 do by By Jas. and self—
4 do by do. by request of Bro. C.—

4 Gills at	10*d*	0—3—4
5 do "	10	0—4—2
4 do "	10	0—3—4
4 do "	10	0—3—4
Sugar two times		0—1—0
		£0 15 2

Jeremiah G—, Secretary."

The above is as near a fac simile as I can make it—spelling and all. You will see that the currency is sterling. Rum at that time costing 10 pence sterling. When this bill was made there were twelve members present who managed to get outside of two of two quarts and one gill of rum, with "sugar two times." At the next meeting, July 20, 5809, twelve brethren punished as follows:

"3 Quarts of Rum	£0, 19 4
Sugar two times	0, 1, 0
Receipts for the evening	£0, 12, 0

Here they seem to run behind. The next lodge night eight brethren made way with only six gills of rum, which came to five shillings, which they seem to have taken raw, as nothing is said of sugar. Perhaps they had some left over.

Whether after this the brethren all became teetotallers, doth not appear, but at all events, no further items are recorded, though the expenses seem to be kept up pretty well. But this article is already too long. I will finish up at some time in the near future. I am still in the field and have much to say that will interest the friends.

Encouraging from Iowa.—Rev. S. Ranks at Waverly.

Waverly, Iowa, Oct. 5, 1874.

Dear Editor: We have been favored with another course of four lectures at the German evangelical church in this city, delivered by Rev. S. Ranks, who lately renounced Masonry at one of Bro. Kiggins' meetings, he having taken three degress. This was his first effort in this line, and I think, as also do many others, that the cause has gained another efficient laborer, and the lodge lost a good man. O I pray the Lord may lead many more out of this "Satan's cheese trap," as Bro. Kiggins sometimes terms it!

The cause is certainly gaining ground in this vicinity. Brethren in Iowa send for Bro. Ranks who is ready to receive calls for his services. Send for him. The expense will not be much. Let us keep him busy. There is s great work to do, organizing the State, which should be done as soon as possible. Men everywhere are ready to receive the light and act with us. In this county is a large German settlement and they are, almost to a man, with us, but they want organizing and bringing together, and when this is affected the doom of Masonry and such orders is sealed. This showed itself plainly at our recent county primary elections. Many voters declared publicly that they would not vote for a Mason or Odd-fellow for office, yet they (Masons) say we only make more Masons. So mote it be. Yours,

P. Woodring.

From Bro. Ranks on the Waverly Meeting.

By request we lectured at Waverly, Sept. 27th, 28th and 29th. A respectable number were present at the German church on Sabbath afternoon, although notice of the lectures was brief (only one day previous) and all the churches held meetings at the same time. We viewed Masonry from a Bible standpoint, giving it the benefit of the fact that it is more than possible that good men are found among the Masons, but ignorantly so. They are ignorant of the nature and tendencies of the system. But no thanks to the system as such.

On Monday evening the Masons were respectful enough to hear their "purjured brother" through. But at the close a legal gentleman, a high Mason, arose, asking the privilege of speaking five or ten minutes. The congregation granting his request by vote, he arose evidently much agitated, and trembling like Felix—tried to thrust upon the intelligent audience the horrors of breaking the Masonic oaths! For a moment of course he run on in a deeply pious vein, and like the devil trying to enforce the obligation of keeping bad promises, by the following Scripture: "He that sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not." The same doctrine carried out, took off the head of John the Baptist. His weakness called forth the pitiful laughter of the congregation. Order restored we closed with the benediction.

On Tuesday evening we closed a pleasant time with the people of Waverly. We viewed Masonry as a dangerous power, but soon to be crushed by an Almighty power. Signs of a permanent conviction of the evils of this system were apparent; occasional, cheers with the general approbation of a larger congregation than was present the two previous evenings. The legal brother referred to above sat in solemn silence, seeming to say as Mrs. Partington said, "I belong to the 'Knights of Pitty-us.'" But recovering from his mood just as we were about to leave, he threw out a pretended representation of the strength of Masonry by a challenge to discuss the question at some future time.

We closed receiving the warm approbation of many, with the hasty shake of the hand indicative of a warm heart for the Anti-masonic cause; and invitations to return again. One man gave more than ten dollars for expenses, others according to their ability, especially Bro. P. Woodring. On the whole we may put down the Anti-masonic cause as a growing success in Waverly. In this place where I write (Jefferson, Green Co.,) we have an Anti-masonic organization which we think will be a success. But amid our persecutions we have no means but through your distant sheet to meet the lies, slanders and abuses dealt out at this county seat by a Mr. Rhodes, post-master and editor of a low sheet called the Bee, published in this county.

Truly, etc.,

S. Ranks.

Correspondence.

From Elder Baird.—Lodge in Court.

Greenville, Pa., Oct. 5, 1874.

Dear Cynosure: Let me say in your columns for the benefit of our readers, that the September court is just closed, and the suit I had entered for slander was closed out from coming into court by the Grand Jury finding no bill against the guilty party. The editor guilty of libel is a Freemason, and the Grand Jury was so shaped as to have six Freemasons, and several Odd-fellows and a number of "Jacks" with a small minority of true men, and hence the power was used in the name of the law to espouse a brother's cause, "So far as to extricate him from difficulty, whether he be right or wrong.' There is a great providence in the matter. It has opened the people's eyes as nothing else could have done. Will the Methodist Free Press and the Reformer please to copy.

Blessed in Maintaining the Rule.

Quincy, Ohio.

Since the year 1844 I preached against slavery until it ceased to be. I was told a hundred times that if we would strike from our Book of Discipline that clause prohibiting slave-holders from connection with our church, the United Brethren in Christ, we could go right into the Southern States and do wonders by the way of increasing in members.

The very same thing is now being said of our rule on secrecy. On my work last year (Summerville Circuit, Auglaize Co.) they of the lodge said we would like to join your church, it is the church of our choice; but we belong to a secret order and don't want to leave it. I tell them, well sirs, you can join if you will sever your connection with the order; but if you can't do that, you love the lodge better than the church, and we cannot receive you; for God says, "Come out from among them," have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame to speak (by way of advocacy) of those things that are done of them in secret." An Odd-fellow told me the other day, after he had utterly failed to sustain himself in saying that his was a religious and charitable order, "It is a better order than the United Brethren church." Now the fact is, with all our opposition to secret societies, I have received 163 into the U. B. church and 175 were hopefully converted, while the M. E. church alongside and over the same territory have not received more than one-half that number all told, and very few converted. I say this to the praise of God and in vindication of the truth. I shall stand for the right in spite of earth and hell. Pray for me.

Cannot Reconcile it.

West Unity, Ohio.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

During the past summer we have been teaching a Sunday-school class in the M. E. Church in our neighborhood. A few weeks ago when the subject of the lesson was the beheading of John the Baptist, the minister in charge took a seat in our class. (He is the same man who a few weeks ago published to the world, that from the degree of Entered Apprentice up to that of Royal Arch he had found nothing inconsistent with his calling, and that the same was true of Odd-fellowship.) To the question, Did Herod do right in beheading John? he answered, No! To the question, Was it his duty to violate his oath when he found it required him to do wrong? he very promptly answered, Yes. To the question, Can a person under any circumstance be placed in a position where he is legally or morally bound to do wrong? he answered, No. An old gentleman in the class then asked the question, Has a person any right to take an oath to do an act, not knowing what may be required of him? Our Rev. Royal Arch friend again answered, No!

How he could reconcile these answers with his oath to keep a Master-Mason's secrets, murder and treason excepted, or with this, "That if any part of this solemn oath or obligation be omitted at this time that I will hold myself amenable thereto, whenever informed;" or with this, "I will aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when engaged in any difficulty, and espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, if within my power, whether he be right or wrong," is more than we can tell. Herod did not know that he would be required to do wrong. But a Royal Arch Mason after taking the above oath, is bound to defend, if necessary, any crime that a companion may commit, which in our estimation is about the same as an oath to do wrong. We think a bad man would be much more ready to commit crime if he was certain of protection, than if he was not, and any organization that promises protection to criminals is a promoter of crime, and the more "Hon's." and "Rev's." in the organizations the more certain the criminal would be of escape.

J. G. MATTOON.

A Criticism.

In the Cynosure of Apr. 2d, 1874, there is a "Sermon on Masonry" by Rev. W. P. McNary, in which he says: "We wish it distinctly understood that we speak against Masonry as an institution and not against Masons as individuals." Can a distinction exist so as to separate between an institution; and the "individuals" composing that institution? I think that if there were no individual Freemasons, there would be no such a thing as a Masonic institution.

But there is such an institution, and it is made up of individuals; and I think a blow struck at the institution as such would hit each individual composing the institution, and there would be no institution "to speak against."

Again he says: "I believe there are many earnest Christians in the order, strange as the fact appears to me," etc. If he means by the term, "earnest Christians," that they were the Lord's sheep, as spoken of in John x., then I differ with him. Because I understand that not one of the sheep of Jesus is in the Masonic institution. Not one! Now for proof. But first, let me say that I indorse his fourth objection, "That Masonry is a religion—an anti-Christian religion." Freemasonry being a religion, and claiming that its worthy departed members are going to "an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," thereby proves itself "a thief and a robber." See verses 7 and 8. "Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep. All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers; but the sheep did not hear them." Notice this last sentence: "but the sheep did not hear them." Now notice verses 4 and 5. And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them and the sheep follow him; for they know his voice. And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him; for they know not the voice of strangers." Freemasonry is a stranger, "a thief and a robber," and the Saviour's sheep will "not follow, but will flee from him." Rev. McNary could not "injure their character,"—that is of his "personal friends,"—by the truth, that were not Christians, in the saving sense of that term. For their Christian character was already injured by the act and fact of their having heard the voice of a stranger, and following him. "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" Rom. vi. 16. See also 1 John, i. 5, 6. "This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowshiped with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth." And again, . . "what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15, 16.

Now if I am in an error, I hope some one will show me wherein. If I am correct, then said sermon and pamphlets on said points, are in error, and should be corrected. J. P. LOGAN.

Good Masons.

CARTHAGE, Ind.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

We have been amused more than once at the logic of secret society advocates in making use of the so-called argument, "that all the good men belong to their order," to sustain the institution. This has been used as a final argument thousands of times by the members, and men have turned away from it many times as being unanswerable. The reasoning is, these good men belong, therefore the order must be good. When really there is no argument in such logic. Such statements do not touch the merits or demerits of the order. We might say that we have known some of the worst men in the country to be Masons, therefore Masonry must be evil. There is just as much argument in one as the other; if any difference exists it is in favor of the latter. But we are in favor hereafter of investigating the actual merits of Masonry without representing by either it worst or best members, as this is no test of merit. If this is the only test of the goodness of the order, we ought to place its standard over the men cited as examples of goodness and say, the fact of their belonging to Masonry is all we want to know of their goodness. OUR MAIL.

Enoch Honeywell, Atlay, N. Y., writes:

"I want the nations and especially our grown boys, to see the inside of Ezekiel's "Chambers of Imagery." He (Ezekiel) says: 'Go in and see the wicked abominations they do there.' We must open the door that they may go in. Your million missiles are now battering down that chamber. A chamber in which the Ku-Klux and their cousins are now holding murdering revels in honor of their 'most worshipful grand master.' Eighty-six years of my life passed out yesterday. The remainder is dedicated anew to God's service, and with your help (in tracts) I can do something for him that will tell when I am gone."

Thos. Baldwin, Jonesboro, Ind., writes:

"Brethren Stoddard and Kiggins have just been here and delivered twelve or more lectures which will not soon be forgotten by the citizens of Grant county. They were interesting and telling speeches. I do not say that they converted one radical sinner. But they have awakened many of the lukewarm to a sense of their duty, so that they are coming out boldly and showing their colors; which is just what we mostly need. I do not wish to boast for I know that I am weak and often come short of my duty; but as for colors I hung mine out forty years ago, and have never taken them in, and by the grace of God I intend to die and leave them out."

W. R. Crosby, Green Valley, Ill., writes:

"Your paper is just the thing. We can raise an excitement any time by saying Bernard or Rathbun."

P. Bacon, Wheatogue, Conn., writes:

"I am trying to do what I can to help on the cause. I hope soon to get a number of permanent subscribers. . . I keep all the books I can get lent and trust that it will prove good seed in good ground."

Wm. Zigler, Ashgrove, Iowa, writes:

"The work of reform still goes on here. Pray for us and send us tracts."

D. Griffith, Nevada, Ill., writes:

"I have sown the Cynosure and the tracts I received broad cast amongst my friends in hopes that the fruits like the bread cast on the waters may return after many days. I am now near four score, being born in 1796. My days of usefulness are nearly expired, and I cannot expect to see these Samsons of secrecy shorn of their strength in my time, but that they may yet be, is my ardent wish. We are now suffering the lash of these. One of our school directors employed his brother-in-law (a boy) to teach our school three months at $40 per month who had no certificate, and by false presentations, obtained the money from the treasury and paid him $120. We brought suit to compel the return of this to the treasury, and the jury brought in no cause of action."

Philo Millard, Woodhull, N. Y., writes:

"J. L. Barlow will be here sometime in October to give us some lectures. That is what we need in this place to enlighten the people on the subject of Masonry. J. L. Barlow will be the first to bring the barley loaf, and I hope the Masonic tent will lay along; for I expect he will break his pitcher and the light will shine. I hope to give you a good account of our meeting."

A. C. Hall, Wakeman, O., writes:

"I like the paper very much."

Griffin Marcy, Portland, Mich., writes:

"I wish we had a lecturer here to talk to the people about secrecy. We have had advocates for all the reforms of the day, Temperance, Woman's Suffrage, etc., but not one to speak against the dark, deep, damning work of the lodge. O may the time soon come when our wives, mothers and sisters will have the privilege of standing by our side in the conflict against temperance, secrecy, and all other wrongs that are leading our young men to ruin. I have been a reader of your paper almost ever since its commencement, and expect to be until life closes or the sins of secrecy and intemperance are things of the past."

Mrs. A. Geil, West Union, Iowa, writes:

"I want you to send some tracts to my father. He was a Mason. My husband got Morgan's book and he read it and has not been to the lodge since so far as I know. I do not think he will go again. Mother said that he cried after reading the book."

E. W. Horn, Angola, Ind., writes:

"I have rode several miles and tried as hard as I knew how to get subscribers, and have got but one. However, I am not in the least discouraged, for I believe it is the Lord's work, and that he is blessing the effort. There is quite a strong Anti-secrecy element here, but it lies partially dormant, like a bed of live coals covered with ashes. I am making the Cynosure (by lending it) poke some of the ashes off. Bro. Wm. Givens lectured at Metz a few months ago and roused the people considerably."

Josiah Shaw, Fall River, Wis., writes:

"I like the Cynosure above all other papers. Shall do what I can to sustain it. Hope we shall have some political candidates and an almanac. . I have taken the Cynosure from the first number and it grows better every year."

Marlin S. Wood, Woodville, N. Y., writes:

"I have had a visit from an old friend. . . He went from here when a boy, settled in Michigan, and has become a substantial farmer, and a deacon in the church. He is a granger. Says he has never examined the subject of secretism. I proposed to him to take your paper and examine the subject for himself. He readily gave me fifty cents, said he would take it three months on trial. . . . I hope to send some more subscriptions soon."

Rev. E. Thomas, Oakland City, Ind., writes:

"I think that I can get some subscribers for you before long. I have done a great deal of talking for the paper. I esteem my Religious Telescope first and the Cynosure next. May the blessing of God rest upon you and our work."

LESSON xlii.—OCT. 25, 1874.—BLIND BATIMEUS.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK x. 46-52. Commit 46-52. Primary verse 51.

46 And they came to Jericho: and as he went out of Jericho with his disciples and a great number of people, blind Bartimeus, the son of Timeus, sat by the highway side begging.

47 And when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, and say, Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

48 And many charged him that he should hold his peace: but he cried the more a great deal, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

49 And Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called. And they called the blind man, saying unto him, Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee.

50 And he, casting away his garment, rose, and came to Jesus.

51 And Jesus answered and said unto him, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? The blind man said unto him, Lord, that I might receive my sight.

52 And Jesus said unto him, Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wonderous things out of thy law."—Ps. cxix. 18.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

What is the first topic? Jericho was seven miles west of the Jordan, and about twenty north-east of Jerusalem. It was very beautiful. What tribe was it in? (Josh. xviii. 21.) By what name was it called? (Deut. xxxiv. 3.) Its Scripture history is very interesting. Who were sent there by Joshua? (Josh. ii.) What next occurred? (Josh. iii.) How was the city taken? (Josh. vi.) Who rebuilt it? (1 Kings xvi. 34.) Who resided there? (2 Kings ii. 18.) It had a school of prophets. It was a rich city, had a large trade in balsam, and had a chief collector of customs. What was his name? (Luke xix. 1.) What kind of a road was between there and Jerusalem? (Luke x. 30.) It was very hilly and rough. What seven things did Jesus forsee? (verses 32-34.)

What is the second topic? Who accompanied Jesus? (verse 46.) They were going up to the passover, and there would be many (see ch. xi. 1, 8-10.) Who did they meet by the wayside? What did he ask? (Luke xviii. 36.) What did they reply? (Luke xviii. 37.) What did he do? (verse 47.) Did they encourage him? (verse 48.) What effect did their words have on him? (verse 48.) Why do you think they opposed him?

What is the third topic? What did Jesus do? (verse 49.) How did the multitude talk then? Quite a change between "hold thy peace," and "be of good comfort." What made the change? What did Bartimeus do? (verse 50.) What kind of clothes do beggars usually have? Would you like such a suit? What is said of our robes in Isa. lxiv. 6? And what in Phil. iii. 9? Suppose he had risen and cast away his robe and no more.

What is the fourth topic? Wonderful meeting—Jesus and a beggar! Repeat the conversation. What did he do? (verse 52.) Did Jesus command him? Which way did the Lord tell him to go? Which way did he go? Why did he follow Jesus?

LESSONS. Jericho to Jerusalem. First topic. Jesus on his way to the cross. The disciples amazed and afraid. Second topic. Jesus stopped by a beggar. "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." He comes near to-day. Third topic. "Be of good comfort." "He calleth thee." Cast away; rise; come. Fourth topic. The first sight for a blind one. Follow in the way.

--Ten rules for teachers: (1.) Pray for inspiration, wisdom and patience. (2. Have confidence in your own convictions—without faith a man cannot be a good teacher. (3) Have a specific object in view. (4.) Respect your pupils. (5.) Obtain the attention and affection of your pupils. (6) Explain your remarks plainly, with plenty of suitable illustrations, (7.) Have proper regard for classification. (8) In deciding before your class in regard to the soundness of a doctrine, decide by Christ's rule, "By their fruits ye shall know them." (9.) Review frequently. (10.) Expect great consequences and results. Cast your bread upon the waters with faith and expect the fruits.

The prime object of the Sunday-school is to build up Christian character, and the teacher who will not promise to work for this object should be rejected, no matter what other qualifications he may have. Success for the Sunday-school teacher lies not in getting up speeches, or telling stories, or working up illustrations, but in honesty, zeal, thought, feeling, activity, earnestness, agreeableness, talent rather than genius. The work may be without pay, but it has great compensations. He who works to make history usually fails, but he who works in the line of duty makes history.—Pres. E. O. Haven.

Labor in the Sabbath-School its own Reward.

A professional man, who had been providentially prevented from meeting his class as usual, bears the following testimony to the value of the Sabbath-school to those who teach. Faithful labor in this department of the vineyard brings its own reward:

I am in haste to be at my post again, I cannot afford, for my own benefit, to go without teaching. It is an invaluable blessing to me; it sharpens my intellect, makes me conversant with moral and intellectual philosophy, which I need to study in order to meet my scholars; and, above all, it gives me a clearer insight into God's truth, quickens my own spiritual life, gives my soul vigor, and I need just this stimulus to invigorate my own inner life.

--How to utilize to the church the work of the Sunday school: (1.) The organization of the Sunday-school should link it to the church by the closest of ties, recognizing the church as the chief agency for saving sinners whether young or old. (2.) The school should be the educator of the church in vital truth, in the doctrines and polity, plans and usages. (3.) The pastor must be recognized as pastor of the school. (4.) Provide for appointment and selection of teachers and officers by church authority concurrent with that of the teachers. (5.) Provide for the education and training of the teachers of the future.—Rev. J. B. Tyler.

Negative Proof Regarding Masonic Antiquity, (Concluded.)

Prof. Robinson was a Mason well acquainted by personal intercourse with the lodges of Germany, France and Russia. He says of the Germans: 'All agreed that Freemasonry had been imported into Germany (p. 11). And again: "It is to be particularly remarked, that all our brethren abroad profess to have received the mystery of Freemasonry from Britain." (P. 26.) And he relates that "the German Masons sent a deputation to Old Aberdeen, Scotland, to inquire after the caves where their venerable mysteries were known, and their treasures were hid. They had, they thought, merited some confidence, for they had remitted annual contributions to their unknown superiors to the amount of some thousands of dollars. But alas! their ambassadors found the Freemasons of Old Aberdeen ignorant of all this, and equally eager to learn from the ambassadors what was the true origin and meaning of Freemasonry, of which they knew nothing but the simple tale of old Hiram." (Prof. Robinson's Poofs, &c., p. 64.)

The Germans, not to be repulsed, and eager to know the true meaning of Freemasonry, sent a second deputation to the British Isle to acquire instruction at London, the birthplace of Masonry. (Vide Proofs of a Conspiracy, p. 58.)

"But the learned Professor is an Anti-mason; he is not to be believed on his oath."

Oath, Sir Knight! Oath? You begin to be very nice about an oath, which is hopeful of one that has drunk from a human skull the libation of eternal death with double damnation in that cup, and "So help me God" on the lips, the Knight Templar's oath. We will fit you exactly. We take up the Essais sur la Franche Maconerie. Par Mons. J. L. Laurens, Paris, 1805. Mr. Laurens was a good Mason, sound in the faith of Freemasonry, and yet a man of sense. He says: "Autant il impossible—impossible as it is to determine the precise era of the establishment of Freemasonry in Europe, autant il est facile—so easy it is to show in what manner and by what means it spread and propagated itself. Many reasons concur to make us believe that the English brought it into Europe; and that they have given it the exterior form and the different names by which we know it at this day. Independent of the historical monuments which prove that long before the fourteenth century it was known in England, it appears indisputable that in that country of Europe it has been furnished, if I may so express myself, with the form in which it has come to us. There is not a doubt that the names Franche-Maconerie and Francs-Macons are purely of English origin. Freemasonry, Freemason, literally rendered into French have produced those strange terms; Franche-Maconerie; Francs-macons; that is to say: Maconerie Libre—Macons Libres, a manner of speaking far enough removed both from our customs and the genius of our language; for it is certain if what we understand by Freemasonry and Freemasons had received in France or in any other country besides England, any name whatever, that name could not have had so characteristic a mark of the English tongue. A slight knowledge of the principal languages of Europe, and especially to know that in English the adjective commonly precedes the noun, is enough in order to become convinced that the names Franche-Maconrie and Francs-Macons have been formed by the genius de la langue anglaise, of the English tongue." (P. 208)

After criticising the Masonic word lodge at some length, he goes on to say: "I might further push the investigation of the terms of English etymology peculiar to Freemasonry, did I not fear to enter upon details which I am not permitted to publish. The usages and practices of the lodges in what concerns only the exterior of Freemasonry, presents some points of resemblance not less striking; and it is this intimate relation with the peculiar character of the English people, that I cite in support of my proposition.

"What is the origin of that wearisome quantity of healths with which the Masonic entertainments were formerly burdened, which have been the occasion of so much sarcasm against Freemasonry, and which a good taste has now wisely reformed? Is not this immoderate use of a custom innocent in itself an image of the too often repeated toast which so much distinguishes English clubs? The love of good cheer, the profusion, the lengthening out of the feast, the intemperate drinking, which are contrary to French sobriety, and which reason and decency have long since banished to the taverns of London, to which they legitimately belong, can these have any relation to the object of Masonic fellowship, of which they are at best only a despicable parody? The grossness of these practices, introduced into France with Freemasonry, is too nearly allied to the taste of the English nation not to be attributed to their invention."

The urbane Frenchman is right: Freemasonry legitimately belongs to the taverns of London, and the songs of the books of constitutions conclude with a toast, as certainly as the fables of Æsop conclude with a moral.

"The world is all in darkness,
"About us they conjecture;
"But little think, a song and drink
"Succeeds the Mason's lecture.

"Chorus. Fill to him, to the brim,
"Let it round the table roll,
"The divine tells you wine Cheers the body and the soul."

"Then Landlord, bring a hogshead,
"And in a corner place it;
"Till it rebound, with hollow sound,
"Each Mason here will face it.

"Chorus. Fill to him, &c.

Toast: "To the memory of him who first planted the vine."

Books of Constitutions of Massachusetts, of New York, of Pennsylvania, and of Maryland each and all contain this song and toast, and this is far from being the most indecent song recorded in these several Books of Constitutions of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodges of those several States. But this so outrages common decency that it will be doubted by men who can never speak of Anti-masonry without blessing Solomon Southwick, and to make their way to truth short, and their self-conviction easy, we quote for their satisfaction the page of the works sanctioned by the Most Worshipfuls aforesaid, which contains the quoted toast and verses. Ahiman Rezon, of the Grand Lodge of New York, page 144. Ahiman Rezon, of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, p. 127. Ahiman Rezon, of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, p. 243. In the Book of Constitutions of Massachusetts we do not mark the page; it will be no more than a light division of the labor for the doubter to perform that task for himself. If faithful, he will find, and leaving him with this encouragement to search for it, we turn back to Mons. Laurens.

"The nature of the customs connected with Freemasonry, its peculiar name, the most of the words that express the matters which make up its exterior form, se lient parfaitement au gout, are precisely conformed to the taste and peculiar genius of the English, and prove that in England it began to have being as a society." (P. 214)

After further argument from the geographical position, free institutions, and melancholy temperament of the English, Mons Laurens adds: "All these observations incline us to believe that it is from England Freemasonry comes to us as it exists now; that is to say, dressed in this whimsical fashion which almost entirely disguises it and scarcely permits us to discover in it the precious allegory of the Egyptian philosophy." (P. 215.) The reader of Morgan's Illustrations of Masonry will agree with the judicious critic that it is indeed most difficult in that jargon to find anything precious; but the allegory of Egypt's philosophy, an owl's eye may see in the baseness of the imposture only. The philosophy which could worship an ox, which could suffer tamely the assault of an invading army, because it marched behind an army of cats and dogs, the gods of Egypt; that philosophy may be seen not dimly in the impious delusions of Freemasonry. It may be doubted whether Egypt in its glory gave birth to any absurdity surpassing the tale of Hiram Abiff, whether Egypt in any age has produced any folly of the brain more utterly unworthy of common sense than the boasted mystery of Freemasonry is unworthy of the light and learning of the nineteenth century, unworthy of the refinement and independence, the religion and good sense of France, England and America.

Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you with all malace. And be ye kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, October 15, 1874.

THE FAST DAY NOVEMBER EIGHTH.

The Sabbath-school lesson for last Sabbath brought distinctly before the minds of thousands of earnest Christians, Christ's memorable words: "This kind can come forth by nothing but by prayer and fasting."

At the Chicago noon prayer-meeting, on Saturday, Rev. Mr. Kittredge, the leader, insisted that Christ's disciples are now as of old to cast out devils from men; and particularly the saloon and liquor men of Chicago.

This is doubtless correct. And when such men as Mr. Kittredge see clearly that the secret orders of this country are outright paganism so demon worship, as all gentile worship is; when they see that the lodge is as much mightier than the saloon, as soul intoxication is more terrible than the intoxication of the body; when they see that the strange oaths, strange worships, and strange gods of these dark and Christ-excluding orders prove them to be worse even than the monkish orders which obliterated Christianity and made the darkness of the dark ages,—will not these brethren join us on the 8th of November fast day, for the "casting out of devils," and the pulling down of these strongest of the strongholds of Satan?

There was some hesitation about putting this fast on the Sabbath. And perhaps it was not the wisest thing. But though the original conception of the Christian Sabbath was that of a joyous day "where the disciples came together to break bread," it seems fitting in this time of abominations over-spreading the church of Christ, that we should hang one Sabbath in sack-cloth; and turn our feasting for one day into mourning over fallen doctrine, decayed morals, loathsome scandals, religious claptraps, Christless, broad-gauge sentimentalism, which is usurping the place of religion with the popular mind.

Will not many earnest Christians, who have not yet seen that the secret Christ-omitting orders are the mothers and shelters of all these abominations, join us in this day of prayer and fasting for the casting out of Satan and the restoring of God's favor to our land?

Every great reform on this earth which has resulted in bringing men into nearer relations to God, has been or attended with fasting. Moses, Elijah and Christ fasted long and prayed earnestly and much, and these fastings gave the world the Law, Prophets, and the Gospel of Christ. Let us follow their footsteps to the Mount.

THE STATE MEETING OF ILLINOIS.

A consultation was held in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association on Saturday last, whose proceedings are given in this number.

Will all readers of the Cynosure who can make it convenient to be in Chicago in one fortnight from last Saturday, attend our adjourned consultation meeting at the same place? Meantime let every possible effort be made to have a large consultation meeting of those who are willing to deny themselves for the redemption of Chicago and State of Illinois from the rule of the secret foe of freedom, of Christianity, and of God.

Mr. Pettengill, of Peoria, President of the State Association, has promised to attend. Prof. C. A. Blanchard, whom all love to hear, has promised an address; and Mr. Deitrich, of Normal, the other principal officer of the State Association, though hurt by a run-away team, will, of course, be present if he can.

The State Association is invited to Chicago. Let the meeting be worthy of the cause, city and State. Come to the Concultation meeting. Watch for the notice of it.

The Lost Grand Master.—If any believe that public opinion is not easily modified by lodge influence, or that this influence is dormant among steady-going Englishmen, the London correspondence of the Evening Journal may undeceive them. The previous notice of Lord Ripon's defection from the order of Freemasons, and the reason given, is confirmed. The resignation of his position was "enforced" in this sense: the rule of the Catholic church against Masonry is of long standing. The Marquis was necessarily well acquainted with it, and he simply took his choice of the two. He seems not to have wholly avoided Masonic obloquy, as the following shows: "If the Marquis of Ripon has not fortified himself by an inexhaustible supply of moral courage, or something else, he must wince under the comments that have been lavishly bestowed upon him by the press since his recent conversion. It is astonishing how readily it is discovered that the man whose intellectual ability had never before been questioned is really one of very small mental calibre. As one of the most distinguished among the English nobility, as an eminent member of the popular government, and as a well-known and influential member of society, heretofore, the papers have been loud in his praise. Suddenly, because he has, and, we are bound to believe, from conscientious motives, seen fit to change his religious faith, he becomes, in the estimation of even his former panegyrists, one of the weakest-minded and most ridiculous of mortals.

I think the secret of this is readily discernible. If he had simply changed his religion, he would have probably been let off easily, and with no other preceptible punishment than the loss of all chance of any future position. People would have thought him weak-minded and foolish, and he would simply have been classed among other English perverts. He would have dropped out of political and social life, and there an end of him. But it was his enforced resignation of the Masonic Grand Mastership that roused the indignation of the public, because it is well-known that he did this in obedience to a direct command from the Papal authorities, and it is sensibly argued that he and all other Roman Catholics in England would not hesitate to obey a similar dictation in political matters."

THE SUBLIMITY OF SHAME.

Masonry is mistress of low farce. The lodge is a stage and the Masons only players. From the letter of application with its fee to the last grand manipulation of the great grand Mogul of the 33d degree the whole system is the broadest, lowest attempt to solemnize the ridiculous. But upon occasion it is transformed to real and horrible tragedy. We only wish to introduce an amusing specimen of Masonic palaver on the necssary solemnity of taking off a man's clothes, or arraying the candidate in regulation costume. The subject is sufficiently disgusting without the attempt to clothe it with respectable raiment; but the Michigan Freemason finds the solemnity of the initiation rudely, jarred if not quite destroyed by lodge "brethren" who cannot restrain their propension to make game of a man who is wiiling to debase himself before his fellows. The man who can submit to the disgraceful preparation for the first degrees and still hold up his head in public, is stunned by the blow on his moral rectitude; but when he openly advocates such shame, drawing on outsiders with fair speeches, it is doubtful if he has any moral rectitude left. Such deception is scarcely concealed in the following article. It furnishes also a remarkable but unintentional proof of the revelations of the lodge:

CHAFFING THE CANDIDATE.

An intelligent man, of earnest and noble character, and of refined and cultivated taste, but recently made a Mason, was asked "what he thought of the ceremonies through which he had passed?" After some hesitation, he replied, with indignant feeling, "The vulgarity of my preparation destroyed the impressiveness and sublimity of the ceremony."

It is to be feared that the preparation room is made, quite too often, the scene of buffoonery and thoughtless chaffing of the candidate, which can have no other effect than that of disgusting, if not of offending, a sensible and self-respecting man. And when this occurs at the very threshold of his Masonic experience, its effect on his Masonic life cannot but be deleterious. All know the strength and durability of first impressions, especially when approaching new and important transactions. What sensible and thoughtful young man or woman can avoid painful thoughts and forebodings, as they meet to proceed to the marriage altar, if either betray, by frivolous speech or conduct, an utter failure to comprehend the serious—nay even solemn—nature of the ceremony in which they are about to engage? What earnest, honest man, about to join a church, would fail to be shocked or to question the reality of religion, if during his preliminary intercourse with the officials of the church, their manner and conduct should be marked by levity and an utter want of seriousness and solemnity?

And just so it will be when a man, whose heart contains the material that makes the true Mason, is treated in the preparation room with disrespect, disgusting familiarity—not to speak of vulgarity.

"Immodest words admit of no defense;
For want of decency is want of sense."

We speak strongly because we feel strongly, and wish to demonstrate the necessity of checking at once an idle custom that (as we hear) is becoming quite too prevalent in some of our lodges—the custom of congregating (besides the proper officials) certain fun-loving brethren around the candidate while he is being prepared for taking the degrees, for the purpose of chaffing him on the experiences he is likely to encounter. It is an offence against good manners as well as good Masonry; and we shall soon see (in the neighborhood where such things are tolerated) that men of sense and men of character, men of self-respect and men of influence— the very men that make good Masons—will rarely manifest love or respect for Masonry.

Coming to our doors entertaining a high regard for the institution, if they are met by frivolity and find themselves, while complying with our requirements, made the butt of ridicule and the subjects of rude, if not vulgar, mirth, their hopeful enthusiasm is chilled by conduct which, it is true, may be but the product of thoughtlessness, but which, (whether thoughtless or designed) is clearly incongruous with the feelings and purposes with which the candidate comes to us. It needs no argument to prove that this is a poor preparation to receive and appreciate the beautiful lessons of the first degree or the sublime teachings of the third.

We seriously and earnestly appeal to all Masons, and especially to all masters of lodges, to frown upon and arrest such practices wherever they prevail. Except the proper officials, no brother should be permitted to witness the preparation of the candidate. He should be politely and quietly informed of what is required, and every look and act, of those who superintend the preparation, should indicate that they feel it to be a serious business. If the candidate's self-respect be not alarmed or offended and his enthusiasm be not chilled by the rude or unseemly manner or language of those having him in charge—in short, if "everything be done decently and in order," he is then indeed prepared to understand our impressive ritual and to appreciate its force and beauty. That impression, once made, can never be lost, however unfortunate his subsequent experience of Masonry may prove to be; and that impression alone may make or mar his whole Masonic life.—Michigan Freemason.

NOTES.

—The Rock River Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church held its annual conference at Sterling, Ill., last week. The case of Rev. N. D. Fanning, pastor of the Independent Anti-masonic church in Marengo was brought up and drew out quite an animated discussion. Bro. Fanning left the pastorate of the Woodstock M. E. church to take charge of the Marengo organization. It was finally announced by the bishop that Mr. Fanning had voluntarily withdrawn from the Methodist church he could no longer be regarded as a minister of that body, and so the case was dropped. It will be a means of grace to the Conference to have such a case to discuss every year.

—Rev. A. Crooks, the beloved agent of the Wesleyan publishing interests, and editor of the Wesleyan, is again very sick. For two years his tour among the conferences has been attended with severe illness. He is now in Iowa among friends who, while they will use all means for his recovery, are anxious lest that condition be long delayed. The Wesleyan says and we join the request: "Before we heard of his sickness in Syracuse, prayers were noticably in unusual numbers, being offered for him. And now they are multiplied. Let prayers and supplications go up to God unitedly everywhere, that he may spare to us and the world still longer, the valuable services, example and precious associations of our dear brother Crooks."

—Last month a body of men with strange freaks in their heads met in Indianapolis. Part of their business was the election of certain officers which are thus recorded: Great Incohonee, G. W. Lindsay, of Maryland; Great Senior Sagamore, Morris Gorham, of Pennsylvania; Junior Sagamore, J. P. H. Wentworth, of California; Great Chief Recorder, Judge Morris, of Delaware; Keeper of Wampum, James Pyle, of Delaware. But for all this outlandish stuff the papers did not look upon them as escaped lunatics. Why? Because they were a secret order.

—The Gentry county, Missouri, politicians have nominated Freemasons for nearly every county office. This was too much of the lodge for the respectable citizens, and a people's mass convention was called last week to make efforts for more reliable officials next year.

—The Washington Chronicle says: "If it will do the Dakota emigrant any good to know that the literal meaning of the Indian word of the Teritory is 'the cut throats' he is welcome to the information. In the sign-language they indicate it themselves by drawing the hand across the throat." Masonry should flourish in that Teritory, and lodges may hopefully send colonies to so propitious a country.

—In the late meeting of the Good Templar Grand Lodge in Wisconsin a considerable discussion arose over a proposition to amend the ritual so as to omit from it the questions asked a candidate regarding belief in Almighty God. So long as a religious formula is retained for the worship of an indiscriminate gathering of religious and irreligious persons, the question of candidate's views is secondary. The rituals of all the secret orders are made as much for one as the other class; they have no regard for the act of faith or the manner of approach to God which he has commanded. Such worship is not therefore paid to him but to devils.

—The Freemasons are undertaking the relic business, after the manner of Rome. The papers say that the Masonic lodge at Edenton, N. C., claims to possess the chair which George Washington occupied when he was Worshipful Master. But as Washington never accepted the position of "Worshipful Master," the particular value of such furniture doth not appear.

—Not long since a Catholic and Freemason, named Hickey, died in Terre Haute, Ind. Before death he sent for his priest to give absolution. The father came, but first asked Hickey to renounce the lodge. He declined, and the priest withheld the last rites of his chuch and would not allow the burial in charge of the Masons to be manœuvered in the Catholic cemetery. When will Protestant pastors act conscientiously as did this priest on the order of his bishop?

—The Anti-Masonic Christian Herald says that Mr. George McGonigle, a member of the Sixth U. P. Church, Cincinnati, was tried before a session of that church lately, charged with belonging to a secret society known as the Freemasons. Mr. McGonigle was found guilty, and suspended from church membership for an indefinite period. The report that some thirty or forty more Freemasons belong to this church seems improbable, if such action could be taken.

—Intimate acquaintance with the follies and superstitions of secrecy has a peculiar effect sometimes on the religious emotions. Max Wasch, of New York Lodge, No. 1, order of B'nai B'rith, is an antiquarian of his fraternity. He is so well versed in the laws of the order that he has won for himself the sobriquet of a "walking constitution." It is said of him that for one whole year, instead of his morning prayers, he repeated the constitution and by-laws. But prayers of any kind, or no prayers at all, make no difference with the presiding divinity of the lodge.

—News from New Orleans is far from representing a peaceful community although United States bayonets and gunboats enforce quiet. But the White Leagues are busy and their desperate secret plottings may yet bloom in blood. A dispatch says:

"The surrender of the Penn faction did not by any means end the game of the White League in New Orleans. On the night of September 30th, a secret organization known as 'The Hive,' which may be discribed as an association of the creme de la creme of the White League, held a meeting, adopted a platform, and nominated a mayor and other municipal officers. Among the various principles declared at the meeting was the following, which is the first plank in the 'Hive' platform: 'Repudiation of the whole of the so-called debt of the State of Louisiana and refusal to vote for any tax to pay the principle or interest of the same."

—The prohibition candidate for Govornor of New York is Myron H. Clark, Canadaigua. The Anti-masons of the State wanted to know his secret society standing, and the Wesleyan secured the following reply to a letter sent to that place with the inquiry:

"I called on ex.-Govornor Clark to-day, and read to him your letter of inquiry in regard to his being a Mason; his answer was that he never was a Mason, and that the first vote that he ever cast was an Anti-masonic vote, after the abduction of Morgan. He also said that some time since he saw that there was nothing being done in the temperance cause, and he was induced to join the Sons of Temperance, but that he thought them to be of little importance, and that he had paid very little attention to them of late, and was opposed to the principles of secret societies. I have been personally acquainted with Govornor Clark for more than thirty years, and have no doubt that he may be relied on in all these reforms."

—A correspondent, a young man in love, applied lately to the editor of the Fireside Companion for advice on a question vital to his happiness. The object of his affections would consent to marriage only when he would promise never to join a secret society. This he hesitated to make, and in his trouble sought soothing council, and got the following:

"We think it worth answering, and especially because it involves a most important question, as bearing upon the happiness of women, the security of men's characters, and the prosperity of home life. We commend the position of this young lady, and could wish that all her sisters would follow her example. Secret societies have done infinitely more harm than good, and in such a country as ours, there is not a shadow of excuse for them, as a rule. Clubs, secret associations, etc., women, alas! too well know, are the rivals of their love, and too often destroy all the happiness of home, alienating the husband entirely away from his own wife and family. If you cannot choose between her and such societies, it shows you do not love her as you ought, and that you are unworthy of her love. Our advice is that you make the promise, and stand by it like a man."

Call for the Illinois State Convention.

There will be a Convention of the Illinois State Association of Christians opposed to Secret Societies, held in Chicago, commencing November 18th, and continuing through the following day and evening.

The following are among the topics to be considered:

The principles which underlie the Anti-masonic reform.

What position should Evangelical Christianity sustain towards Freemasonry and kindred soceities.

Are Masonic oaths binding?

Is it the duty of Masons who recognize that Freemasonry is anti-Christian and anti-republican, to renounce the order?

The Grange, its relation to American principles, Freemasonry and politics.

An address showing how a man is made a Mason.

Pres. S. B. Allen, Rev. N. D. Fanning, Elder P. Hurless, and Professor C. A. Blanchard, have promised to address the meeting. Presidents J. Blanchard, and J. B. Walker, Rev. L. A. Hart, Rev. H. H. Hinman, Rev. L. Taylor, and other gentlemen are expected to participate in the discussions.

Honest men and women from every county in the State are cordially invited to attend; or, if this is impracticable, to unite in sending a delegate to represent them.

C. A. Blanchard, Sec'y
Illinois State Association.

We hope that every loyal man and woman who reads or hears of the above announcement of the Convention of the Illinois State Association November 18th and 19th will take measures to be present at the Convention or to be represented there. We hope at least two-thirds of the counties of the State will be represented there.

The roll will be made out by counties. Will your's be represented? We think Chicago will entertain all who come who have not friends in the city with whom they wish to stop.

Please write if you expect to be present and have no place engaged at which to stay during the Convention and arrangements will be made for your entertainment before hand.

Arrangements for the Illinois State Convention.

Our readers will recollect the notice published last week calling for a meeting of National Executive Committee and of all friends of the reform in this city on Saturday last. In accordance with that notice there was a respectable gathering in the prayer-meeting room of the Young Men's Christian Asscciation. President Blanchard called the meeting to order and requested Rev. M. L. Vorheis and Isaac Preston to lead in prayer. Rev. J. W. Bain, of the Memorial United Presbyterian church, wished to explain that from misunderstanding the time of the meeting he had made appointments which would prevent his remaining long in the meeting. He was in full sympathy with the work and would indorse what might be done.

Pres. Blanchard remarked on the nature of the present meeting and gave an outline history of the reform in its organized capacity, and especially what had been done in Chicago. At his request correspondence from different parts of the State was read advising in regard to a State Convention. The meeting was called to advise, and if best, extend an invitation to the State Association to meet in Chicago.

Mr. Isaac Preston, of Lockport, was chosen to preside and H. L. Kellogg, secretary.

E. A. Cook moved that the State Association be invited to meet in Chicago. This resolution was fully discussed by Rev. A. Wait, Thomas Hodge, W. W. Clark, Philo Charpenter, W. I. Phillips, Rev. J. G. Terrill, Prof. Lumry, Isaac Preston, Pres. Blanchard, and Mrs. M. E. Cook, and was adopted. The time for holding the meeting was fixed for the 18th and 19th of November next. Messrs. Carpenter, Cook, Hagerty, Kellogg and Bundy were chosen as committee of arrangements.

The thanks of the meeting were voted to the Young Men's Christian Association for the use of their rooms, and it was voted to meet again in two weeks for further consultation, in the same place if the room can be secured.

A request for those present to say how many delegates they would endeavor to entertain during the Convention was responded to by a promise of places for fifty-six.

After prayer by Rev. J. G. Terrill the meeting adjourned.

The Home Circle.

Autumn Leaves.

Undimmed upon the meadows yet
The summer greenness lies,
And sunny splendors of the noon
Fill all the glowing skies.

Along the dusty wayside bloom
The aster's cloudy stars,
And hosts of plumy golden-rod
Nod through the orchard-bars.

The brook creeps on its silent way
Through beds of fragrant mint,
And ferny dells and hallows keep
Their tender emerald tint.

Yet, morn or eve, no song of bird
Across the stillness floats,
Only the whisper of the wind,
And cricket's mournful notes.

Come down the wood-paths, where the sun
Breaks through the arching trees,
And see what robes of glory wave
Like banners in the breeze.

The clustering maples on the hill
In kingly garments shine,
The rosy hues of morning mixed
With sunset's golden wine.

Gather them up, from field and wood,
Each gleaming, jewelled spray;
Ripe with the ripening of the year,
That steals in light away.

Why Do You Use Tobacco?

BY REV. C. G. FINNEY.

The practice of using tobacco is very general even among professing Christians. Have they any good reason for it?

Now, my brother, my sister, if you are in the habit of using tobacco in any way, will you consider yourself as personally addressed by me upon this subject? Please to consider what I now write as written expressly to and for you.

Why do you use tobacco?

In my last letter I showed that everything is sin in a moral agent, whether he considers it as such or not, for which he has not in his mind a good, that is, a benevolent reason; unless in his honest view it is demanded by the great law of love to God and man.

My brother, what reason may I suppose you to have for this practice? In many instances when I have spoken to professed Christians and others on the subject of their using tobacco they have promptly replied, I do not consider it sinful. Now, the question is not whether you so consider it, but whether it is sinful in fact. Sin is self-indulgence, and that too whether the sinfulness of self-indulgence is considered or not. Suppose I ask you in reply, do you consider the use of tobacco a solemn duty you owe to God and your neighbor? You are a moral agent; whatever you do intelligently must have some moral character. It must be either sinful or holy. It must be done for God, or for the gratification of self. Do you consider it as a duty you owe to God and your neighbor, and do you do it for the sake of promoting the honor of God and the good of the world? Do you think that God would be displeased with you if you should neglect it? If you do not do it as a work of love to God and your neighbor; if you do not act from a regard to the highest good of being in such sense as to have the solemn conviction upon your mind that it would be sin and displeasing to God for you to neglect it, you sin in using it. Remember this, my brother! You can not but be aware that tobacco is one of the most virulent and destructive poisons that exist in the whole vegetable kingdom. Do you think it a solemn duty to take poison habitually?

Do you think it your duty to promote by your own example the practice of using tobacco? If you are a Christian you not only ought, but you actually do live for the good of the world. Now do you think the use of tobacco to be so important to the rising generation as to feel called upon to use all the influence you possess to extend and perpetuate its use and to render its use universal among men?

Do you desire to live and to die and go down to the grave with the reflection that you have exerted the highest influence in your power to entail this practice upon all future generations? Do you think that future generations will rise up and call you blessed should they read on your tombstone, "Here lies a man who lived and died in the use of tobacco, and did what he could to entail its use upon all future generations?" Will they say of you, "Blessed man, how much the world is indebted to him for his self-denying labor of love in doing so much by his self-denying use of tobaccoo to entail this most blessed and indispensable practice upon all generations?"—The Wayside.

Rev. John Eliot and the Indians. 1631.

Sacred associations! I am in the midst of the scenes in the life of the Apostle to the Indians. Just below me, at Nonantum, now Newton, Mass., is the grand old oak, under which he used to preach to the red man. A mile south, at Natick, is his granite monument, with the open Bible on one side and his name opposite; also, by the roadside, is a plain stone marking the grave of Takawambait, his interpreter.

At my feet lies lake Wabau, named for his first convert, who was awakened by his first sermon, and continued an earnest Christian to the end—the lake upon whose shore Mr. Durant is now erecting a magnificent building for the education of women.

Fifteen years Rev. Mr. Eliot studied, often traveling among the Indians, sleeping in their wigwams, and partaking of their cracked hominy, to learn their language—a language containing many words of twenty or more syllables, reaching across an ordinary page.

Having become master of the language, he reduced it to writing, and employed the first type and press used in America to print it, aided by the Scotch Society for the Propogation of the Gospel.

The language has long since ceased to be used, by the dying out of the tribe; but the Bible remains, a monument of Mr. Eliot's unconquerable energy and perseverance.

He arrived in Boston in 1631, eleven years after the May-Flower, and continued his labors to a good old age, gathering a church of some fifty children of the forest, many of whom gave striking proof of the Gospel's saving power.

The wars of King Philip scattered the Christian settlement and suspended his labors; but after Philip's death he gathered them again, and taught them while he lived; but he died in 1790, and they dwindled and passed away, till only a single individual remains, with scarce a trace of Indian blood in her fair face. She recently united with the Eliot church in South Natick. It is sad to look upon these memorials of extinct tribes and churches, and the query arises, "Shall the present dominant race, in like manner provoke God to leave them to perish?" It will not be by solid walls, or lofty battlements, or consummate arts and industries, but by the fear of God, and the devout acknowledgment of his preserving care, that they shall be perpetual.—American Messenger.

Keeping up Appearances.

Extravagance is the rock on which society is going to pieces. Let us face the danger before it is too late to aver it. Single people shrink from marriage bacause they see married people are living in a perpetual whirl of bills and competition and social hypocrisy. An air of common deception hangs around all our houses. We are afraid to be poor. On one thousand a year, how shall we keep up the appearance of three thousand? That is the standing social problem. In such a case, luxury in the parlor necessitates meanness somewhere else. Our lace curtains tell dreadful lies. Let us have a reform and come down to a specie basis. The well-to-do people ornament their houses with mortgages. The poor run bills. High pressure marks all life from the cottage to the mansion, and in three directions it is ruinous.

It is financial ruin.

Any man who puts a dollar into appearances is on the way to sink a fortune in the same miry slough. Living costs about twice what it ought, fully twice in America what it does in Europe. There is no reason for it. This is a land of grain and fruits, and abundant work. The man who spends two thousand a year could live on one thousand and be happier. Perhaps not indeed by himself. The social level needs to sink from extravagance to thrifty economy. If this is the way out of national trouble, it is doubly the way out of family worries. Be brave enough to decline appearances. Be honest straight through your domestic arrangements, though the two-story must yield to the cottage, and the pudding to cornmeal.

It is mental ruin.

The money that is spent on horses and dress and table unnecessaries would fill all our homes with books. The expensive furniture would be well replaced by pictures, to be a constant refining and enlightening influence. The money it costs many a family of moderate means to keep up four weeks of appearances at the sea shore, would fill their house with treasures of knowledge and art. Instead of that the glorious month at Long Branch is followed by eleven months of scrimping in the kitchen and general meanness all around.

It is moral ruin.

People cannot systematically deceive without moral penalty even though the lies are velvet and silken. The penalty comes in the loss of self-respect. The man who mortgages his property to keep up the family style thereby mortages his name to the devil. Instead of studying moral philosophy to find the causes of general social disorder—loosening of home bonds and lowering of purity—let us come down to an honest way of living. Let us make our carpets and our table and our clothes tell the truth, and then perhaps our children will. A blight will surely fall on all our social life unless we recover ourselves from that great American vice—truckling—and live honestly before men. The seeds of hypocrisy are in the heart of every child that goes out from a household whose life is a sham. In vain we preach honesty and sincerity from the pulpit, so long as the life from the pulpit wood to the home-management is all a pretense. Society, you must come down and dare to appear what you are.—Interior.

Want of True Wisdom.

A man may know all about the rocks, and his heart remain as hard as granite and adamant; he may know all about the winds, their courses and their currents, and be the sport of passions as turbulent and fierce as they; he may know all about the stars, and his fate be the meteor's, that blazes for a little while, and is then lost, quenched in eternal night; he may know all about the sea, and be a stranger to the peace of God; his soul may resemble its troubled waters which, lashed by storms and ruffled by every breath of wind, can not rest, but throws up mire and dirt; he may know how to rule the spirits of the elements and not know how to rule his own; he may know how to turn aside the deadly thunderbolt, but not the wrath of an angry God; you may know all, in short, that man's genius has discovered, or his skill invented, but if you do not know Jesus Christ, if your eyes have never been opened to a saving knowledge of the truth, what will that avail you when they are fixed in their sockets, glazed by the hand of death? Equally by the death-bed of the greatest philosopher, as of the hardest miser that ever ground the faces of the poor, there is room and reason for the solemn question, What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world—all its learning, its wealth, its pleasures, and honors—and lose his ownsoul?—Dr. Giuther.

FUTURE GLORY OF THE CHURCH.—Now there shall be oneness of judgment and understanding in the hearts of all saints; they shall be no more two, but one in the Lord's hand. Alas, the saints are yet but as an army routed, and are apt, sometimes through fear and sometimes through forgetfulness, to mistake the word of their Captain-general, the Son of God; and are also, too, too prone to shoot and kill their right hand man. But at that day all such doing shall be laid aside, for the knowledge of the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea; which knowledge shall then strike through the heart and liver of all swerving and unsouud opinions in Christ's matters; then shall every one of the Christians call upon the name of the Lord, and that with one pure lip, or language, to serve him with one consent.—Bunyan.

About Reading.

Thomas Carlyle gives the following good advice, about reading for self-improvement, in a letter to a friend:

It would give me true satisfaction, could any advice of mine contribute to forward you in your honorable course of self-improvement; but a long experience has taught me that advice can profit but little; that there is a good reason why "advice is so seldom followed"—this reason, namely, that it is so seldom, and can almost never be, rightly given. No man knows the state of another; it is always to some more or less imaginary man that the wisest and most honest adviser is speaking.

As to the books which you, whom I know so little of, should read, there is hardly anything definite that can be said. For one thing, you may be strenuously advised to keep reading. Any good book, any book that is wiser than yourself, will teach you something—a great many things, indirectly and directly, if your mind be opened to learn. The old counsel of Johnson's is also good and universally applicable: Read the book you do honestly feel a wish and curiosity to read. The very wish and curiosity indicates that you then and there are the person likely to get good of it. "Our wishes are presentments of our capabilities;" that is a noble saying, of deep encouragement to all true men; applicable to our wishes and efforts in regard to reading, as to other things. Among all the objects that look wonderful or beautiful to you, follow with fresh hope the one that looks wonderfulest, beautifulest. You will gradually by various trials (which trials see that you make honest, manful ones, not silly, short, fitful ones) discover what is for you the wonderfulest, beautifulest; what is your true element and province, and be able to abide by that. True Desire, the monition of Nature, is much to be attended to. But here also you are to discriminate carefully between true desire and false. The medical men tell us we should eat what we truly have an appetite for; but what we only falsely have an appetite for, we should resolutely avoid. It is very true. And flimsy, "desultory" readers, who fly from foolish book to foolish book, and get good of none, and mischief of all—are not these as foolish, unhealthy eaters, who mistake their superficial, false desire after spiceries and confectionaries for the real appetite, of which even they are not destitute, though it lies far deeper, far quieter, after solid nutritive food. With these illustrations I will recommend Johnson's advice to you.

Another thing, and only one other, I will say. All books are properly the record of the history of past men. What thoughts past men had in them; what actions past men did; the summary of all books whatsoever lies there. It is on this ground that the class of books specifically named History can be safely recommended as the basis of all study of books; the preliminary to all right and full understanding of anything we can expect to find in books. Past History, and especially the past history of one's own native country—everybody may be advised to begin with that. Let him study that faithfully, innumerable inquiries, with due indications, will branch out from it; he has a broad beaten highway from which all the country is more or less visible—there traveling, let him choose where he will dwell.

Neither let mistakes nor wrong directions, of which every man, in his studies and elsewhere, falls into many, discourage you. There is precious instruction to be got by finding that we were wrong. Let a man try faithfully, manfully to be right; he will grow daily more and more right. It is at bottom the condition on which all men have to cultivate themselves. Our very walking is an incessant falling; a falling and a catching of ourselves before we come actually to the pavement! It is emblematic of all things a man does.

In conclusion, I will remind you that it is not by books alone, or by books chiefly, that a man becomes in all points a man. Study to do faithfully whatsoever thing in your actual situation, there and now, you find either expressly or tactily laid to your charge—that is your post; stand in it like a true soldier; silently devour the many chagrins of it, as all human situations have many; and be your aim not to quit it without doing all that it, at least, required of you. A man perfects himself by work much more than by reading. They are a growing kind of men that can wisely combine the two things; wisely, valiantly, can do what is laid to their hand in their present sphere, and prepare themselves withal for doing other wider things, if such lie before them.

The ruin of multitudes has begun with desecration of the Sabbath. They were in the sanctuary but a part of the day—then not at all—then read novels and political papers at home—then rode out, or spent the day in some saloon or refectory in company with the unprincipled and dissipated—then drank, gamed and reveled—then leaped over the bounds of honesty, defrauded or stole—and then—but you know the rest. And this is the downward career of thousands—these steady steps by which they descend from virtue, respectability and comfort to corruption, disgrace and degradation. "But for the violation of the Sabbath," confessed the pirate Gibbs, "I might have been a good and happy man."

Discipline is more needed by men than are dignities.

A Talk on Punctuation.

Some wise man who had a great deal of trouble with his commas and semicolons and periods, once suggested that it would be a good thing and a saving of time, trouble and temper, to write his letter or manuscript without punctuating it at all, and then, at the close, to put in a quantity of marks of all kinds, and let the reader help himself to them. Another wise idea was to write the letter as before, and then sprinkle over it the required number of marks, letting them stick wherever they happen to fall. Judging from editorial experience we should say that the latter idea is the favorite one exexpt, indeed, when the writer happens to leave out the sprinkling entirely, which is by no means uncommon.

It seems to us that there is no branch of literary education more important than that concerning these little pauses, for all the sense of a paragraph depends upon their right use. And yet there is none more neglected. How many children, do you suppose, from ten to fourteen years old, could take an unpunctuated page and put in all the pauses correctly? How many could write a page of manuscript and do the same? And how many from fourteen on to twenty could perform the same feat, even after they had studied Greek and Latin, and mastered the higher mathematics? They are such little things, compared to words, that most people seem to think they are of small account, and not worth wasting their time upon. But if they were compelled to read and make sense of a few unpunctuated pages in a book, they would change their opinion very soon.

Serious consequenses sometimes follow from the ignorant or careless use of these little marks. Not long ago one of our exchanges told of the loss by the government of $2,000,000 revenue, by a mistake in engrossing the revenue law, putting a comma in the place of a hyphen, thus changing fruit-plants into fruits, plants. Such important errors as that do not often occur, it is true, but that they are liable to sometimes shows how necessary it is that everybody should know when and where to put in the marks. The school books give all required rules upon the subject, but practice is quite as necessary as precept; and one should never write a sentence at any time without giving it the finishing touches of a correct punctuation. And above all things don't imagine that a dash stands for every other mark. We have read manuscripts that were actually punctuated with dashes and nothing else. If a comma was wanted, in went a dash; if a semicolon, it was a dash; if a colon, a dash; if a period, still it was a dash. They did duty for exclamation and interrogation points, for parentheses and brackets and hyphens, and even for quotation marks. They were thrown in at the beginning, middle and end of a sentence. The paper looked as if it had been raining dashes; and is it any wonder that a finishing dash into the waste-basket was added? We shall find that if we treat these bits of marks with proper attention and respect they will help us wonderfully in saying what we have to say on paper.—Advance.

Stolen Property.

"I know all about Sadie's birth-day party, for all she tried to keep it such a secret," said Lotta Mills, with a look of triumph.

"How did you find out?" I asked.

"Why you see, Josie and I were reading a story under the elm tree this noon, and Sadie came and sat in the window with Carry Richards, and they talked it all over, and we heard every word. She's going to have—"

"Stop! stop! do you suppose I want to share any stolen property?"

"Stolen property, aunty! Why, we didn't listen—we couldn't help hearing, she talked right out loud."

"That's very true; but she didn't know you were there. So you have no right at all to her secret. A listener is like a pick-pocket who creeps up and steals your secrets slyly; and you are like a person who sees another drop a purse in the street and picks it up. If you took the money and used it when you knew it was not yours, would you be any more honest than if you had taken it right out of a man's pocket?"

"Why, no, aunty; of course I should give it back."

"Or if you could not give it back at once, you would keep it safely till you could. That is just what you should do with secrets when people drop them accidentally, and you pick them up. You have no more business to use them than you have to use money which you got in the same way."

"I believe that is so, aunty; and I won't say a word about that party to any one."—Child's World.

Home Encylopedia.—Some one selects an object, any common one whatever, and questions the others. Take, for illustration, the lamp. See what a lot of questions may come out of this. What is the lamp made of? What is brass? What is zinc? Where does it come from? In what shape is it found? What color? Does it melt easily or not? What is it used for besides making brass? So the same series, or a longer, of questions about copper. The base of the lamp has lead run into it to make it heavy, and a whole lot more can be learned about that. Then the chimney and shade are glass, and probably but very few can tell much about so common a thing as that. The wick,—that is of cotton; what part of the plant? Where is it growr, and all about it? Why is the wick made hollow, in a form of a cylinder? Then the oil,—there is quite a story about that. Here is a single article in the room that would keep a lot of bright boys and girls profitably at work a whole evening. Such a looking up of dictionaries and other books before some of the questions could be properly answered! And no doubt some of the older people would find themselves at their "wit's end" to answer all the questions that could be put.

Religious Intelligence.

—The General Conference of the Free Methodist church meets at Albion, N. Y., on the 15th of October.

—It is asserted on good authority that there is not, in all the State of Texas, a single Unitarian or Universalist church edifice or church organization.

—Prof. Swing, whose trial last spring caused such disturbance in Presbyterian circles, has at length sent in a request to withdraw from the Prebsbytery.

—The Rev. Robert Bruce, of the Church Missionary Society, has a school of 150 boys, including six Mohammedans, in Ispahan, Persia, all studying Scripture in the midst of a Mohammedan land.

—The Board of Foreign Missions of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States report that up to August 10, the receipts of the treasurer were $90,476, a falling off of $17,651 from the income last year for the corresponding period.

—There is in India a large class known as Borderers. They are those who have cut loose from Hinduism, but have not openly become Christians. According to the confession of one of them, they are like the vast multitude of those in Christian lands, "in the valley of indecision."

—Full statistics have been published of the results of the labors of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Glasgow. Between the beginning of the year and May, services were held in 316 congregations in the city and surrounding country. The number of converts was 3,133, of whom 1,070 were men and boys.

—The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will send out the following named lady missionaries in October: Miss Mason, as medical missionary to Kiukiang; Miss Trask, as medical missionary, to Foochow, and Miss Schoonmaker, as missionry to Japan. They will sail from San Francisco.

—Bishop Harris, in his address to the British Conference, presented some of the difficulties of missionaries in Germany which will be news to us at home. "In Saxony the preacher is allowed to preach, but only to those who are members. No one must be present who is not. In Wurtemberg they will allow the minister to preach, but they will not allow him to sing and pray. So the members of the church have their singing and prayer, and he awaits outside and listens, and then comes in and preaches to them."

—October 24th and 26th are the days fixed upon this year by the London Union for universal prayer for the Sabbath-schools. This anniversary has been observed in England for several years, and is annually becoming more generally observed throughout Christendom. The topics for intercession include prayer by teachers for God's blessing on their labors; prayer by parents for their children; special prayer-meetings for the Sabbath-school, and appropriate addresses in the churches and schools.

—The mission year of Baptists is indicated by the following figures: Number of American Baptist missionaries, 134; number of native preachers and helpers, 2,000; number of mission Baptist churches, 720; number of mission church members, 55,000; receipts of the Mission Union last year, $261,530.91. Seventeen newly appointed missionaries will sail within two months for the fields in Asia; of these, five are young men, recently graduated, with their wives—three are unmarried young men, and four unmarried young women.

Brother Moody conducted a glorious 'Christian Convention' at Inverness, last week, at which the Highland churches were well represented. He there delivered his pathetic farewell to Scotland, amid bursting tears and sobs from the whole crowded assemblage. The gifted preacher goes—but the holy work and its fruits abide. In Glasgow the Christian fire burns brightly. Every night Ewing Place church is thronged by a thousand souls at a revival meeting. The noon-day prayer-meetings are full. What is true of Glasgow is true of Edinburgh, Dundee, Aberdeen, and every large town which our two countrymen have labored in; the work is as pure as the Gospel, and as solid as the Scotch granite.

—A correspondent of the Western Rural writes thus sensibly on national calamities: While drouth and floods, uncommon heat, thunder and lightning, and an army of insects of various kinds, are cutting short the lives and hopes of the American people, please read the following chapters from the precious Bible and see all our troubles explained:—28 Deut. 15; 4 Amos., 6 to 10; 23 Matt. 34 to 39; 4 John, 21 to 24; 22 Rev., 14 to 21. Much more might be quoted, but this is enough to account for all our calamities. Shall we turn to God and serve him, or wait to be chastised seven times for our sins? It looks hard for innocent and guilty to suffer together, but such must be the case in national sins. "Turn ye and live."

—In the late Congregational Council at New Haven, D. B. Coe, Secretary of the Home Missionary Society, read a paper on "Christian Charity between Denominations in the Home Field," after which the Secretary's statement report was presented. The following are some of the more significant figures: The total of churches has increased 204 in three years, 413 have been organized, and 209 have been dropped from the list; net gain in church members, 17,161, or 5,720 per year, as against an average increase for fifteen years of 6,554; additions by profession, 40,452 increase of 1874's benevolent contributions (imperfectly reported) over 1871's, $259,260.24; total contributions for 1873, $1,213,816, of which $856,833.19 came from New England; theological seminaries, 7; professors in 1871, 32; 1874, 25; lecturers in 1871, 11; 1874, 16; students in 1871, 272; 1874, 327; churches in New England, 1,451; in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, 350; in Ohio and to the Mississippi, 858; between the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains, 552; in Pacific States, 75; in the South, not including Missouri, 54.

—Rev, T. L. Cuyler of New York, has lately written from England of Mr. Moody and his evangelistic work. He says: "He will not return to America until the 'cloud' of divine direction clearly moves thither. He goes to Ireland to-night—preaches in Belfast next Sabbath—and from Ireland expects to move on London in the later autumn. Everything is being made ready for him in that great busy Babylon. If he gets London well on fire, the flame may kindle over all England.

What a joyous three hours we have had to-day in talk and prayer together. Brother Moody is the same simple-hearted, earnest man as when he gathered his first mission class in Chicago; not a bit spoiled by his unexampled popularity. Last week when he preached in the old Presbyterian cathedral of Dornoch, the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland invited him, after service, to their splendid Castle of Dunrobin. Brother Moody dined and lodged at the castle, as the guest of the nobleman who stands nearest to the royal family of any Duke in Great Britain! There are hundreds of our American millionaires who would give a thousand pounds for the honor bestowed on an humble minded evangelist whose life-work to preach 'Jesus only.'

News of the Week.

The City.

The Ladies' Temperance organization of Chicago have elected Miss Willard, late of Evanston Female Seminary, as their president for the coming year. She will devote her time to the advancement of the work, and is well known as an able speaker.——The National Convention of the Catholic Total abstinence societies was held last week. These societies number some 400, with a membership of 60,000. The Pope sent them his blessing.——The political organization known as the Peoples' party, whose headquarters are in Chicago, and which elected the present rulers of the city, held their nominating conventions on Monday of last week. The managers of the party led by A. C. Hessing, were dissatisfied with the nominations, and on Wednesday last held a meeting and sent word to all the legislative candidates that their resiggations would be acceptable, and if any withheld such declaration until Oct. 12th, he would be considered off the ticket anyway. This party is organizing under the name of Opposition party throughout Illinois and Indiana, with the avowed intention to break down and repeal the temperance and Sunday laws.

The Country.

On Monday the 5th, eight Texan steers were landed in New York from an Erie ferry boat at 8 o'clock in the evening. Maddened by starvation and thirst, they became uncontrollable. Eluding their drovers, and frenzied by the whoops and yells of hoodlums and shrieks of terrified men, women and children, they tore up Chamber street, running over women and children. A platoon of officers from the Leonord street police formed a barricade across West Broadway, at Hudson street, and from behind this minature fortress they sent a hail storm of bullets. But the wild animals scaled this and dashed on up the street, creating immense excitment and hooking or goring some unfortunate person at every turn. After running about for some time, with all the police in the west side at their heels, shooting at them, they were all eventually killed. More than twenty persons were injured by these beasts, some of them it is thought fatally.——The new Post-Office in New York is to be opened for business on January 1st, next. With the exception of the Capitol at Washington, this is thought to be the finest public building in the country.——The General Congress of the Episcopal church of the United States opened Tuesday, the 6th, in Calvary Church, New York, Bishop Whipple administered the communion.———The meeting of the American Board of Foreign Missions met last week in Rutland, Vt.——As a result of the Beecher business there are now thirteen suits pending as follows: 1. The suit by Tilton against Beecher for $100,000 damages; 2, 3 and 4. Suits by Tilton against the Brooklyn Eagle, New York World and Tribune for $100,000 each; 5, 6 and 7. The three suits of Henry C. Bowen against a reporter of the last named paper,—the four involving $350,000; 9 and 10. Miss Proctor's suit against Moulton for libel; 12 and 13. The two suits of Beecher against Tilton and Moulton. There are also rumors of Bowen against Demas Barnes.

The South.

Ku-Kluxism has again shown itself near Dennison, Texas. Several Citizens of Montague county were forced to leave their homes by a party of masked men. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of the leader.——A Nashville dispatch gives the substance of a letter from Dyer county, Tenn., which says Adam Shaw, a negro, was stopped on the road near Quincy, a day or two since by Isaac Clevinger and John Price, whites. While one held a pistol to his head the other whipped him unmercifully and without provocation. Both have been arrested. Price gave bonds. Clevinger escaped from his guard, and was fired at, but not hurt. Simlar outrages have been reported from other parts. The State press, however, being generally Democratic, will not give publicity to these outrages, especially where whites are the aggressors.——It is feared that the White Leagues of Louisiana will undertake another revolution before election, but so secret are their operations that little is known of their places.——A dispatch of the 11th says that Gov. Kellogg is still guarded by U. S. troops in the Custom-House at New Orleans, and the White Leagues are defiant and continue their demonstrations nightly. Fifteen thousand negroes are reported to have entered the northern courts of Louisana from adjoining States to register as voters. Many of the colored men of the State have issued an address leaning toward the Conservative party and complaining of Kellogg and his friends.

Foreign.

Advices from the sections of India, where the famine prevailed, state that 600,000 natives are yet supported by the Government relief works. It is expected that the Government expenditures on account of the famine will cease on the 15th inst. These expenditures will be below the estimate. Favorable rains continue.——Returns from eighty departments show that 1,300 members of the French Councils General have been elected, of whom 990 are Republicans, 560 Monarchists, and 130 avowed Bonapartists. New elections will be required in thirty districts, of which twenty are expected to elect Republican candidates. One result, as at present stated, shows a Conservative gain.——Advices from Buenos Ayres state there is the greatest excitment among all classes in consequence of an insurrection in the Argentine Republic. Many persons are flying from the city. Every departing steamer carries away numerous families. All merchant steamers leaving the town are escorted to sea by the war ships of their respective governments, as they fear molestation by the insurgent fleet.——The arrest of Count Van Arnim by the German government is creating considerable excitment. He has in his possession valuable documents which have some relation to French negotiations which the Government claims as its property. He has been imprisoned and his residence thoroughly but vainly searched, also that of his son. The Count has been promised his release on returning the letters sent to him by Bismarck which he (Von Arnim) was Ambassador of Paris. Meanwhile the Count has refused to accept bail. It is learned that the arrest of Count Von Armin was affected without the knowledge or sanction of the Emperor, he, however, approves the arrest.——The Catholic Vicar of Posen, Germany, having disobeyed an order to leave the Province within twelve hours, has been forcibly ejected. The Tribunal at Treves has decided to release Bishop Eberhard, and remit his fine. It is uncertain whether the Bishop will be discharged, or the public prosecutor will appeal to a higher court.——News comes from Bayonne and Santander, of a report that Don Carlos has been seriously wounded in the stomach by a ball fired by the Carlist mutineers at Durango. Dispatches from the North of Spain contain rumors of a disruption of Carlist leaders. The causes of disagreement are not stated. Several leaders, it is said, now oppose the further prosecution of the campaign, and General Dorregaray has proposed that all submit to the Madrid Government under conditions granting them amnesty.

Home and Health Hints.

The Nose.

This prominent organ, although a leading feature, yet few of us care to be led by, except in the direction of a good dinner. This need not prevent us from pursuing it as a subject, showing wherein the importance of the organ is not duly estimated.

As a feature of the face it, more than any other, changes its character, although not so capable of expression as the eyes and mouth. Its ideal beauty varies with different races. The Africans of Sierra Leone prize the flat nose, and the Egyptian dotes on the veritable, pure, and unadulterated pug. The Tartar races, having very small noses, consider them the very highest type of beauty. The most beautiful woman in all Tartary was considered so because she had only two holes where the nose ought to have been. There seems to be no universal standard of nasal beauty. The Romans adored the aquiline, the Greek the straight line—the latter, coming nearest our idea of the beautiful, is accepted as the standard in this latitude.

But there are other use for the nose beyond its element of beauty or the reverse. The sense of smell is popularly supposed to be the only service it is called upon to perform, at least we should judge so from the number of open mouths which we meet long the streets. One of the main objects of the nostrils is for respiratory purposes. There is very little doubt that air passing through the nostrils is refined, purified and eliminated of all injurious gases, infection and dust, before being permitted access to the lungs. It is very easy to see how habitual respiration through the mouth is not only unnatural, but productive of disease. More especially at night we should accustom ourselves to sleep with our mouths closed. All the energies of the system are then at rest, and its power of resistance at the lowest ebb. If the mouth be open, the enemy is allowed to enter, and we may be sure he fastens upon the most delicate part of our organization.

In a recent lecture by Prof. Tyndall he demonstrates fully the danger of sleeping with the mouth open, a practice unknown to the lower animals. He says: "If I were to endeavor to bequeath the most important motto which human language can convey, it should be these words:

SHUT——YOUR——MOUTH.

"In the transactions of life this might have its beneficial results, as the most friendly cautionary advice, or be received as the grossest of insults; but where I would print and engrave it—in every nursery and on every bed post in the universe—its meaning would not be mistaken, and if obeyed, its importance would soon be realized."—Exchange.

There is only one safe way in attempting to rescue a person from drowning, and that is to approach him from behind, grasping each arm firmly just above the elbows, buoying him up and carefully keeping him before you. This may be done by any good swimmer who keeps his presence of mind, even where the water is very deep. Let swimmers while bathing practice this method, if only for the amusement it affords, and they will soon become experts.

Long vs. Short Lamp Wicks.

A correspondent of the Scientific American says:

"Allow me to give your numerous readers the benefit of my experience with long wicks. I cram all the wick that I possibly can into the lamp, fill up the interstices with sponge, and saturate the whole thoroughly with kerosene. I have always found the supply sufficient for the longest winter's night. As long as any oil remains in the wick, the lamp keeps burning. I have had this fairly tested. One of my little ones—a two year-old—contrived to upset a small table supporting a lamp. With the exception of breaking the glass, no further damage was done, not even soiling the carpet. In fact, my plan was brought about from a similar accident, and a narrow escape from serious damage. As the wick burns away I keep filling up with sponge, and I think I have the nearest approach to a safety lamp."

Farm and Garden.

Transplanting or rearing trees should receive more attention from farmers and lot owners, and now as their harvesting is over it seems a suitable time to transplant many varieties of trees. It not only improves the worth of their estate, but provides for future use. It has been suggested that trees of rapid and slow growth should be growing around our dwellings, at the same time making it possible, as time advanced, to improve the artistic appearance of our homes by trimming here and there. If you would have a people of artistic tastes, the home must be the nursery of such. So a shapely tree will increase delight in the passing traveler, as well as mould your children's minds, giving them an idea of strength, of size as well as form. The green, also, so restful to the eyes, will be long retained when the lawns and meadows will be sere and brown. The infant will coo at the rustle of the leaves, and the sick child forgets its pains to observe their motion. When so much can be accomplished with so little expense it seems unpardonable in an intelligent land owner not to attend to this. And the city authorities might with advantage attend to the same. They have been found to assist in removing malaria from some districts, by sucking up the moisture and nutriment of the earth, that otherwise would yield such a dense growth of weeds that the sunlight could not enter, thus forming malaria and fungii. It has been noticed by some close observers that sore throats, diptheretical and croupous, abound where a great deal of this damp vegitation exists. Besides a tree acts as a nucleus for soil in desert places. Napoleon was the agent by which thousands of acres of land could be possessed as a goodly heritage when he set his soldiers to transplanting trees, and the States of Kansas and Nebraska have enriched their lands that will soon be homes for countless thousands, by their effectual efforts in raising trees. Let any tiller of the soil arrange for his trees, sending for such trees as will live in that soil until he shall have time to make a soil suited for trees which are more dainty.

TO MEASURE HAY IN THE MOW.—Five hundred cubic feet, or a cube of eight feet each way of closely packed timothy hay will make a ton; 700 feet, or a cube of nine feet each way, of clover and timothy in equal parts, will make a ton. Light meadow hay consisting of blue grass, red top, white bent, or loosely packed clover hay will require 1,000 cubic feet, or ten feet each way for a ton. Allowances must be made for differences in the state of compression in which the hay may be. Clover hay tightly pressed down in a mow under a quantity of grain might only require 700 or 800 feet for a ton. A ton of loose hay is a much larger quantity than most people suppose, and estimates of weights are more frequently too large than too low.

SPOILING HORSES FEET.—It is almost impossible to get a horse shod without having the frog cut away. All veterinary surgeons, all horse men, all leading blacksmiths, agree that the frog should not be pared one particle, not even trimmed. No matter how pliable and soft the frog is, cut it away smooth on all sides, and in two days it will be dry and hard as a chip. You might as well cut all the leaves off trees and expect them to flourish as to pare away the frog and have a healthy foot. The rough, spongy part of the frog is to the foot what leaves are to the tree—the lungs. Never have a red-hot shoe put upon the foot to burn it level. If you can find a blacksmith who is mechanic enough to level the foot without red-hot iron, employ him. If you do not think so, try the red-hot poker on your finger-nail, and see how it will effect the growth of that. There are many other important points in shoeing horses, but these two are of more importance than all the rest, level to the apprehension of men not skilled in horses, and the two most disregarded.

A writer in the Rural Home says: "To test the difference in yield between planting potatoes in drills or in hills, I planted six rows across the field three and a half feet apart, and the hills two feet nine inches in the row, and by the side of them six rows in drills, with seed once in twenty inches, and rows about the same as the other. The yield by weight proved to be two and a half bushels, or twelve and a half bushels to the acre in favor of the drills, although they had been damaged some by the horse having to turn around on them when cultivating those on hills. A former year I had thirty bushels more to the acre in favor of the drill planting. This experiment was with the Early Rose.

Facts and Figures.

—Recent statistics show that of 485,000 households of Switzerland, 465,000 possess landed property, and of the entire population of 2,000,000, about 500,000 only have no landed possessions. About one person in twenty lives by alms, while in England there is one to every eight, and in France one to every nine. The great majority of the people live by agriculture, but the exports, nevertheless, amount to $58,000,000 annually above home consumption. The three Protestant cantons are richer than the ten or twelve Roman Catholic cantons.

—A French journal gives the following word portrait of Guizot: Small, thin and frail in body; he appeared thinner from the habit of wearing a long brown frock coat. In the lapel of his coat he wore the ribbon of the Legion d'Honneur. His hair was silvered, the face full of life and brightness, with dark gray eyes that looked earnestly at you from under his black velvet skull cap. A dry man, of earnest mind, keen rather than wide, without the slightest trace of humor. An admirable face, sculptured by time, that had hollowed wrinkles there and stamped it with an incomparable expression of strength and energy. It was impossible to avoid a respectful astonishment at the sight of that long, thin, austere head, that domineering look, that small, severe and disdainful mouth. His voice was full, harsh and biting, accentuating words and giving them an extraordinary force. His gestures hard and commanding; his hand, striking at regular intervals on the desk, to a certain extent modulated the sentence, and deepened the impression upon the mind.

—The condition of the poor whites in India is most pitiable. In the presidency of Bengal alone, says the Pall Mall Gazette, there is a European and half-caste population of 83,935, and a large proportion of those thousands are in the depths of misery and vice. The system of public instruction in India was framed for the natives, and there is no adequate provision for white children or half-castes. Throughout all Bengal, with the exception of two small schools, no school has been established within the last fifteen years suited to their needs and circumstances. Even among the highest class of poor whites a father can not give his children such an education as will enable them to earn a livelihood, owing to the great expense of sending them to school. A parent often has to pay half his income for the education of a single son. The cause of all this neglect is that the Indian government has had to force education among the natives at an enormous cost.

—Statistics recently published in England show that the number of agricultural laborers is constantly diminishing. In 1861 laborers (indoor) numbered 958,265; in 1871 they had decreased to 798,087. Indoor servants numbered, in 1861, 204,962; in 1871 158,756. During this time the number of farmers remained remarkably constant, being 249,735 in 1861, and 241,907 in 1871. The number of farm baliffs, that is working men superintending farms for gentlemen farmers, shows a steady increase in the last three decades; in 1851 they numbered 10,561; in 1861, 15,698; in 1871, 16,476.

These figures are significant. They show that machinery is displacing hand-labor, even where it can be procured for $3.50 a week. The result of the strike shows that the number of hands could be immensely reduced without curtailing the production of food. The inference is obvious. The agricultural laborers of England must clear out—must go into the cities or emigrate. In reducing their number lies their sole hope of bettering their condition.

—On the fifth of January, 1873, Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas, offered a bill in Congress to secure prohibition in the territories and the District of Columbia. The bill, which was twice read and ordered to be printed, began:—

"Be it enacted, etc. That from and after the passage of this act, no person shall be allowed to manufacture, sell, exchange, or give, barter or dispose of any intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, in either of the territories of the United States or within the District of Columbia.

Sec. 2. That it shall be lawful for druggists, who are regularly licensed dealers in poisons, medicine and alcohol to continued to sell them for medical and scientific purposes.

Here followed clauses regulating the sale by which the purchaser might know what is bought, and requiring a full register of the sale.

Section 3d provides for the punishment of any violation of the act by a fine of $500 and six months imprisonment, and liability for damages.

Mr. E. S. Young, chief of the Bureau of Satistics at Washington, reports the aggregate money value of the whiskey and fermented liquors manufactured in this country, and of imported liquors as $601,000,000. There are 150,000 licensed liquor stores, whose averaged annual sales are $4,000 each, making a total of $600,000,000, which estimate he regards as at least $1,000,000 below the facts in the case. An expert could not count more than $20,000 in one dollar notes in a day. Working twenty-five days in a month, it would take one man a hundred years to count the money expended in the United States for ardent spirits in a single year. These one dollar notes, if spread upon the ground, would cover an area of 20,446 acres. If the amount was paid in gold, a ton of which is worth $574,000, and loaded on wagons each carrying one ton, and occupying a space of seven yards, it would require 1,045 wagons, which would form a procession six miles long. In silver, worth $31,200 per ton, it would require 19,230 wagons, which would form a line seventy-six miles in length. To complete the picture, let the wives and children of drunkards, and the widows and orphans of those who have died drunkards during the year, follow these wagons in melancholy procession, their cries of anguish ascending to heaven, and the lines would extend thousands of miles.

Prevention Rather than Cure.

A young man about twenty-four years of age, of fine address, called at our editorial rooms and left an article for our examination, a few weeks since. It proved to be well written and interesting, and was accepted. Last week he called again with another paper. It was at once evident that he was under the influence of stimulants. He at first denied the charge, but with the next breath acknowledged the fact, and sank down into a chair the picture of despair. "God knows," he said, "I fight against this appetite; but there are times when I am perfectly mad for drink, and cannot restrain myself. No one can tell me anything about the injury it is doing me. If one should preach to me an hour, he could not tell me anything I do not know about the misery of drinking, and he could not help me to leave it off. What can I do?" He reluctantly disclosed, in relation to himself, a few facts, fearful that some intimation of his condition might reach his friends, who had already suffered bitterly on his account. He is a graduate of Oxford, England; was in public service in India for seven years, passing all his examinations creditable; but from his position he was sent home to his father on account of this fatal habit of drunkenness. He has been in all quarters of the globe, but his fiery appetite follows him, like an insatiate demon, whereever he goes, and interrupts his success in every form of employment. He is a fine writer, and a skilful artist. He would have no difficulty in earning a handsome living, but what can a madman do? He first becomes insane for drink, and then delirious for it. His family in England are Wesleyans, and every Sabbath since he has been in Boston he has been among the worshipers in Broomfield-street Chapel. It was a pathetic story which he told of human impotence within the folds of a serpent more terrible than the one that crused the Trojan Laocoon and his sons. There is only one resource in such a desperate case. Only he who has power to work miracles could snatch such a man from the jaws of a drunkard's hopeless fate.—Zion's Herald.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonio Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hnndred pages jnst issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate acconnt, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, incinding the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a scnsation ln the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acqnainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and ot great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y.,, and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are snfficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—' Tho Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abdnction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

"Things Done by Halves are Never Done Right."

Nearly seven years ago at our first National Meeting in Pittsburgh a resolution was passed to the effect that we need a paper promptly started, ably edited and widely circulated, making opposition to secret societies a specialty.

The Cynosure was started to satisfy the demand which caused the passage of that resolution. Through various casualties it has been preserved until now. Those closely connected with it have been and are doing all they can to make it stand high among newspapers on account of its intrinsic merit; and in return they ask those who rejoice in its existence, to extend its circulation.

Do not turn aside to start new enterprises until the Cynosure subscription list at least pays present expenses. Other papers have started and will start, if God enlarges this work, but first come to the rescue of the organ of the National Christian Association, the nucleus from which the General and State agencies in a measure draw their support.

The Cynosure was enlarged in April, and we had faith, and still have it, that its increased value without an addition to its price will help our friends to double its circulation.

We do not ask contributions but we ask for new subscriptions.

If you have money to give and cannot obtain subscriptions, you can send it to pay for some one who cannot afford it. W. P. Burke, Lake county, Cal., writes:

"I have received the Christian Cynosure for a few months past at the expense of some good friend. I like it very much because of its Anti-secret publications. I never belonged to a secret organization, and more than this I never intend to. 'God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ,' etc.

I am a young preacher of the church of Jesus Christ, and wish to ever do his will, and I know from what he has said that he would not be willing for me to exchange the cross for the glory of men. But I am poor in this world's goods and cannot take the Cynosure any longer."

We frequently receive such a letter as this and want some friend who has money, to order us to draw on him for the two dollars to pay for the paper. September as well as the summer months were dull, financially, for the Cynosure. The cash expenses of the publication of the Cynosure from the time of its enlargement, April 1st to Oct. 1st, have exceeded the receipts $1,189,-41.

We cannot stand this and we think the tide must turn. Shall we diminish the size of the paper without changing its price? We imagine we have the answer no, NO, NO, from many voices. The October receipts start off more encouragingly and we mean to have due patience, and perseverence in waiting for the incoming tide.

Now do you say, what can I do? First, do not rest until every man in your town and county who ought to take the Cynosure has been urged to do so.

Then if you have money to spend, write to us as follows: "You may draw on me for money to pay for sending the Cynosure to———persons who write that they want the paper but cannot afford it."

Labor and pray for the paper if you believe God's kingdom is advanced by it. Do not leave it half supported to start new enterprises.

"One thing at a time,
And that done well,
Is a very good rule
As many can tell."

NOTICE.—The meeting of the Anti-masonic friends which adjourned to meet on Saturday, Oct. 24th, is postponed two weeks.

NEWSPAPER POSTAGE UNDER THE NEW LAW.—By the new law the postage on the Cynosure will have to be paid at the Chicago Post-office. The postage on the Cynosure will be the same as now; 20 cents a year, 5 cents a quarter. See the article on the 16th page headed "Postage on the Cynosure."

The Christian Statesman, Philadelphia, gives the following from an important New York daily. It covers and justifies the whole anti-secret movement, and is a symptom of awakening truth:

"The New York Times says: The growth of secret societies in colleges is much to be deprecated. They are a source of heart-burning and jealousy; they tend to separate young men from their fellows; they create unjust distinctions; and, finally, they waste time and money. It should be the settled policy of this country to discourage all secret organizations; and, if they are allowed to exist in colleges, they are not to be resisted outside of it. Nothing worth doing in college can be any better done by means of a secret organization; and nothing which can justly be sought for outside of college needs, in America, to hide its objections or its objects or its actions behind a veil of secrecy."

THE CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL, which met for its first triennial at New Haven, last month, paid no attention whatever to public morals or evils. They re-elected A. H. Quint (Freemason) their secretary and only permanent officer, listened to Dr. Z. Eddy, of Detroit, a Royal Arch Mason who has sworn to conceal all the crimes of a brother of that degree, on "The indications of a coming effusion of the Holy Spirit;" with other discourses on religious abstractions from several distinguished men.

Nine resolutions were reported on the various societies giving advice to their management and recommending consolidation of their magazines. They attempted so appoint a committee of seven "To advise with the several societies before named with reference to the recommendations now made," but the motion was lost. No committee was appointed, and the National Congregational Council adjourned for three years, leaving its correspondence and affairs ad interim in the hands of a tobacco-using Freemason and life-long Democrat who voted for James Buchanan. Can any rational man suppose that the cause of Jesus Christ and Congregational Christianity is to be advanced by such gatherings?

HENRY WARD BEECHER is announced to lecture in the New Haven Theological Seminary the coming year. In London it is no uncommon thing for clergymen of the Established Church to be picked up drunk by the police. The same is true in Mexico. But are these churches of Christ?

We publish an article in this number by Hon. J. B. Walker, in regard to Henry Ward Beecher. Mr. Walker, we believe, is a Philadelphian, and in some respects, a Quaker. All who know him will be sure that he would not touch the Brooklyn scandal did he not think the interests of gospel truth were in jeopardy. Mr. Walker is recently of the Michigan Senate, and is the author of a series of books more widely circulated throughout Christendom than the works of any other American writer on religious subjects. Read his letter to Dr. Bacon.

IMPENDING CRISES.—Premier Disraeli prophesys severe struggles between spiritual and temporal powess in which he discerns the impending crisis of the world. Father Hyacinthe lately expressed similar forebodings. He believes a terrible religious war will ere long break out all over Europe, preceded and followed by war between nations, wars between capital and labor, and war between church and state. These gloomy predictions have many an index of fulfilment. The Jesuit plots in Germany thicken and darken, and even in Yucatan the Catholic has been lately forbidden to contract civil marriage under pain of excommunication. As the hosts of the devil's army are forced backward they unite and grow desperate, and when all systems of false religion are thus marshalled, if God permits that time, the battle of Armageddon is at hand.

THE LINCOLN MONUMENT.—The memory of the martyred President received an ovation last Thursday at the dedication of the magnificent monument at Springfield, erected by the offerings of a grateful people, and the unveiling of Mead's statute which crowns the work. The President and Vice-president, the General of the army, a multitude of lesser digiataries, and twenty-five thousand of the yeomanry which he so ably and honestly represented while living, testified by their presence and interest that the memory of Abraham Lincoln has a more enduring monument in the affection of the American people than art ever reared. The exercises of the occasion were a report of the Monument Association, the reading of a poem, and an address by Senator Oglesby. The monument was built by contributions from all classes and organizations, the army, the navy, Sunday-schools, public schools, churches, cities and multitudes of individuals; even the lodges sent a pittance. The Sunday-school contribution was $18,320.38, while but $2,542.39 came from the three great (!) bodies of Masons, Odd-fellows and the Union League. But in the procession of the day the secret organizations held a chief place, with nodding plumes and fantastic regalia, which were in broad contrast with the noble, democratic spirit of the great man whose fame they would seize upon for themselves.

—The Morristown (Pa.) Witness contains a notice of the death of J. T. Yarrington, of Carbondale, Pa. Though young, he was an enthusiastic worker in reforms. His interest in the Anti-masonic work was great and abiding, but his labors were specially directed against intemperance.

His influence in organizing Pennsylvania for political action against the rum trafic was great, and his loss will be felt throughout the state.

Secret Societyism.

BY S. H. RANDALL.

Ye sons of America, wake from your slumbers,
For the foe of your country is more than at hand;
Already does secrecy gloat o'er her numbers,
And she tightens the chain that now binds our fair land.

She dares in our councils her forces to marshal,
And has left her foul trail on our buildings of state;
Defiled is the bench that she's rendered so partial,
And insulted's the nation with taunts of its fate.

Defiantly trampling our rights as a trifle,
She is sowing the seeds of that deadliest strife,
When justice resorts to the sights of the rifle,
And the law is expounded with pistol and knife.

Her penalties now she with stealth is dispensing
For offenses, moreover, unknown to our laws;
While stricken's the pulpit with fear of incensing,
And a cowardly press gives her naught but applause.

How gentle, how loving are secrecy's lashes!
And how blissful, how holy, the thoughts of her slave!
How glorious, too, his reward, that he flashes
In the "feathers and fuss" of a secrecy brave!

Alas! that our brethren for secrecy's glories
Their allegiance to country should ever make void!
A tear for the brother deceived by her stories,
But a curse on the demon by whom he is decoyed!

Our fathers did never, their freedom to smother,
Close their ranks as they fell 'neath the breath of the gun.
For secrecy, never, the prayer of the mother,
Who read liberty's creed in the blood of a son.

Our land is no place for the reign of a power
Of religion, equality, justice, the bane;
Which loves to court strength, but on weakness to lower;
And to hear, not the song, but the clank of the chain.

O say, shall we tamely submit to her binding?
Shall the home of the free become secrecy's lair?
The eagle be crushed in the serpent's foul winding?
And the star spangled banner 'neath compass and square?

No, never! while hearts tuned to liberty's metre
Love her banner in rags with their crimson to lave!
No, never! while patriots hold its far sweeter
To share liberty's grave than be secrecy's slave.

The Brethren, or "Tunkers," and Secretism.

BY J. W. BEER.

It is perhaps not generally known to the readers of the Cynosure that we, as a body of believers, have always opposed Freemasonry and kindred societies. In our Annual Conference, A. D. 1804, in answer to the question, "What is to be done with brethren who join the Masons?" the following answer was given:

"Though we are not sufficiently acquainted with this secret association to judge in the case, still there are revealed many trifling things, frivolities and unfruitful works, so that it is considered to be highly improper for brethren to be members of their association, or to have fellowship with their works. Therefore it has been unanimously concluded that, in case there are brethren defiled therewith, they should be admonished in heartfelt love, and informed that, if they wanted to remain in fellowship with these (Masonic) brethren, we could not have fellowship with them; and if, after such admonition, they would not hear, or receive counsel, we would have to avoid them, and could have no fellowship with them; but if one were contaminated with this, and would repent from the heart, and renounce all further fellowship with that association, in faith and hope he might be received again in the name of Jesus Christ." (Brethren's Encyclopedia, p. 115.)

We give the foregoing because of its antiquity. Since then, in many of our Annual Conferences, the same decision has been given. We have never retained in fellowship such as are discovered to be members of such associations. If a person is known to be a Freemason or a member of any kindred society, he cannot be received into communion with us, until he renounces his alliance with such "unfruitful works of darkness." In our last conference held near Virden, Ill., the same decisionwas made in reference to the grange. This last of Satan's devices is certainly a dangerous trap, and every right-thinking person ought to oppose it by all lawful means.

Our reasons for opposing such organizations are numerous, a few of which we may be allowed to mention.

1. Christians should be followers of Him, who said, "In secret have I said nothing." Although some modern Freemasons have the blasphemous audacity to assert that Christ was a member of their heathenish order, yet we think there are few, even among themselves, who believe it. His language, as quoted above, is evidence sufficient that he was never connected with any secret conclave; and so his followers should not have any connection with them nor give them any aid or sympathy.

2. Their oaths are in direct opposition to the doctrine of Christ, who taught his disciples not to swear. They swear rashly, blindly, and extra-judicially; but a Christian may not swear by any oath; hence a Christian may not be a member of such an order.

3. They fraternize infidels and heathens. The immoral, the profane and licentious, the gambler and drunkard are members of these orders. But Christians should not be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers;" and therefore Christians may not fraternize such characters.

4. If there is an act of charity done by them, they have credit for doing it because they are Freemasons, or Odd-fellows, etc. Their influence is thrown in favor of the order to which they belong. But Christians must do all to the glory of God; their lives and influence must be given to the Lord. "Let your light so shine that men may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." "Whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's." The Lord receives no glory for the good works done by these secret hordes; and hence Christians may not unite with them.

5. The last I shall mention is that the Christian system is a perfect system; and, as it cannot be improved by world'y organizations, it should not be marred by them. They are, at best, fomenters of suspicion, the fruitful source of debates and wranglings, and blocks of offence and stumbling; and therefore Christians should avoid and oppose them.

The Rock River Conference Discussion.

Every effort that has hitherto been made to get the Rock River Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church on record on the question of secrecy has proved to be vain. Attempts have been made to sesure the appointment of a committee on the subject, but even they have been summarily nipped in the bud by the active ones, on the ground that it would create agitation, and thereby engender "bad blood."

It is certainly a lamentable spectacle to behold a great church, in this day of enlightenment, and in this land of boasted "free speech," casting her enormous influence against free discussion and stifling the voice and spirit of free enquiry in the interest of an institution that can neither commend itself to the understanding, nor the hearts of men. And worse yet, to see the watch men on her walls transformed into so many watch-dogs to guard a secret clan against the investigations of an honorable criticism.

It is certainly a fearful commentary upon the piety of brethren in Christ, that they dare not permit the calm discussion of a question that affects the welfare of Zion most vitally, lest evil and malevolent passions should be kindled, and permanent jealousies and heart-burnings should result. By what Divine authority is such a firebrand as this located among brethren? Who gave the ministers of Christ permission to so fully commit himself to any institution that his mouth should be forever closed upon it, even as against his own brother in the Lord? Who is the Achan? And where is the wedge of gold and the Babylonish garment?

But the true animous of the whole matter is revealed in the fact that they cannot permit even one little soul to escape the "snare of the fowler and the noisome pestilence" in silence, without firing upon him in the rear, with the guns of sarcasm, misrepresentation and ridicule. A grave and reverend presiding elder reports Rev. N. D. Fanning as gone "to put down secret societies" and a popular bishop remarks "He has undertaken a big job," and the unworthy jeer is reflected in the derisive laugh and ill-concealed contempt of many others. A fitting atmosphere for misrepresentation this. He left the ministry "to start an Anti-masonic movement as pastor of an independent church at Marengo, Ill." He is "pretending to be a member of the church," etc.

And then comes the struggle. The question is: How follow out the policy of former years and keep down the agitation of this question? That must be done at every hazard. He has requested to withdraw from the conference. It is time a simple request does not sever the relation until it is granted by us. Strictly speaking he is amenable to the conference until our consent to his withdrawal is given; and it is true too, he has been guilty of abandonment of his work and of false pretenses, etc., but, on the whole, it will be better to let him go guilty. A little inconsistency on our part will be better than agitation of this vexed question.

However there is another nut to crack. What is his relation to the church? Is he a member or not? If he is, we must attend to him. Ten strong men discuss it, and the Bishop finally breaks in by the decision that his withdrawal from the ministry involves a withdrawal from the church. Just so. The ministers of the Rock River Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church are only members of the church ex-officio. But, no matter. The ghost of agitation is quieted and that is all the point of special interest to be gained at present. By the way, however, a call is made for his parchments, or any credentials he may have received from the Conference. Though we have not dared to arraign and try him and expel him for his misdemeanors, we will treat him like a condemned culprit. The presiding elder did not have them. Why, did he not explain that he was an ordained man before he united with the M. E. church?

And now reflecting men who are unpredjudiced cannot fail to see in the subterfuges, manipulations and evasions of this and similar cases the disastrous influence of this committal of the priesthood to the domination of a power foreign to the mission of the Christian ministry, and antagonistic in all its tendencies, to their great work. For Christian ministers to consort with "with lewd fellows of the baser sort," in brotherhood more intimate than the relation of religious fellowship, or than that of husband and wife; for the heralds of the cross to lend themselves,—their names and their great influence—to build up an institution that prides itself on its darkness and inscrutability; and that, against the protest and prayer of multitudes of their brethren, to whom their action is a stumbling block; against the peace and prosperity of Zion; and against their own spiritual welfare, passes all understanding. But in that body of men the tide seems irresistible. The influence of secrecy seems all dominating, and it is no wonder that the men whose convictions grow from another root should seek homes elsewhere.

There never was a time when the teachers of Christian truth could with a good conscience court popularity; least of all is there such a time now, when the forces of Satan are so furiously, under various deceptive garbs, assailing the church of Christ. A watchman who sees the enemy's dagger, ready to strike when the opportunity presents itself to do so unobserved, but is deterred by the bland manners and fair speeches of the foe from giving warning, is not fit for the office which he holds. Just now especially, when there are so many devices of the devil by which the people are deceived, should he resolve in the Master's name to do his duty, or, if he will not acquit himself like a man, stand aside and make room for one who loves souls and will hazard his own comfort to save them.—Lutheran Standard.

Morgan's Fate.—Another Proof.

MR. EDITOR:—I send you the following article for the Cynosure, adding that I was for several years acquainted with Mr. James Garlinghouse, lived in the same county with him, and can testify to his being a reliable man; a man of character and standing; a man well known to be familiar with the facts connected with the murder of Wm. Morgan.

GEO. W. CLARK.

A recent article in Packard' Monthly has reopened the controversy respecting the fate of William Morgan, whose mysterious disappearance caused so much excitement throughout the country at the time it took place and for several years afterwards. We find the following paragraph in an exchange:

The Buffalo Express prints a statement which it says has been made by James Garlinghouse, ex-sheriff of Ontario county, in regard to the exposer of Freemasonry. "Twelve men met in Buffalo and settled the business. Twelve tickets were prepared, nine of which were blank. The place of drawing was approached by each man unobserved and unknown to the rest. He who drew a blank passed away in silence and nevermore asked a question on the subject. The three who drew the fatal tickets, not blank, met at an appointed rendezvous and decided the fate of Morgan. They took him under cover of darkness from Fort Niagara and conveyed him in a skiff to the middle of the river, where, with a fifty-six pound weight securely tied to each leg, he was sent to the bottom. He begged piteously for his life, and struggled so hard that his abductors came near being inguifed with him; but the deed was accomplished and Morgan never again appeared among the living."

A correspondent of the Rochester Chronicle adds the following:

I do not know Mr. Garlinghouse, nor how he came to make the statement, nor how he came to know about the taking off of Morgan. He might have been one of the three who murdered him, or, if not, one of the twelve who met in Buffalo and drew one of the nine blank tickets, or he might not have been either. But how did he become satisfied of the truth of the fact by other competent evidence? If testimony is unimpeachable and concurrent to a crime, it furnishes an assurance to others, to a jury, for instance, nearly equivalent to the testimony of the senses. On this ground the murder of Morgan is well established in the public mind, and has been for many years admitted, even by Masons, as well as those not Masons. I am not a little surprised that any should deny it, as some do who have been recently initiated into the institution, for it throws suspicion over the integrity and candor of the members. It would be more honorable to admit that a class of reckless men compassed the crime, but it was not sanctioned by the institution as such. Besides the abundant testimony to his abduction by some of that fraternity and the testimony of the courts, we have the dying confession of a man to the perpetration of the deed by his own hands in conjunction with two others. The account will be found in the work of Prof. Finney, of Oberlin, on Masonry, taken, he says, from a pamphlet entitled "Confession of the murder of William Morgan, as taken down by Dr. John L. Emery, of Racine county, Wisconsin, in the summer of 1848." It is substantially the same in its statements with that of Mr. Garlinghouse. They differ as to the number of persons who drew lots for the performance of the fatal tragedy, Mr. Garlinghouse says there were twelve. The confession of Henry L. Valance says it was resolved in a council of eight that he must die. Three of their number were to be selected by ballot to execute the deed, and he was one who drew a ballot with the letter "D" on it. Two others drew similar ones. They proceeded to the fort at midnight to put Morgan to death. The others, who drew blanks, returned immediately to their homes. Valance was to announce to Morgan his fate, and his companions were to procure a boat and weights with which to sink him. When he was informed of their proceeding against him, he commenced wringing his hands and talking of his wife and children. "His wife," he said, "was young and inexperienced, and his children were but infants; what would become of them were he cut off," etc. Morgan was taken out of the fort, bound and gagged, and placed in the boat. Valance says his comrades took the oars, and the boat was rapidly forced out into the river. The night was pitch dark and they could scarcely see a yard before them. Having reached a proper distance from the shore the oarsmen ceased their labors. The weights were secured by a strong cord and another cord of equal strength and of several yards in length proceeded from that.—"This," says V., "I took in my hand and fastened it around the body of Morgan just above the hips. We then bade him stand up, The weights were arranged on the edge of the boat. This was done, and as Morgan was standing with his back toward me I gave him a strong push with both my hands. He fell forward carrying the weights with him, and the waters closed over him. We remained quiet for two or three minutes, when my companions without saying a word resumed their places, and rowed the boat to the place from which they had taken it."

A confession of crime extorted from a dying man by remorse is generally received as ample testimony to the fact.

A Seceding Quaker's Opinion.

By one who has been a member and an advocate of secret societies for full twenty years; but the good Master has not only enabled me, but compelled me to see the other side of the picture, and I propose to speak of them in the light that I now see them.

There are secret societies, and not a few, which make money-getting their motto regardless of law; and they are on the increase.

There is another class, which are moral in their character, and have for their mottoes, mutual protection, temperance reform, etc. These include the law-abiding portion of the community, but they are affording shelter and protection to the former class, from the fact, that they cannot exact laws to overthrow their fortifications, without undermining the foundation of their own institutions.

Now a word in regard to the grangers:

These are secret societies in their mildest form, calculated to give a relish for something stronger. They are only monopolizing monopoly, overcoming evil with evil, and carrying out the spirit of retaliation. Their tendency is, like that of all secret societies, to nullify the Declaration of Independence where it says that all men are created equal.

For an example of inequality, just let an outside man come in competition with a man in the secret circles for any office of profit or trust in the gift of the people, and you will see equality all bridged over with badges. The same may be seen in our courts of justice, and it is carried into almost every department of life—the ministry not excepted.

Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship are the principal roots to the great tree which is overshadowing our whole nation and bringing a blight on our government.

What injury has secrecy done to our government? It turned our army and navy into the hands of the rebellion, and prolonged the war to an unreasonable length; destroying the lives of thousands of our citizens, and involving our country in an enormous debt. It has kept rebels from impeachment, and saved Jefferson Davis and hundreds of others from the just penalty of the law.

But while I thus speak, I am only subjecting myself to oppression; yet I have remembered how Moses choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season.

In conclusion, I will say to my friends, and especially the young, that if this world and its pleasures are of more value than the salvation of the soul, go your length into secret societies; but please recollect that they are like the current of the Niagara River above the falls—the further you go the stronger the draft and the more inevitable the destruction.—O. H. King in the Christian Worker.

Questions Answered.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Witness answers from experience these three questions:

1st. Does the order shield criminals from justice?

2d. Does it conceal crime? and

3d. Are bound its members by terrible oaths to cause the death of any one who may divulge its secrets?

That the order shields criminals and conceals crime are facts which the ignorant or guiltful may deny, but the honest and intelligent may fearlessly affirm and successfully prove in defiance of all contradiction. Whoever candidly studies the oaths of the different degrees of Masonry can hardly fail to be convinced that they are framed with direct reference to these two things, and that this is one of their leading objects. Take for instance this extract from the Master Mason's oath: "Furthermore do I promise and swear that a Master Mason's secret given to me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, when communicated to me, murder and treason excepted and they left to my own election." See Master Mason's oath, as given by Morgan, and attested by every seceding Mason, and by as many adhering Master Masons as have been examined under oath upon the point. The Royal Arch oath is the same with the slight change of a single word—"murder and treason NOT excepted"—and this, too, is attested in the same manner as the Master's oath above mentioned, i. e., by all seceding and by all legally adjured Royal Arch Masons. Now if these oaths are kept, criminals will be shielded from justice, and crimes will be concealed, and the order of Masonry is responsible for it. That many Freemasons do not and would not keep these oaths, we are most happy to believe. But that many of them are by these oaths drawn into these civil and social crimes as by a sort of satanic moral coercion, we have not the least shadow of doubt. It is being done continually and is one of the great and overshadowing abominations of these days of fearful corruption. Of course this crime itself will be as carefully concealed as any other, and yet like murder it will out, and like other abominations is being continually dragged into the light. But the third question requires explanation if answered in the affirmative. Nothing is gained by charging against a system or society more than is strictly true. On the contrary, it strengthens the opposer if you in the least overstate or exaggerate. If we charge that Masonry does bind its members by terrible oaths to cause the death of those who may divulge its secrets, most of the members will deny it, and think they do so honestly—think there is no foundation for such an assertion. There is no such obligation in the oaths of the first seven or eight degrees. But passing these degrees and ascending or descending into the degrees of Knighthood, and long before one reaches the degree of Sovereign Grand Inspector-General, he is again and again brought under the oath in various forms of expression to cause the death of the traitors of Masonry. Blue lodge or three-degree Masons only swear to keep all Masonic secrets "under no less penalty" than to be murdered. They only swear to submit to be murdered, not to commit murder. This is reserved for profounder depths of Satan. And yet to make a man swear under penalty of murder is to threaten his murder and make the impression on all parties that murder is intended and justifiable in case of violating the oath. It is a murderous oath therefore, even in the first or Entered Apprentice's degree, and being murderous is in the highest degree blasphemous. But only among the Knights are found the plainly and positively sworn murderers. It is proper, therefore, to say that some of the members of the Masonic order, all indeed above a certain degree, are bound by terrible oaths (if such blasphemous oaths can bind) to cause the death of any who should divulge its secrets. Hence the fate of Pritchard and of Morgan and Miller, and the attempted assassination of Baird and Rathbun, and doubtless of a countless number as yet concealed by the thick veil of Masonic secrecy. ONCE A MASON OF SIX DEGREES.

Religion the Basis of Civil Society.

Religion is the only stable basis on which a commonwealth can be reared. This, we think, might be demonstrated by clear, unimpassioned, inductive reasoning: we desire to trace in outline one or two of the main divisions of the proof.

The first, and, perhaps, all things considered, the most important argument in its support, is to be derived from the analogy of the individual. It is an indisputable fact that the community has, so to speak, a distinct personality; that it is not a mere collection of individuals. Yet, we venture to say, that the more careful and protracted our observations of the man and the nation is, and the more profound our reflection upon the phenomena presented by each, the more firm will our assurance become that a strict analogy holds between them. So strong is our conviction of this, that Butler's demonstration of the supremacy of conscience in the individual bosom is quite sufficient to satisfy us that the healthful and natural state of the nation is exhibited, only when the national conscience is dominant, when religion prevails. The political Butler has not yet appeared; but a noble task awaits him. He will show how, as the man who listens to the voice of conscience, who can stand apart from his fellows, and, over all the brawling of the popular wind, hear the still small voice of conscience as supreme on earth, and turn his eye at its monition toward heaven for an approval which will make him independent of human opinion, is he who is most true to his nature; so the nation which would rightly occupy its position in the world must have aims above all that is sublunary, and hold itself as a nation responsible to God.

The second source of argument on this point is the evidence of history. More express and conclusive evidence than is derivable from its source, we can scarce conceive. Of many things the historical student may be doubtful, but of this at least he must be sure. That no amount of wealth, no extent of culture, has ever given a nation strength and stability, when the religious element has been in decay. Let it be noted, that we now speak of the development and power of the religious faculty: we treat not the subordinate, though important question, whether the religion be true or false. And we bid any man consider the whole history of Judea, of Greece, of Rome, of Italy, and we may add of France, and declare, whether the nation is capable of avoiding some one fatal peril or another which is not strongly religious. Either foreign subjugation, or domestic despotism, or maniac anarchy, has ever overtaken the godless nation; and, in all times, the nation that had a faith, that reverenced an oath, has put a bridle in the teeth of the unbelieving people.

The only other department of proof to which we can refer is that of the testimony of great individual thinkers. It is interesting to note how, we might say without exception, the great thinkers and workers of all time have agreed in this. Consider the amount of the evidence to be derived from that one source, the construction of ancient and modern politics. Every legislator requires this as his bower-anchor; every man who attempts to establish a commonwealth, or to rule an empire, commences with religion. That he was himself an irreligious man, or skeptic, mattered little. Whether he were a Zoroaster or Mahomet, or a Ptolemy Lagus or Napoleon, it was the same; the point of the national pyramid, each felt, must point to heaven. And the testimony of thinkers is equally explicit. Plato virtually makes religion the base of his republic; and Mr. Carlyle is, in our day, again proclaiming, in what manner, or with what likelihood of success, we say not, the same truth. In one of Bacon's Essays, you find his authority, and that of Cicero, like one sword with two edges, knit together. The fact is explicitly stated by Montesquieu; and, while the influence of what was or was not named the positive philosophy has here affected injuriously our last schools of political economy, even they are compelled to lend their indirect suffrage. One of the most healthy thinkers of recent times, Thomas Chalmers, gave the strength of his life to enunciate and enforce the momentous doctrine.

DORA, Ind., Oct. 8, 1874.

DEAR FRIENDS:—The State Association will hold its first annual meeting on the 28th and 29 of October at Dublin, Wayne Co., Ind. Let every one who can do so come to this meeting, and aid us in the work of systematizing and perfecting the State organization. Those who can not come and desire to assist us financially, will send their contributions to Rev. A. Butler, Dublin, Wayne Co., Ind., who is president of the State Association and who will pay the same to the treasurer, and report through the Cynosure. Entertainment will be provided for all who attend. Brother Stoddard has promised to attend; and Bro. J. T. Horne, Andrew Zeek, Joseph Bennet, and Rev. Wm. M Givens, all seceding Masons, are expected to be present.

BRETHREN OF INDIANA, do not fail to do your duty in this matter. If you desire the work kept moving, and a State organization maintained, then do all you can to that end, otherwise it cannot be done.

Respectfully and sincerely yours in the cause of truth, JOHN T. KIGGINS.

Pennsylvanians, Look Here!

The time of the annual meeting of the Christian Association of North-east Pennsylvania opposed to secret societies, will, by the Ex. Committee, be changed to Wednesday and Thursday, the 4th and 5th, instead of the 3d and 4th of November next, one day later in the week, as the 3d is election day. This meeting will be held as before published, in the Free Methodist Hall in Wilkesbarre, Penn. Able and distinguished speakers will be provided for the occasion. The meeting will begin at 2 o'clock P. M., on Wednesday, the 4th.

An anti-secret convention is also contemplated in the time and place above stated, to consist of delegates and citizens from every county and town in the State, if practicable, or as many as can be called into action and co-operation with the purpose to organize a

STATE ASSOCIATION OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

Citizens, freemen, men of God and of the "Old Keystone State," rally! rally!! Rally!!! Secretism is to-day sapping the very foundation of all that is dear to a patriot and Christian in this our blood-stained land. Every year Free(?)masonry salutes our senses with some new and specious name, though in nature everywhere the same, North and South, East and West, a sworn antagonist to free government and free grace. Shall we lie low and silent as the sepulchre, till sworn leagues and clans of legion form, have forged our chains and put them on? Shall we help them by their own policy, "a silent tongue" to forge out our chains and fetters? Inaction and silence at this time are suicide, both national and religious. Never, since God gave body and "soul liberty" to fallen beings, have these inalienable rights been in deeper danger, and the more so because the cause is out of sight of the mass of the people. Did illuminism of a past age tend to revolution, anarchy and dissolution? Not less surely does it now work the same results. Who but the Lucifer, (ligh-giver,) advertised in the Bible, is the author of the Illuminati of the world, old and new? Weishaup, was only the devil's sounding board and reflector. In this nineteenth century of our glorious Christianity, God's light of the world, what do we see in these United States, this Christian land? Do our eyes and ears deceive us? Jurors, judges, senators and presidents, "traveling East seeking light," "hoodwinked" and with a "cabletow," neither naked nor clothed, with the faces to the east when the sun is in the west, seeking light! Church members, deacons, and bishops too, in the same plight! Lucifer, how art thou fallen," to fraternize with such a crew! Now the "stars" of church and state are falling from "the heavenly places" to secret dens of heathen worship and midnight orgies, while press, pulpit and church are forbidden to sound the note of warning under penalty of poverty and persecution even unto death. Christian citizen, what shall we do? Be inactive and silent while this fatal poison of secretism runs unchecked and undisputed in every vein and channel of both church and state? No, fellow countrymen, no! "If these should hold their peace the stones would cry out" and warn the people of the peril to our blood-bought institutions. Masonry, from the mildest form of it, as obtruded upon our modern reform movements down to the Ku-KluxKlan and Molly M'Guires, is mysteriously and wonderfully organized. In this, our noble and populous State, there are tens of thousands of souls, who abhor this secret foe as they do the midnight assassin, but they are as the parts of a good engine not yet put together; they would be a power, if put in place and brought under steam. Now these noble souls must be put into position and made the power of an intelligent zeal by organization.

Citizens of Pennsylvania, men of God, advocates of a pure Gospel and church, of an outspoken, faithful pulpit, of a bold and untrammeled press, of just judges and impartial courts, of a President and congress who will not betray the nation,

ORGANIZE!

Ye honest ones who hate rings, clans, lodges, granges, leagues, and the scores of specious engines of "Lucifer" who hoodwinks his saints and puts them under midnight marches with cable-tow around, and thus baptizes them the sons of light, the illuminati of the nether regions; anoints them with the oil of concentrated darkness and falsehood to the perpetual service of infidelity, anarchy and revolution; Pennsylvanians from every county, town and city, come up to Wikesbarre, Nov. 4th, 2 o'clock P. M.; to the Free Methodist Hall, corner of Market and Canal streets ready to organize.

Reform News.

Reform News.

—The unusual amount of reform news this week has overrun our columns. All the agents have a word of interest to contribute. Bro. Fait, of Indiana, sends an interesting report of meetings at Southport, Ill., which has to lay over. These letters are perhaps the most interesting reform reading we can present; and we are encouraged to promise plenty of it through the coming season.

—The Dupage county Association holds its semi-annual meeting at Downer's Grove on the 11th of November. Meetings are arranged to be held in different parts of the county the week previous.

From the General Agent.—A New Spirit in an Old Town.

WESTFIELD, Ind., Oct. 9, 1874.

DEAR K:—I have nearly completed my present labors in this Hamilton county. I have spoken at fifteen different points, several of them twice; six more appointments and then on the 12th I start for Ohio. I spoke last evening in Deming, a little, old dilapidated town where Masonry was once very strong, but is now on the wane. I thought of what Rob. Morris said in one of his lectures. Announcing to his audience that he was going to tell them "what Masonry had done for Palestine," he went on to describe the country and its inhabitants, and informed his hearers that the "country was so infested with thieves and robbers that it was dangerous to travel after sunset, and that the people were compelled to live in villages and enclose their stock at night in the same room where they slept to secure them from these nocternal visitors." The town of Deming appears to have approached very near to the same condition. But there is hope. One of the two lodges has suspended and a "bolt from the clouds" has sadly demoralized their pretentious structure.

Ignorant Masons sometimes tell us that Masonry is founded on the Bible. But in Deming the lodge is founded on the "church-house." Some years ago, an enterprising Masonic M. E. preacher conceived and carried out the idea of building a church with a lodge on the top of it, and now the Lord's disciples meet below, while the disciples of "Hiram the widow's son" meet above. Bro. Armstrong tells me that it is sometimes a great annoyance. Members will pass and repass from one to the other during service, and loud thumps and strange noises accompany the lodge ceremonies at times to the great discomforture of those who seek to worship in "Spirit and in truth." The plaster has fallen from a large portion of the ceiling, and the "boys" are accustomed to say when hearing a heavy fall upon the floor, "There, the Old Goat has thrown his rider." Of course I was not permitted to speak in such a sacred place, but after some hesitation and delay the friends succeeded in obtaining the school-house, where I spoke for two hours with much freedom. After the lecture one brother assured me that I had correctly given his initiation into the lodge in Deming, and also confirmed the expose of Odd-fellowship.

There has been a great advance since I visited this county, something over two years ago. One man who told me that he was perfectly amazed and terrified when he first heard Masonry spoken against, now talks freely of his own initiation and of the initiation of others. This case is illustrative of the prevalent feeling in the community. God is giving success to his truth and the lodge is becoming very shy and cowardly. J. P. STODDARD.

Details of the Illinois Work.—A Church of a Thousand.

DEAR BROTHER K:—I left home September 22d, to fill previous appointments, and spoke on the 22d and 23d in the M. E. church at Freedom, on the 24th at Freedom Centre, and on the 25th at East Paw-Paw. By the assistance of Bro. C. C. Breed, pastor of the Congregational church at East PawPaw, I was introduced to some of the members of a M. E. society, whose house of worship is five miles north of East PawPaw. I found here a church thoroughly converted to Anti masonic principles. They cordially invited me to occupy the pulpit Sabbath evening and speak on that subject. I was somewhat surprised to find the members of a church so largely connected with Masonry, so unanimous in opposing it, but my surprise ceased when I learned their history. They have a fine house of worship, and have been supplied for a number of years with preachers, most of whom were Freemasons. No objection was made to this until about two years ago when a Masonic minister was sent to them who proved to be a vile man, and who was finally arrested for criminal conduct, but through the connivance of brother Masons was permitted to escape and was never afterwards arrested. I need not repeat the details. The affair produced intense indignation, and so plainly was Masonry at the bottom of it that when the next Masonic minister made his appearance he found the doors of the church locked against him. May other churches be as thoroughly converted without so painful an experience!

From thence I went to Lindenwood, where I met a most cordial reception and spoke to a more than a house full. I have no where met with a more intelligent and earnest appreciation of the importance of this reform than in this community.

From thence I went to Marengo, where I spent two days in attendance on the Free Methodist annual conference, and one evening with Bro. Fanning's people in conference and social worship. I was greatly refreshed in spirit and deeply impressed with the devotedness and self sacrifice of the noble men and women who have gone into the Free Metho ist movement, as well as those who have taken a stand in the independent church of Christ in Marengo. May the blessing of God continue to rest upon them!

From Marengo I came to Creston, where I spoke on the 2d and from thence drove home, 60 miles, the next day. I am now (D. V.) expecting to visit and spend two weeks in Edwards and Morgan counties.

Yours for Christ, H. H. Hinman.

From the Indiana Agent.

Dora, Wabash Co., Ind., Oct. 7, 1874.

Dear Brother Kellogg:—It may be of some interest to you and the readers of the Cynosure to know that I have not been idle since you heard from me directly. I came to Grant county about the 2d of September, and since then have spoken twice in Miami county, four times in Grant, eight times in Huntington, ten in Jay, and six in Wabash. At Otterbein Chapel, near Warren in Huntington Co., we succeeded in organizing an association from which I hope we may hear reports of progress in the future. I go from here on to Wayne county to complete arrangements for the State meeting at Dublin, where it will be held on the 28th and 29th inst.

I had been suffering from an attack of chills and fever, which, though I succeeded in breaking, persisted in returning till I got brother John A. Morehouse after it with his preparation of willow bark and capsicum, which I think has permanently routed it.

Yours in haste, John T. Kiggins.

Jottings From the New York Field

Dear K:—My last left me at De Ruyter, Madison Co., where I spoke twice. The second evening four or five Masons came in a body and took a front seat within six feet of where I stood. I had given out my subject, The Obligatons of Freemasonry, the night before, and it brought out the craft in force. Those who came thus to the front looked mischief, but they served as a sharpener to my mind. I soon saw that they were astounded at the amount of evidence I had in possession, of the truth of the revelations of the secret work of the craft. Keeping my eyes upon theirs I could easily see when the shots went home, and in that way was greatly assisted. I felt very grateful to them for the help thus unconsciously rendered. Here, a few stanch friends of our reform—B. G Stillman, Dea. Wells, H. W. Burdick, who, with Hiram Preston, Schuyler Olin, Benjamin Stillman, and others of Linclaen, are each doing something as skirmishers against the enemy.

Through the kindness of Dea. Wells I was furnished with a horse and buggy, on the 21st, with H. W. Burdick, as a driver, by the aid of which, after riding some fourteen miles through a pleasant country, I reached the beautiful village of Cazenovia, nestling on the shore of its beautiful lake. Here I was kindly "taken in and done for," by Bro. C. G. Adams, who delights in making sacrifices for our cause.

In this place of many churches, not one could be had for a lecture on the greatest evil of our times. Accordingly, the same hall occupied by Prof. Blanchard was obtained. I spoke that evening, to a very small audience. It was only too plain that lodge influence was at work to keep people away. I think the lectures of Charles A. had frightened the craft and their bodyguard—the jacks—so that they did not want to hear anything farther in that direction. There was, also, much going on to draw away the attention of the people. The second evening also found us with many empty seats, and a small but select audience, who came to hear and be profited. The pastor of the M. E. Church, who on Sabbath read our notice morning and evening, was present both times, and seems in a hopeful way. He finds a strong and efficient backer in Prof. Smythe of the seminary, who is a seceding Mason. Prof. B. will remember him as a courteous Christian gentleman, who expressed himself to him as looking upon Masonry as "tom-foolery," but not as so "wicked" as he considered it. Since that time, he has been reading, and I had the pleasure of hearing him say that he now looked upon it as "wicked" as well as silly. In conversation with the Professor he remarked, "If the Morgan book is not true, the lodge made a mistake when they initiated me, for that is the way I was made a Mason." If any further evidence is needed in this direction, it is almost daily being furnished by disgusted and seceding Masons.

There are others in Cazenovia who have given up all affiliation with the lodge. These became disgusted with its ridiculous ceremonies, and seeking to know no more of its principles or practices of, and looking upon it as child's play, do not see its underlying blasphemy and couching treason. Prof. S. was astonished as I read to him from Mackey's Lexicon of the mysteries of Isis, to which Mrs. DeGeer referred in her speech at Farwell Hall, before the great fire. He had never known of the acknowledged relationship between Masonry and the Ancient Phallic worship of the Egyptians, et al. The recital amazed and disgusted him, as well it might.

Constableville.

The night of the 28th of Sept. found me at the above named place, in Lewis Co. The village lies some three miles west of Lyons' Falls, a station on the Utica and Black River Railroad. Here I was the guest of Elder M. E. Fisk, pastor of the Baptist church. Bro. Fisk is an outspoken, fearless Anti-mason, and has sacrificed, and is still sacrificing much for this cause. His church is with him and in order to maintain a consistent position on this reform is occupying an independent position, unconnected with any association. It was through the efficient and gratuitous labors of Bro. F. that I found work to occupy my time until Oct. 7.

I spoke in his house of worship two evenings, and though it was dark and stormy, had good congregations—the last much the largest. Quite a number of the craft were present, among them, Masons, Odd-fellows, Good Templars, grangers &c. The pastor of the M. E. church was present both evenings, and if report be true, he represented all, or nearly all the orders mentioned. He, however, kept his jewel, as did his fellows of the various brotherhoods. I challenged them to reply—dared them to do it; or deny what I had said; and yet after my back was turned they could charge me with lying!! O, the depths of infamy into which Masonry will plunge even ministers of the Gospel.

Evenings of the 30th and Oct. 1st found me at Carthage, Jefferson Co., where John Levington stirred up the caged ones, a year and a half ago. They are strong here, and are in love with their bars. The power of the lodge is felt through all the ramifications of society. Both evenings were fearfully dark and but few were present. Perhaps nearly as many Masons as others. The first evening they were quiet while I opened up the religious aspects of Masonry. The second evening I lifted the roof of the lodge and discovered some of the ceremonies, and the character and tendencies of the oaths, &c. At the close of my remarks I again requested a denial of what I said if it could be done—told the craft if they did not deny, the people would believe my statements. No reply being made I dismissed the congregation, when up sprang a Dr. Pedue, a member of the Protestant Episcopal church, who delivered himself as follows:

"I have been a Mason thirty years. I have taken thirty degrees in Masonry. I have listened to many lectures on Masonry, for and against, but never heard so many false and malicious statements in one lecture as I have heard to-night," or words to that effect. I was busy giving away tracts, and missed some of his words. After saying this the Dr. resumed his seat, when he was thus roughly handled by a Mr. Hodgkins, deputy sheriff, forty years a resident of Carthage, and a worthy member of the M. E. church, who quickly arose and said: "I heard the Dr. say in the Court-house, yesterday, that if any man would join a secret society and then reveal its secrets, he would be one of two to punish him to the full extent of the laws of the order. I then said, "Doctor, if death is the penalty would you be one to help inflict it?" "I would," was the unhesitating reply. Another gentleman sprang up on the other side of the house and spoke so as to be heard above the confusion "I heard him say the same thing."

All this came so suddenly that I could scarcely keep track of it. After the last man had spoken as above I looked for the Dr. and saw him in his seat, having the appearance of one who had been hit by a hard blow which had somewhat confused him. He was, however, holding on to his jewel of a silent tongue, evidently wishing that he had not broken loose.

A Mr. Geo. Happ, then rose and attacked me, when upon Mr. Hodgkins turned his guns upon him, with as deadly effect as upon the Dr. He gave the following as a conversation between himself and Happ.

"If I was after a murderer—a Mason—whose hands were reeking with blood, and I had him cornered, and about to lay my hands upon him you would consider it your duty to secrete him, and thus defeat justice?" "No, not that!" was the reply; "but I should consider it my duty to warn him of his danger; I am bound as a Mason to do it." After stating this Mr. Hodgkins turned to Happ and said: "Havn't I stated our convereation fairly?' "Y-o-u h-a-v-e!" said the poor minion of the lodge, to the intense disgust of his brethren of mystic tie and to the great amusement of the Antis and others. More anon.

J. L. Barlow.

Elder Barlow at Constableville.

Constableville, N. Y., Oct. 9, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Dear Sir:—"Light is sown," etc., again, "One soweth and another reapeth," so Scripture saith. May there be more to sow, and more to reap. But one must sow in order that others may reap while yet we also shall reap.

There having been in the past some light sown in this vicinity, and some having reaped, it came to pass in the good providence of God that Elder J. L. Barlow came to our place, and sowed light, Sept. 28th and 29th, upon the darkness of secretism; sowed it in the minds and hearts of the people; from which sowing we hope much light and even joy may grow, and be reaped even by those in darkness hitherto. We have hope of this, because the Lord has heretofore somewhat stirred this ground and because Bro. Barlow so "dibbled" in the seed, that with the rain of heaven and the sun, and the wind, there is promise of growth. May it be "some thirty, some sixty, some an hundred fold," yet all for the Lord. But here, as in all labor in the Lord's vineyard, "precept must be upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little;" for there is great opposition both by unbelievers and by those professing Christ, the Light. "And this is the condemnation that light is come into the world and men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil." "Whoso readeth let him understand."

Again, there was good attention given, while the light was being sown, with the exception of a little uneasiness upon the part of a "craftsman" or two and the going out of a few, the best of order was observed by all during the lectures, many evidently hearing in the full sense of the word.

True, some "kick against the pricks," showing that truth and light still pricks if any choose to kick against them. And we are glad; glad so many came to hear; glad that good order and good attention characterized the meetings; hopeful that this people will be willing and desirous to hear and know more upon this subject of secretism.

Yours, &c.,
M. E. Fisk.

Correspondence.

Murder by Masons in Mississippi.

We are permitted to publish the following extract from a private letter from central Mississippi. No doubt the little value placed upon life in such regions results largely from the hope of protection and escape if arrested given by the lodge:

A most horrible murder was committed a few miles from here last week by a Mason. He went in the night to the house of a widow woman, who was living on his father's place (his father is a Mason) and dragging her out into the yard, shot her dead and left her lying there. He then went to Caledonia, called up some of his brother Masons and told them what he had done. He went round there till eight o'clock in the morning, arranging his business matters, I suppose, and then mounted his horse and rode off, no attempt being made to arrest him. Another young man held the woman up against a tree while the other shot her. The murderer's father had this woman and her son living with him and had promised them, or the young man, a horse, saddle and $100, when he became of age. He became of age some time last spring. Some weeks since he asked his employer for his pay and report says Barentine (the father of the man who killed the woman,) ran at him and was about to kill him when his son came up and said, "Don't kill him here in the field, father. Wait till night." He did not kill him in the field, but the young man has been missing about four weeks and I have heard that his mother, the murdered woman, said "the last time she saw her son, old Barentine was taking him toward the river in his night clothes." Soon after this report got out, young Barentine killed her. Some say the missing man has been seen at his uncle's, but it is not believed by many.

OUR MAIL.

David Weeks, Wauseon, O., writes:

"We like your paper. It is after my own heart. I always did admire a man that stands up for Christ and deals out the unvarnished truth."

Joseph B. Thompson, Delta, O., writes:

"The Freemasons down here are bitterly opposed to the Cynosure, and, in fact, to most everything else that does not run in their channel. The Lord help you to keep the fire burning, so that if the people do join them, they do it with their eyes wide open."

E. B. Maurer, Melmore, O., writes:

"The Cynosure is a welcome guest at my house. I love the principles advocated by it. In this village there are four lodges—Masonic, Odd-fellows, Sons of Temperance and Patrons. Truly "men love darkness rather than light." How long shall this thing,—the image of the beast,—continue? Yours for truth, light, and a sanctified church."

Riley Bartlett, Lewis River, Wash. Ter., writes:

"God bless you dear brethren in your noble work. Go on, and bring to light these hidden mysteries of iniquity. Yours for a pure Gospel and a faithful ministry."

P. Bacon, Wheatogue, Ct., writes:

"I feel that this work must go forward, and I want to do my part."

Joshua Falkenbridge, Ashley, Pa., writes:

"Secret societies are very strong here."

Hope Davis, Carpenterville, Ill., writes:

"There is a Methodist minister in this place who told me the reason he joined the Masons was that he was going a long journey among strangers, and Masons advised him to join. How does this agree with the statement 'We ask no one to join us?' The Lord is stronger than the strong man, and I believe truth will triumph over error."

A young friend who sends us his name writes the following:

"I am a young man nineteen years of age. Have never joined any secret societies yet, and never shall. Go on with your good work; I hope to be 'in at the death' of Masonry. Will do all I can to get you subscribers, and hope the Cynosure will indeed become 'a power in the land." Julius.

We thank you for these good words and wish you success. Why not sign your own name? Julius certainly is not more royal.

A. M. Durfee, Sherman, N. Y., writes:

"You may count in the future at least one new subscriber per month from me. Daylight begins to dawn. All hail!"

We thank you for the pledge. Expect its fulfilment and hope others will follow your example.

E. Darling, Paint Creek, Mich., writes:

"I wish I could get others to view this matter in its true light. But my good Presbyterian brother is so conservative. Why, it won't do. It will make division in the church. I do not think any good will come of it. In fact it is hard to get men to read. There is a grange organized in this neighborhood. My townsman expects to go to Washington on this Masonic hobby. Truly when the wicked walk on every side the vilest men are exalted."

S. M. Crocker, Wellington, O., writes:

"I feel as if I could not do without it (the Cynosure). It is next to my Bible."

Chas. M. Thomas, Wheeling, Ia., writes:

"I cannot do without it (the Cynosure.) I have taken it from the first number. It is the only paper I take. I would have it if I had to pay ten dollars per year. I esteem it next to my Bible, and the Guide to Holiness. You may set me down for a life subscriber. I have just returned from a visit to Nebraska. I distributed a quantity of grange tracts and Cynosures. I cannot do much in a pecuniary way, but I can and will pray for a pure reformation; it is the Lord's cause, and must and will prevail."

This friend is in his eighty-third year.

Rev. J. P. Shattuck, E. Deering, Me., writes:

"We have no interest except in the cause of right, and in that case we think each individual personally responsible. We are hoping to get a number of subscribers. We lend our papers and tell those who are taking them to keep theirs' moving also. One gentleman, in all sincerity, said he had no idea 'the Masons were such a society.' 'Let there be light.'"

George Brown, Gaines, N. Y., writes:

"I believe that Masons are the most dangerous beings on the globe. I have lost over six thousand dollars by them. I am told that I must join them in order to get it back. I would just as soon join a set of highwaymen."

Francis M. Waldron, Cascade, Minn., writes that the Masons call him and the Cynosure bad names, and say we are opposing Masonry for the sake of getting into power. Such arguments will sooner or later be rated at their true value. What bearing do they have on the facts that Masonry is an absolute despotism, a swindle, pretending that its secrets have not been revealed; pretending to give men valuable information concerning science, art and religion; pretending to have true charity; and, worst of all, pretending to save immortal souls? Is there any sin in attempting to get into power sufficiently to drive a band of conspirators against equal rights, justice and good government from our country, or deprive them of the means of obtaining the moncy, the manhood, and in many instances, of ruining the souls of young men?

Mrs. A. Banks, Northville, Mich., orders some tracts and books, and writes:

"You may think I am going into the business, but I mean to do all the good an old woman can."

We are glad to welcome you into the band of workers.

G. Worden, Pottsdam, N. Y., writes:

"I have no time to look for subscribers at present. I will try to get a few if I can when my work is off my hands so I can leave a day or two."

Samuel Russell, Wethersfield, Ill., writes:

"Your sheet advocates true loyalty to God and man. It is just what we need."

Dr. G. W. D. White, Boone, Ia., writes:

"Im trying to influence my friends to take the Cynosure. I tell them that it is next to the Bible; and that if they will send for it and do not like it I will refund their money."

Curtis Cogswell, Deer Lick, O., writes:

"The great trouble with us is, we have no lecturers here against secret societies. I hope the good Lord will send us one before long. I am still doing all I can in the good cause and shall while I live."

Can the Ohio agent arrange lectures for this place?

Rev. B. G. Wise, Ottawa, O., writes:

"I have been a reader of this paper for the last four years. I admire its tone. Think that it is a paper that is theologically sound and is what the public needs. I have been opposed to all secret societies ever since God converted my soul. I oppose secret societies and all other popular sins? I will do what I can for the Cynosure. God bless you and the Association."

W. R. Morley, Brush Creek, Iowa, writes:

"There is a Freemason's lodge here, and a great part of the farmers have joined the grange."

P. Cromwell, Ithaca, O., writes:

"I think a great deal of the Cynosure and cannot do without it."

John Miller, Wauseon, O., writes:

"I have had the kind and invaluable visits of the Cynosure from the beginning; expect to have them to the end. It is one of my best friends. Could not see very well how to go forward in this glorious reform without it. Those who do not get it are in some very important respects in the dark. The light is shining here. The cause is progressing in our town and county. Next week, providence favoring, we shall use the ballot, for the first time. We are just now getting into the press. Left a manuscript in the office yesterday which the editor said they would publish. They must do so or fare worse by not doing. We are now fairly in the field. Our banner is unfurled. The watchword, victory or death. Our country must be saved or lost, and that soon. There never was a time in this country when there was so great a war of elements as now. The loud calls for men and means must be heard and respected. Sixty-five summers and as many winters have passed over my head, and now I am an invalid. Still I can watch and pray and fight. Fighting, I shall die. Dying, I shall live evermore."

J. B. Nessell, Ellington, N. Y., writes:

"I am decidedly in favor of our National Anniversary being held at Pittsburgh the second week in June, next.'

D. Baker, Remington, Ind., writes of a murderer who escaped being hung through Masonic influence. The action of the lodge on this criminal Mason's case came into the hands of the administrator of the estate of the clerk of the lodge who stated the circumstances to Mr. Baker so the proof is complete. The murderer is now at liberty.

B. G. Stillman, De Ruyter, N. Y., writes:

"Rev. J. L. Barlow has given some very acceptable lectures on the secret orders at Lincklaen and at De Ruyter about the middle of last month."

Mrs. Olive Voice, Alden, Ill., writes:

"I feel that I have but a little while to stop here and want to do all I can while I stay. I should like to help start that Antimasonic Publishing House in Chicago. I may yet send the first dollar to that fund."

Jas. W. Hussong, Sanford, Ind., writes:

I took the first degree of Masonry about eight years ago and I have never been to lodge since. We are cursed with Masonry here, in our church and out of it. I have been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church for thirty-seven years."

Samuel D. Greene, Chelsea, Mass., writes:

"Rev. McNary's sermon is doing good. I distributed them among our church members. They seem like a little leaven which now and then throws up evidence that they are doing the work, and had I the means to scatter them more freely I believe it would not be long before the main lump would be leavened."

Rev. E. L. Harris, Delavan, Wis., writes:

"Press the war to the enemies' gate. Let your motto be 'No quarter to anti-Christ.'"

LESSON xliv.—NOV. 1, 1874.—THE FIG TREE WITHERED.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK xi. 12-14, and 19-26. Commit all; Primary verses 13, 14.

12 And on the morrow, when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry.

13 And seeing a fig tree afar off having leaves, he came, if haply he might find anything thereon: and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet.

14 And Jesus answered and said unto it, No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. And his disciples heard it.

19 And when even was come, he went out of the city.

20 And in the morning, as they passed by, they saw the fig tree dried up from the roots.

21 And Peter calling to remembrance saith unto him, Master, behold, the fig tree which thou cursedst is withered away.

22 And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God.

23 For verily I say unto you, that whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith.

24 Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

This chapter gives the triumphal entry of our Lord into Jerusalem. This was his presentation to the Jews as king (Zech. ix. 9). The account given by Matthew (see Home Readings) is very full. The scene was peaceful and grand; he was "the Prince of Peace." The entry was made on Sunday, (from this event it is called Palm Sunday), and at night he returned to Bethany (Mark xi. 11). On Monday, as he went to the city, the fig tree was cursed. On Tuesday it was found withered. Ask your teachers where Jesus spent each day and night of that week (called passion week).

What is the first topic? Where had Jesus spent the night? (verse 12.) Perhaps he had not eaten. Was he able to supply food? (Mark vi. 35-42; viii. 4-9.) Did Jesus have any other food except such as all others ate? (Matt. iv. 4; John iv. 31-34.) What does Jesus hunger for now? It is the hunger of love and compassion. Could you give Jesus anything to eat? What does he say about feeding him in Matt. xxv. 34-40? Does he expect this from his children?

What is the second topic? What kind of a tree did Jesus see? (verse 13.) Ask your teachers about this tree. Was it time for figs? (verse 13.) Why then did they expect fruit on this? (It made promises; the leaves on a fig tree indicate fruit, and it was not time for them to have been gathered.) How did Jesus know there was no fruit? (verse 13.) Could he be deceived? What did the tree have? Are leaves necessary and beautiful? Are they sufficient? Are they the principal thing? Read Luke xiii. 6 9. What does Christ desire from his people? (John xv. 2, 6, 8, 16.) Does he come now? How? Is this your last year of trial.

What is the third topic? Who was it cursed the tree? (verse 14.) What other miracle of destruction did Jesus perform? (Mark v. 11-13.) How many miracles of blessing? (Thirty-one, that are recorded.) These two are warnings. Why was the tree cursed? How may Christians be like this tree? How may unbelievers be like this tree? What was the result of the cursing? (verse 20.)

What is the fourth topic? How do you think the disciples felt? How would the words of Jesus cheer them? What promise is given? (verse 24.) In how many things may I have faith in God? Do you have faith in him? What do you believe?

The Successful Sunday-School Teacher.

Success should be the aim of all in the Sunday-school work. The road leading thereto should be well understood. Having traveled all over the land, and observing the most successful in all departments, I have found that the successful Sunday-school teacher has the following characteristics:

1. Self government. He controls self—is master of his own passions and appetites; and in this he almost unconsciously controls his class. This is a natural law and is a sure passport to success.

2. Punctuality—always on time. This gives the class confidence. Knowing their teacher will be present at the time, they will make every effort to be there on time. Lazy teachers make lazy scholars. Promptness, then, is indespensable.

3. Be posted in the subject. No teacher can be successful who does not keep well posted in the lesson he desires to teach his scholars. Whenever your pupils get it into their heads that they know as much, or more than you, your influence over them is gone. Study well your subject during the week at odd times, and you will never feel that barrenness which so terribly afflicts many teachers. The folly of attempting to teach chidlren that which we do not fully understand ourselves, is seen in the following anecdote: A Sunday-school lecturer undertook to give the school his views of the omnipresence of God. He told them that God was everywhere—yes, everywhere at the same time, etc. "Why, children, I will make it plainer to you. God is in the cellar—God is in the garret—God is in the well, and God is in the —the"—"Well, mister," said a little fellow, jumping up, "very much interested and excited, "Is Dod in my pot-et?" "Certainly, he is in your pocket," said the lecturer, very firmly. The little fellow began to feel for God in his pocket, when he exelaimed, 'Well, mister, I dess I dot you now, tause I haint dot de pants on what dot de pot-et in." A most uproarous laugh ensued.

4. Set a good example. Let your life each day be a lesson to your pupils. Keep thyself pure. Be an example to others, is no less the duty of the Sunday-school teacher than the minister. His calling is hardly second to the minister's. If any difference he has this advantage—he works on better material.

5. Show sympathy for your class. Greet them affectionately and enter into all their interests. Meet them in the rehearsals, and help them in learning the songs—for, indeed, if possible, the Sunday-school teacher should be a singer—but if not a singer, he can show that he feels an interest in all that is of benefit to his class. Don't be everlastingly finding fault, but rather encourage them, and show them that you appreciate their good qualities, and you will always find your class to be your friends. You should be a Christian, and always remember them in your prayers. If they are sick, visit them, and thus comfort their hearts. This kindness will not be lost. It may come back to you with large interest in other years to come.

6. Keep your class busy during the entire session. Many leave the class after the mere reading of the lesson. This should never be done. Question them, and help them to a proper understanding of the subject. Fill up all the time. Remember, only one trip through the world, and no coming back to rectify mistakes or make up lost opportunities.—Church's Musical Visitor.

Masonic History.

[Anti-masonic Review, 1829.]

In Great Britain Freemasonry began; in the South of England; in the city of London; in Charles street, Covent Garden; in Apple-tree tavern; on mechanic's holiday, 24th June, A. D. 1717. The mother of all Freemasonry was then organized with a heart and head. Mr. Anthony Sayer, was then elected first Grand Master. Men of any trade or profession were made free and accepted Masons, but only this mother lodge had at that time authority to receive them. They collected materials for a book of constitutions, A. D. 1718—19, and A. D. 1720, many of these "were too hastily burnt by some unscrupulous brethren, who were alarmed at the intended publication of Masonic constitutions." Preston p. 171. "The year A. D. 1720 is remarkable beyond any other which can be pitched upon by historians, for extraordinary and romantic projects, proposals, and undertakings, both private and national, and which, therefore, might be recorded as a perpetual memento—never to leave it in the power of any set of designing men to put in practice a shameful imposition upon the credulty of people."—Mortimer's History of England, Vol. 3, page 302.

A. D. 1723, the first Masonic book issued from the press. A. D. 1724, the first charity fund was commenced. A. D. 1726, the first Provincial Grand Masters were appointed, and then it is believed that Masons began to be passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, and raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason in common lodges. This high power was certainly retained some years solely by the mother lodge, and its four constituent parts in London. See Preston, No. 34, marked k. k. page 305. It was the custom to pass and raise only in the mother lodge. See Smith, p. 73. "A. D. 1727 the authority of the Grand Lodge of England was universally acknowledged throughout Europe." Smith, p. 67, which no doubt is true so far as this, that every lodge in Europe was then in England in Europe. A deputation was sent to Madrid in Spain, to constitute a lodge in that city. Smith, page 67. Preston, p. 179. He does not say who was sent; but the Duke of Wharton, one of the early Grand Masters, having spent his estates by rioting and debauchery, deserted England in 1725, joined the Pretender, and dwelt at Madrid, 1727. This Duke probably welcomed the deputies.

A. D. 1728 a patent for a Provincial Lodge issued for Bengal in the East Indies. Preston, p. 179. "This proved the first introduction of Masonry into that part of the world." Smith, p. 68. "In 1729 Freemasonry was introduced into the East Indies. Lawrie, p. 118. A. D. 1730 a patent was issued for New Jersey in America, but it does not appear to have been effectual. The first foothold gained by Freemasonry in North America, was at Boston A. D. 1733. A. D. 1734, a second edition of the book of constitutions was ordered. The breach between ancients and moderns appeared; and the book and the breach were made public and outright A. D. 1738; in which year also the first bull of the Pope was issued against Freemasonry.

The first Masonic Hall of which we have any record, is in Great Queen street, Lincolns-inn-fields, London. The first stone was laid A. D. 1775. Beneath it was deposited a plate with this inscription: (See Smith p 83, Preston p. 310.)

The Grand Lodge translate latomorum, in their inscription, for this very good reason, that no Latin scholar would otherwise divine its meaning. The ancient name of Freemasons "in latina lingua," the fraternity have been desperately puzzled to find, and we must think they made a small mistake in selecting "latomi" for their heaven-born order. Neither Ainsworth nor Young make us acquainted with the Masonic word, "latomi, orum." They give "Latomiae, vel lautumiae. arum. pl. f. (a Las, lapis, and Tome, sectio.) (1) Quarries of stone, whither slaves condemned and vagabonds were sent to work. (2) A prison at Syracuse so called. (3) Synced. A prison. Plaut."—Young's Lat. Dic.

Latomiae, then, is the name of the trade, and "latomi" is the name of the craftsmen, that is, slaves and vagabonds condemned to the quarries. This is the genuine wit of the mother lodge of Freemasons; let the whole fraternity throw up both hands, the grand hailing sign, and say: So mote it be.

TRANSLATION.

"In the 15th year of George III. May 1st, A. D. 1775, the first stone of Slavemasons Hall, (Aulae Latomorum) was laid by the Rt. Hon. Robert Edward, Lord Petre, Baron of Writtle, Grand Master of Slavemasons of England, accompanied by the Most Worshipful Rowland Holt, Esq. Deputy Grand Master, the Worshipful John Hatch and Henry Daggee, Grand Wardens, with the whole fraternity of brethren. At which time the name of Slavemasons (latomorum) was highly honored, and received the kindness and continuance of kings and princes throughout Europe; and the whole multitude of the brethren on the face of the earth have appointed the Grand Lodge of England to preside over the name of the slaves and vagabonds condemned to work in the quarries.

"It decended from heaven.

"KNOW THYSELF.

"Thos. Sanby, Esq., Prof. of Architecture, R. A. A. Architect.

We give this at length, because it publishes in the most solemn form, both the falsehood and the absurdity of Freemasonry. "It decended from heaven; and the Masons' Lodge in England was, by the brotherhood throughout the world, made to preside over Masonry." What claim had the English Lodge A. D. 1775, to preside over Masonry throughout the world, so formally placed under the corner-stone? The right which a parent has over his offspring, and no other. The claim is a proof of our position, that the Appletree tavern was the birth place of Freemasonry, and that "the whole brotherhood throughout the world" have sprung from the Grand Lodge of London, which was first constituted A. D. 1717, whose first Grand Master was Anthony Sayer, whose first publication was Anderson's Constitutions, whose first Hall was Freemason's Hall, London, and whose first Grand Chaplain was the Rev. Dr. Dodd; the same who repeatedly put other men's names to his notes, and was at last hung at Zybura A. D. 1777, for forgery.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, October 22, 1874.

THE ILLINOIS STATE MEETING.

INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE.

A gentleman who has held important posts, and enjoyed the confidence of the Christian public in several States, was invited by letter to attend and address our approaching State meeting in Chicago. Following is his answer with an editorial reply which deals with the practical and fundamental questions which underlie the reform.

OCT. 12, 1874.

Rev. J. Blanchard,

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of Sept. 26th was received as due. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the subject of secret societies to write anything which would be of value, and I have not the time at present to prepare myself. My own feelings have from childhood been strongly opposed to such organizations. I have refused to join the temperance societies of this kind, and have sometimes annoyed, to say the least, some of my good church members by speaking unfavorably of them. I have, however, opposed them rather from their want of tendency to good, as it seemed to me, than from their own inherent evil.

I have read a little and inquired a little about Masonry, but have not yet learned enough to make up my mind about it. Its oaths seem to me profane, and to have a studied horribleness about them. But in conversing with the men belonging to the lodges I have been convinced that they had no mischief in their hearts; and have been led to think, more than heretofore, that the system was without great influence on politics and in courts at ordinary times. In war, on exciting occasions, and perhaps in rural places, where there is little to occupy the attention, I have no doubt Masonry is made an instrument of mischief. Those in the lower grades of Masonry know but little of the system in comparison with yourself and those who are co-operating with you. They do not, from this fact, feel the force of the arguments addressed to them; while those in the higher grades are not easily approached and drawn into discussion. I can see clearly, therefore, that it is a good thing to get the fullest information before the people, but think it possible that denunciations of Masons themselves might be too strong. I have found them argeeing with me perfectly on the wrong of allowing a secret society to interfere in any way with social, civil and religious duties. And they deny that there is any more influence for evil from such a society than comes from other sources, as from denominational spirit and family relations. You will see that my thoughts are turned in a different direction from what yours take, in seeking for the advancement of our churches and of Christ's kingdom. I trust that we may not work less harmoniously on this account. Your expressions and acts of kindness towards myself, you may be confident are highly appreciated, and shall always be reciprocated according to my ability.

REPLY.

DEAR BROTHER:—I thank you for your candid and good letter. And though I could have wished our opinions more nearly coincided, I believe your hopes will be realized that "we shall not work less harmoniously;" nor do I despair that, allowing for difference of responsibilities and circumstances, we may yet coincide in our ideas and efforts against secret societies.

If, as I thoroughly believe, the five hundred thousand Freemasons, and other thousands in similar night-meeting "orders," practice idolatry and the worship of strange gods in this Christian country, that fact ought to be susceptible of such proof as will satisfy reasonable men of its truth. And, once convinced of its truth, no two Christian men can long differ essentially as to our duty and our wisdom in opposing the lodge. Nor can we differ greatly in our methods. Idolatry and Christianity are antagonisms, as are the beings they worship. And when one believes that the power of these orders over miud is a religious power, residing and working in their rites, they will be regarded as standing related to Christianity, as are the religions of the American Board and of Juggernaut. And Christians, who are Masons, will be looked upon as those Samaritans "who feared Jehovah and served their own gods." And, farther, if the nature of these "orders" is idolatrous, asking Freemasons their opinions concerning their working in churches and court-houses, is like asking spirit-consulters, who are not yet corrupted wholly by that evil, and who know little or nothing of its nature, their opinion of its tendencies and effects.

You say you have been convinced by Masons with whom you have conversed, that they "have no mischief in their hearts;" and that the system "is without great influence on politics and in courts, "etc. Allow me to suggest that the Masons with whom you have conversed may be nearly or quite as ignorant of the nature and actual operations of their system, or even more so, than yourself. Secret within secret; each upper degree sworn to concealment from all below, ordinary Masons, who join from shallow curiosity, or to get behind the screen and gain Masonic favors, are necessarily as ignorant of the ends sought and the means and purposes of the leaders, as the priests you meet on the street are of the purposes of the College of Cardinals. Masons, as a rule, do not trust each other or the rest of mankind. Hence the ignorance of their masses. And if you have chanced on a Freemason like Quint, who does understand the system and loves it, he will deceive you if he keeps his oath. Dr. Quint deceived the people of Oberlin, Pres. Fairchild included, grossly, as we now have evidence. And a Knight Templar, who was class-mate of Rev. R. B. Howard, of Princeton, while they were students in Bowdoin College, called on him while I was with him this summer, and made Howard believe that he had not met with Masons for three years, by telling him he had not been inside of a "lodge" during that time. Whereas he was a Knight Templar and met in a "Commandery;" and was then on an electioneering tour to get a brother Knight Templar elected Superintendent of Schools in this State.

But as to the main question whether Masons are now working extensive mischief in society, look at a few facts which creep out before the public. Temples have been built and completed in Philadelphia, New York and Boston, within these few years, costing over three million dollars: that in Philadelphia alone cost one million and a half by their published reports. And during the erection of these immense piles, a similar activity and expense in building Masonic temples and halls, have been going on throughout the United States. Whoever supposes that the millions on millions of money gathered and disbursed by lodges working near every court-house, legislature, and church in the United States and territories, to be without great influence "on politics and in courts," certainly miscalculates the power of money and men banded together by secret oaths and rites such as now rule the populations of Asia and Africa. Yet it is true, that an ordinary village lodge, surrounded and counteracted by half a dozen Christian churches, is a comparatively harmless affair; and its members, drawn in by vulgar curiosity, the desire of secret advantages; or to prevent others taking advantage of them, mean little direct mischief. But they do immense mischief by throwing the shield of their character over the lodge, and winning others to join. They are the outer gyrations of the Masonic whirlpool whose circles surround our globe. Multitudes of this sort, seldom attend lodge-meetings, but stand outside, smile on Masons, return their grips, and are used as stool-pigeons to decoy others into the nets of Satan which they seldom enter themselves! By their moral influence, they are the pimps and panders of the lodge, and stand related to it as literal pimps and panders do to the brothel; and are often more wicked than the weak and worthless creatures whom they lure.

But are the lodges nets of Satan? Or are they moral negatives, doing, as Napoleon said, "no great harm and very little good;" or at worst, only evil, as the clan spirit in denominations and families is evil, by interference with 'social, civil, and religious duties?" Is the lodge, in short, entitled to the pre-eminence in mischief we give it? This was the one perpetual question put to us abolitionists concerning slavery, which, events have shown, never was relatively over estimated as a source of danger and social destruction.

The answer is that the lodge is a false religion. And, as the true religion underlies every virtue, false religion underlies and supports every vice. It is what makes heathen countries heathen; and heathenism includes every vice. The curse of mankind is religious ceremonies without Christ. Such are the ceremonies, prayers, altars, priests, oaths and obligations of the lodge. And their weekly routine of performances, is slowly but certainly changing the American character to resemble that of Mexicans, Spaniards, or outright pagans, whose religion is without virtue because invented by men; and, being itself a falsehood, makes the whole man false. This tendency of Freemasonry to unsettle and enslave conscience to human authority, has of late been strikingly illustrated in England by the Marquis of Ripon, who, while in this country, negotiating the Alabama treaty, was Grand Master of English Masons, but has lately gone over to popery,—from the shams of the lodge to shams of the Vatican.

But what gives the lodge its pre-eminence above all systems of error in this country is its oath. As Christ is omitted to take in Jew, Pagan and Mohammedan; and, as rejectors of the Son have not the Father, the lodge-oath is not the oath of the true God, but another. And he who puts a second oath into a man's conscience, divides and confounds his moral nature, so that he gradually becomes incapable of moral obligation.

Nor is this all. As right is not local but universal, and the moral system of the universe is one, resting at bottom on the one true and living God, who has commanded us to swear by his name, Freemasonry, by displacing the true oath, and substituting another, which yet is not another, displaces the true God from the moral system and annihilates the system itself. The oath of the lodge is not an oath, and its moral system is not a moral system. Its pretended moral code is not based on love, but on terror; not on justice, but on partiality; not on Christ, but on Satan. The Masonic oath, therefore, in its theory, not only incapacitates the mind for rational moral action, but displaces God and the moral system of the universe, and substitutes for them an imaginary deity and a penal code of its own. And just so far as it enters into and obtains control of the understanding and faculties of men, just so far theology and ethics, religion and morals, are dispensed with and set aside.

Such, in its theory, is the Masonic oath. Its history is no better. In England, it murdered the author of Jachin and Boaz, and Miller in Belfast. In France, it has been the nest of infidelity and the hatching-place of revolution and massacre. In the Franco-Prussian struggle, it expelled the Christian Emperor and sustained the atheist Commune. And though, from motives of policy, he has a bull against it, the Pope himself was a Freemason, and the lodge is the avant guard of popery. In this country, beside other Masonic executions, it murdered Morgan and defied and defeated the judiciary of New York, though backed by the executive and legislature. It sheltered and sustained the late slavery rebellion It raised the money, in its blue-lodges. for the Kansas foray and murders. It has kept the garments and death-weapons of the Ku-Klux, and is now shifting like Proteus and appearing as the secret "White Leagues." Its forms are a thousand; its nature, one.

Now the only practical question is, how this hydra of religious, moral, and political evil should be opposed. Shall we content ourselves with endeavoring to subvert its principles by propagating the truth? Or shall we make a distinct open issue against it, as was done in the case of slavery?

Doubtless all just methods of opposition are legitimate. But it is very manifest that truth will not overthrow Freemasonry while it sits unquestioned with Christ at the communion table; makes laws for us in the legislature; and sits to enforce them in the jury-box. Respectfully, yours in Christ, J. B.

H. W. Beecher's Theological Record.

To Leonard Bacon, D. D.

I was sorry, my dear sir, when I read your recent letter denouncing the bosom friend of Henry Ward Beecher. Whatever may be true in your views of Mr. Moulton, it seems to me that as a minister of Christ, and as a representative man in the denomination to which you belong, there is another stand-point from which you should look at the men and the matters involved in this scandal. There is a view of the subject which affects the interests of the Christian faith vitally, whether the accused be innocent or guilty; and which is strangely ignored by yourself and others who have spoken to the public in regard to it. On this aspect of the subject somebody ought to say some plain, honest words; and as others have said little, permit me to ask your attention for a few moments.

It seems to me that you have not, as you usually do "given the devil his due," in your phillipic on Mr. Moulton. He at least evinced a sense of moroal fitness, if not of conscience, when he ceased to hear the Plymouth preacher, believing what he did concerning him. He certainly believes in the principle expressed by the adage "honor among thieves." But the charge of unfaithfulness to Mr. Beecher's secret is one more directly against all evidence than any I have ever noticed in the history of biassed judgment. Moulton, by falsehood and by truth, endeavored, from first to last, to suppress every movement that tended to a divulgence of the secret. He made efforts even to prevent the publication of Tilton's letter to yourself, and to arrest proceedings even after the Beecher committee had began their work. There is not an item of evidence which impugns his honesty in these efforts.

But considering the subject in the interests of Christianity, Mr. Moulton's character, past or present, is of little importance. Precisely the opposite is true in regard to Mr. Beecher; and a verdict of not guilty, although due to him, if the charges were not proved, might be a greater injury to the religion of Christ than a verdict of guilty. Either will be an evil. A verdict of not guilty will give his teaching larger acceptance in the public mind than it has at present, and a verdict of guilty will affect many others as forespoken by one of his lady admirers: "If Henry Ward Beecher is a guilty man, I give up all confidence in mankind in general, and in Christian ministers in particular."

Before writing again in regard to this matter, it seems to others, besides myself, that you ought to study some facts in Mr. Beecher's past history, and especially his heart history, as revealed by himself, in the present scandal. As forty years of service is urged as evidence of character, some peculiarities of that service ought to be noticed.

His first sermon when invited to Lawrenceburgh, Indiana, was in condemnation of Universalism. He held in his hand a small Testament from which he read passages and expounded and used them to prove that the impenitent would be consigned to hopeless and remediless misery. At that time and place to preach against Universalism was popular.

When Mr. Beecher left Amherst College, about the last thing he did was to deliver an address against the Colonization Society; about the first address he delivered after he began his ministry at Lawrenceburgh was a speech in favor of colonization, before a society existing in that place.

Mr. Beecher was an outspoken temperance man when he went from the seminary to the church. But a leading member of the congregation, who paid one hundred dollars of the five or six which he received as a salary, was a distiller, and the temperance people were opposed to selling corn to distillers. Here was a difficulty. Mr. Beecher managed it by favoring the sale of corn to the distiller, while he was fervent in denouncing the drunkard, and those who sold him the poison. The distiller shrewdly remarked,—with additional words, which we will not name,—that so long as Mr. B. preached the corn to the distillery, he did not care how he abused those who retailed or used the liquor.

When called from Lawrenceburgh to Indianapolis, the leading man in his congregation was the president of the State Bank of Indiana, a gentleman of unusual financial skill, who kept his bank open when every bank in the North-west had closed. This gentleman was strongly opposed to anti slavery sentiment, and was not willing that the subject should be introduced into the pulpit. Mr. Beecher was asked how he would manage in the circumstances to maintain his professed anti-slavery principles; he replied that he would have nothing to do with abolitionism, but if slavery came in his way he would not fail to denounce it. He went to Indianapolis, and soon after, at the session of the Synod of Indiana. Rev. J. K. Snead, a prominent member of the Synod, introduced a resolution characterizing slavery as a sin which the churches should condemn. Mr. Beecher rose and argued from the Presbyterian Confession of Faith, that it was not proper to introduce the subject of slavery into churches or into ecclesiastical meetings. Mr. Snead and the anti-slavery men in the Synod were surprised and grieved when they found that they had an opponent, instead of an aid, in Henry Ward Beecher.

After the removal of Mr. Beecher to New York, he was located in the most prominent abloition church of the land, except, perhaps, that of Geo. B. Cheever. Mr. Bowen, Lewis Tappan, and men of like convictions, were prominent in the church. Mr. Beecher was soon after heard from as one of the leading abolition preachers in the country. His great genius, and the aptness with which he managed the anti-slavery question, attracted to his church the abolitionists of the city and those visiting the city. He likewise favored, for a time, the phrenological doctrines of the Fowler school, which gathered another class of intelligent people. Not long after he became an earnest woman's suffrage man which gathered still another class of people; and his inimitable mimicry, which became in his pulpit a species of theological buoff, together with a fancy fertile in illustration, made him the most entertaining platform preacher in the world, and gathered into his audience the lovers of genial entertainment on the Sabbath. Then latterly yachting, opening secular libraries on the Sabbath, the gospel to the rich, and the gospel according to Tyndall, a fifth rate novel, fast horses and the Life of Christ, and delphic sayings in regard to all subjects that discriminate between God and mammon, preaching love to his audience on the Sabbath and evincing the spirit of "Raca" in his heart towards his brother ministers of his own city, has certainly made "the world love its own;" abolished the narrow way and opened a world wide avenue to those never "convicted of sin, righteousness and judgement" by the pleasing platitudes of the Plymouth preacher. Whether these peculiarities account for the composition of his congregation or not, it is a well-known fact that his admirers are a conglomerate of the friends of Christ, the world and the flesh,—to say no more.

But a more serious aspect of the subject remains. It was known to Mr. Beecher's relatives, and to some that were not, that his philosophy, both in regard to social and sacred subjects, was peculiar, and such as he would not be likely to utter, in its boldest form, before a Christian congregation. When his sermons began to be published, some of the best men in the denomination remonstrated against the circulation of what they considered sinister attacks upon the vital doctrines of Christ's gospel. Rev. Henry Cowles, D. D., then editor of the Oberlin Evangelist, and certainly a judge of gospel truth, if we have one in the land, noticed Mr. Beecher's doctrine of sin, as published in one of his sermons as follows:—"Every one who stands for gospel truth ought to guard himself, and the public, against some of the theology of these sermons. Mr. Beecher says of himself, "I am perpetually coming short of my standard. I not only do not love right, but I hate it often. I not only do not obey, but I positively disobey. I not only do not seek the straight path, but I rejoice to walk in the broad road." "Now," says Dr. Cowles, "if this is Christian experience, what, we ask, is the sinner's? This is certainly an experience different from Paul's even before he attained his Christian consciousness. Paul saw the right and loved it. This preacher sees it and hates it. Paul did wrong and condemned himself. This man says he walks in the broad road and rejoices in it." If Mr. Beecher's hearers have a like experience, the police ought to keep their eye upon them.

Again, this preacher speaks in the same sermon of the sin which men commit when they fall below their own standard, and says: "We cannot look at it in the light of conscience and find peace, and Christ says, then do not look at in the light of conscience, but in the light of love." This is a proclamation against the law of God written in the heart, as well as a prostitution of the gospel by making Christ the minister of sin." Of this Dr. Cowles says, "the doctrine that you must not look at your conduct in the light of conscience, carried to its legitimate result, would make horrible havoc even of common morality. If a Universalist or an infidel writer were to hold such doctrine, what Christian would not feel bound to protest in defense of a pure Christianity."

You will remember the retirement of Lewis Tappan and his excellent Christian wife from fellowship with the church he had done so much to sustain. He published in the Independent his protest, not against the doctrine of sin, if the writer understood him, but against the corrupt doctrine concerning the Saviour as preached in Plymouth pulpit. Rev. Theodore Cuyler publicly protested against words dishonorable to the gospel uttered at the Tyndall festival. Other protests were uttered, and many good people said nothing, but would read nothing which originated in that quarter. Others still feel, as one of them said, "The preacher and the people of Plymouth Church are idiosyncrasies; let them drift,"—and they drifted!

In this view of the matter, the present writer, with many other retired men like himself, acquiesced regretfully. They believed that the truth was being sacrificed to the glamor that the world attaches to a popular name, and if the infection had been confined to the East these words would not be written. But as in the case of John N. Maffit, a precisely similar case of a great genius in the Methodist church, men in sympathy with the accused at the East, did what they could to bias Western Christians into like sympathy with a corrupt faith, if not a criminal practice.

The Advance, a valuable paper published in Chicago, is widely circulated in Christian families at the West. In this paper Rev. T. K. Beecher, of Elmira, N. Y., (who thinks his brother Henry is only carrying out his philosophy in regard to some social questions) recently published a sermon, which, if not designed to prepare people to palliate lechery, is, at least, an adroit attempt to mystify the minds of the readers of the Advance on the subject. He is urging moderation in proper indulgences, and says, "When the appetite has been piqued and surfeited there can be no more pleasure in food; there remains only the craving appetite of the dyspeptic—the same is true of lechery." . . . "The man who gives himself intemperately to any special pleasure, by that act first separates his chosen joy from the constellation, where, with many others, it shone with glittering allurement, and goes along with it into the darkness, and there even its light forsakes him." "To enjoy cigars all your life, you must not smoke more than two a day—to enjoy wine all your life, you must use it moderately." Now, if this younger Beecher does not put the moderate use of lechery, cigars and wine in the same category of allowable Christian indulgences, he has not used language in its common acceptation. Should the readers of the Advance accept this doctrine, they will be prepared to condone the offense alleged against the Plymouth pastor. The same Beecher likewise says that perjury is in the opinion of some good people right in some cases. Is the Brooklyn case one?

Not only this sermon, but we have had a vindication in advance from Mr. Lyman Abbott, who, we believe, is of the same family with the Rev. Mr. Abbott whom Horace Greeley denounced as the eulogist of that supreme despot and robber, Napoleon 1. Mr. Abbott, the eulogist of Mr. Beecher, is a member of Plymouth Church, and editor of the Christian Weekly of the American Tract Society.

But we have not reached the worst aspect of this case, as it is related to Christian life and doctrine. We do not refer in any wise to the guilt or innocence of Mr. Beecher, in regard to the charge of adultery. We refer to confessed corruption in faith and practice which has been overlooked, if not tolerated, by yourself and others, who are looked to as the defenders of the faith. In one of Mr. Beecher's last letters to Moulton, he writes: "I have a strong feeling upon me, and it brings me great fear, that I am spending my last Sunday, and preaching my last sermon. Oh, my beloved Frank! I shall know you then, and forever hold fellowship with you, and look back and smile at the past."

Now Mr. Beecher, if what he and his friends say be true, knew the character of his bosom friend as well then as he does now. He knew he was a profane man, a sporting man, and a Sabbath-breaker. He knew he was in sympathy and social intercouse with Mrs. Woodhull. His transactions said to be dishonest were known then as now. He even knew that from the time of the alleged adultery, Frank Moulton had ceased to hear him as a preacher, and yet, knowing all this, at the time of this writing, he says, he is going to spend eternity with his "beloved Frank," and be in fellowship with him forever. He knew perfectly that Moulton was in fellowship with Woodhull, and that the heaven of Moulton would be the heaven of Woodhull and Tilton, and yet, in view of his immediate death, he says that he is going to heaven for ever to be in fellowship with this company. Mahomet did not promise a heaven so lurid with the feculence of social impurity.

If the doctrine of this preacher is Christianity, then Christianity is an imposition and a lie. Either Beecher turns the grace of God into lasciviousness, or there is no God. If the members of Plymouth Church go to heaven with their pastor, they go to spend eternity with Beecher, Moulton, Woodhull, Tilton, et id omne genus. This is neither invidious nor denunciatory. It is the only possible construction, in view of the heart utterance of Mr Beecher, when he says that he felt that his last Sabbath had come. It should, at least, teach some people charity towards those whose society both in earth and heaven he preferred to their own.

Mr. Beecher's private life throughout all those four years was consistent with these utterances to Moulton. He says he opposed Tilton's continuance in the Independent because of his loose views of marriage and other social questions; but privately he contributed money in large sums to establish and sustain Tilton's new paper, which he knew was established for the purpose of maintaining the very same views which he held, while in the Independent. Moulton and Beecher both understood the aim of the paper perfectly, and both aided to establish and support this free marriage paper, knowing its purpose. The only difference, according to positive evidence, in this case is, that while Moulton and Tilton avowed their opinions, Beecher concealed his sympathy and contributions from the public. And yet, if he had come out and openly preached as he virtually does to Moulton and Tilton, Blessed are the impure in heart for they shall see God, it is evident now, by the following which he receives, that a large portion of his own congregation, and many professed Christians and Christian ministers, would have condoned his sin, and continued to follow as the tail of the dog.

Another humiliating evidence of a debased moral consciousness in some of the Congregational churches, is the fact that when Beecher assumed the editorial management of the Christian Union, he inaugurated, as the office editor, Oliver Johnson, a man who honestly and openly rejects the evangelical faith. Mr. Johnson sustained the Plymouth pastor when he sanctioned the free marriage doctrine by marrying Mr. Richardson to a woman whose affections he has sought and won while her husband was still living; a woman who had obtained a divorce directly contrary, as you know, to the law of Christ. This Oliver Johnson, in a letter to Tilton, admits personal knowledge of the fact that Beecher had done Tilton a great wrong. Beecher knew that Johnson believed this, and Johnson knew and wrote that Beecher had been thus guilty; and yet he serves in a professedly religious newspaper as the subaltern of this same Plymouth pastor; keeps the secret himself, and urges Tilton to keep the secret, (whatever it was) at all personal sacrifices. This is certainly a pretty nest of birds to hatch out the newspaper literature that is to edify Congregational families.

It is not our design to express an opinion either in regard to the alleged crime of adultery or the present character or future condition of the men that Mr. Beecher assigns to heaven in connection with himself. What we say is that if Jesus Christ is a true teacher in regard to the conditions of eternal life, the Plymouth pastor is a false teacher—false to God and to the souls of men. There are men of character, who, being ignorant of gospel life, may honestly accept the delusion that Mr. Beecher teaches to his worldly friends; but they are not men of conscience or character who profess the evangelical faith, and yet give their influence to a preacher who promises heaven to the impenitent and the impure. If the heaven to which Mr. Beecher says he and Moulton and Tilton are going is the heaven of Christ; if his desire that such a woman as Mrs. Morse, (Mrs. Tilton's mother) should be his mother-in-law, and call him son, (which she has concented to do) while at the same time she tells him that his Sabbath jokes in Plymouth pulpit almost make her think there is no God; if such a life, such doctrine, such a heaven, are the products of the gospel, then the sooner the gospel can be destroyed the better for the world. And, if Yale College in its influential president and theological teachers, is to affiliate with a man whose heart revealings and public teaching are subversive, not only of the doctrines of religion, but of the principles of morality, and to engage him to instruct theological students professing to minister in Congregational churches, then the sooner Yale College, as at present constituted, can be suspended the better for the churches of Christ. If the New Testament be true the man who preaches that Christ came to save men in their sins, not from their sins is an anti-Christ.

Seed-Time.

You know the story of the dragon's teeth—
How, sown by Cadmus in the Grecian heath,
They grew apace
To harnessed men endued with warlike grace!
A dreadful yield,
Even from the haunted soil of fable's field!

There is another story I would tell—
How in one night a million tear-drops fell,
And how the great Life-giver stored them well—
And how, at morn,
Of these a million spotless flowers were born.

When sin is sown, death is the crop it yields!
Lord, save the fields!
When tears are sown, the tears of love and sorrow,
They blossom on the morrow.
The dragon's teeth—they are the seeds of war,
Seeds that the heavens abhor!
Oh! till the madness of such planting cease,
Weep, mothers! weep—and sow the seeds of peace! N. Y. Tribune.

Reminiscences of Guizot.

The telegraph brought the intelligence of M. Guizot's death. It was not unexpected by his friends and admirers. The panegyrics and criticisms on his life will for a while attract the attention of the people and finally give place in those of other men. I wish in this communication simply to recall some of the impressions I have of this distinguished man as a Protestant layman and as one of the leading minds of the French Reformed Synod, held in Paris during the months of June and July, 1872. It will be remembered that this branch of Christ's church had been deprived of the privileges of holding such a Court of Judicature since the one held in London in 1659; that it had no legal existence from the revocation of the Edict of Nantes till 1802; and that before and after that period it was subject to a series of persecutious, more or less atrocious, which came very near to be its destruction. While the Concordat, granted by the First Consul, gave it a legal existence, united it to the State, and conceded to it the right of having Consistories and Provincial Synods, it withheld the Church Sessions and the General Synod. As the two bodies are the most essential of the four administrative courts of the Church, or, as a member of the late Synod stated on the floor of that assembly, "They are the feet and the head of the church, which he (Napoleon) was willing to let live; but feared to see it walking too fast and thinking too well, he thought it prudent to leave them in the shade," it is no wonder that without these essential courts, for want of this bond of union and discipline, errors and disorders were the results of this disorganized church.

Efforts were made from time to time to obtain the permission of the successive governments to hold such a meeting for the reorganization and the better regulation of the church by the adoption of a Confession of Faith, etc. These endeavors proved fruitless. M. Guizot is blamed for not having used his influence, while a minister in Louis Philippe's Cabinet, to procure this to the church. His answer to this censure may not be satisfactory to all who think about his course, but it is evident that he did much while in power or the peaceful enjoyment of the Protestant church's privileges and for their prosperity.

In 1871, as soon as peace and order were secured to France, and while the embers of that terrible scourge of war —fires, desolation and death—were still smouldering, new steps were taken to obtain this favor of the Government of M. Thiers. And here permit me to say that with a few exceptions the Protestants of France are Republicans. It is only under such a form of government that they expect religious freedom and a free and open field for their labors of evangelization. M. Guizot was the chief instrument to secure the decree promulgated at Versailles Nov. 29, 1871, which ordered the Consistories of the several Provincial Synods to meet and elect delegates to a General Synod, which, by a subsequent decree dated May 14, 1872, was to meet in Paris on the 6th of June. M. Guizot was a commissioner in that body, took an active part in its organization and deliberations, and was one of the leaders in the orthodox rank.

In the French Reformed church there are three different parties which were represented in the Synod, and these are: "The Orthodox;" these were denominated "The Right." The second party which, by the paper they presented for adoption and the speeches made by men of that party, I would call Unitarians; these were "the Center." The third party the Radicals, who called themselves "Liberals" —Librespenseurs—these were "the Left." They were thus denominated from their position in the house facing the platform on which sat the Moderator and officials of Synod.

M. Guizot's seat was between those of Gen. De Chabaud-Latour, the present Minister of the Interior in McMahon's Cabinet, and of Rev. Prof. Bois, of Montauban. They were of "the Right." It was upon M. Bois' paper that the interesting, solemn and most important debate took place during the eight or nine days of sittings. Those attached to the faith of their fathers and to the prosperity of their church felt that the life of their beloved Zion was in danger, and with remarkable zeal and devoted affection for the church, the honor of their Divine Master, they labored and toiled, and through the blessing of God they succeeded to secure the adoption of the paper, the vote being 61 for and 45 against it. It is remarkable how nearly equal the vote stood between the laity and the clergy. Among the orthodox, 30 pastors, 31 elders. Both of the other parties voted against the Bois paper, and the vote was 21 pastors and 24 elders; among these were three who had been ministers, but had ceased so to be.

In the elections for elders last spring the orthodox made considerable progress and increased largely their majority.

When the Synod met, M. Guizot was in his eighty-fourth year, a thin, but hale old man. Quick, active, as if he had been a score or two less. If differences of opinion or difficulties arose in parliamentary usages, etc., he was generally appealed to, and in a few words settled the matter. He was very assiduous in attending the sessions of the Synod, did not absent himself once that I remember, until he asked to be relieved and his alternate was enrolled in his place; but this took place after the most important labors of the Synod had been completed. Besides, he presided at the caucus meeting of the Orthodox party which were held before and while the Confession of Faith was under consideration. He was not one of those men, when you approach them, whose coldness will drive you away, or make you feel uncomfortable, but his genial, courteous and affable ways made one at once at his ease and free. One could not help listening to him with pleasure and veneration. The Radicals, whom he opposed strenuously, honored him for his age, his talents and the sincerity of his convictions. When he spoke on the adoption of the Bois paper, as it was generally known by those who watched the proceedings of that body what day he would speak, the galleries and the part of the grand floor set aside for spectators were crowded.

It was with an unmingled delight that many of us turned from the contemplation of the savant philosophe et homme d'etat to the venerable and experienced Christian and listened to the elloquent old man, who, with impressive and burning words, stood for the faith once delivered to the saints and vindicated the memory of his fathers and the Confession of Faith of the church. He declared himself to be un fils des Huguenots. . . un Chretien de la vieille roche. M. Guizot stated that when quite a youth, an uncle with whom he resided at times, when himself not able, used to send him to the assemblies of the Desert, where young Guizot took his place, led the meeting, and read to the people assembled a sermon selected for the occasion. It was when the people, to worship at all, had to resort to the caves and to the woods of the land. He recalled that time with a great deal of interest, and gave a life-like account of the religious fervor and zeal of those people.—Herald and Presbyter.

A Trifling Incident and its Magnificent Result.

It was a cold winter day, about seventy years ago, when a devout Welsh minister asked a little girl of his parish to repeat the text of the preceding Sabbath. She could not do so, and blushingly pointed to the deep and drifted snow as an excuse for her inability.

Naturally anxious to understand the relation between the snow and the text, the good man asked her to explain. It soon appeared that the Bible, out of which she was wont to learn the text, was owned by a distant neighbor, whom the unusually deep snow had prevented her from visiting. Having no Bible at her own home, she was thus dependent on friends living at a distance for the privilege of reading the word of God, This trifling incident started an inquiry in the minister's mind, which has had wondrous results. He soon found that a large number of his people were without the Scriptures, and unable to buy.

With energy combined with piety, he set out for London, and appealed to the directors of the Religious Tract Society for some kind of organization to supply his poor countrymen with the Bible. His appeal was not in vain. While the thoughtless multitudes were jostling in the streets, and the din of London life deafening the ear, a few noble men retired to an obscure counting room of the city, to devise measures for the formation of a society which should give the Bible to Wales. Their plan was nearly matured, when into the mind of one there flashed a thought—a thought as truly inspired as any in the canon; it was heaven-born, and simply sought human lips to give expression. Up rose one of the small company; a glow was in his face, and a magnificent faith in his heart. "If a Bible Society for Wales," he said "why not a Bible Society for the World?" Noble words were those. They fell on the few auditors like a voice from God—like a trumpet blast from the sky.

The British and Foreign Bible Society had its beginning at that moment. The lips which spoke it into life have been dead for many years, but who, save the Almighty, can measure the work they have wrought? The society of which this was the origin, held held its sixty-eighth anniversary in London, on the first of May. It has agencies in all the principal countries of Europe, and a single glance at the figures of the past year is sufficient to indicate the amazing greatness of its work. During the years 1871–2, it has circulated in France 250.000 copies of the Scriptures; in Germany, 490,000; in Austria, 126,000; in Russia, 145,000; in Egypt, Syria, and Palestine, 29,000; in China, 59,000; besides smaller numbers in other parts of the world. Among German families bereaved in the late Franco-Prussian war, no less than 224,000 copies of the Scriptures were distributed in eleven months, and the general good results of the Society's work in Germany have been such, that the German Christians design organizing a Society which will supply the home demand without any further call on England. In Italy, a Bible Society has been launched under the very shadow of the Vatican. Of what a noble family of children is this British and Foreign Bible Society already the mother! To the work for God which she is still destined to do, it seems impossible to draw any bounds. The receipt and expenditures for the past year from ordinary sources, were greater than ever before; the former being 184,196*l*. 12*s*. 2*d*, and the latter about a thousand ponnds less.—Selected.

Going Home.

It was scarcely more than an hour's drive along a quiet country road. For a mile or two the reluctant village straggled after. Then we past solitary farm-houses and laborer's cottages, a vineyard, an old graveyard, and the rugged sides of a rocky hill. And then a little belt of wooded swamp lands stretched out its arms of fir and pine and hemlocks, full of spicy odors, and merry little birds, and squirrels and grey rabbits, all the summer long. In the winter this was the place where the fairies hung out their washings, and sometimes their pearls and diamonds. Beyond, the road grew rougher and narrower, winding up hill and down hill, over tumbling brooks and a noisy river.

But every rod of the way was as familiar as our father's house. We knew where and when to look for the waxen cups of shining laurel, for pink azaleas, for the earliest May flowers, and the latest trails of clematis and swinging southern moss. We knew, too, when a meadow fence had been built or mended, and saw, with ready interest, every patch of new shingles on a wayside house or barn. We noted whose haying was coming on earliest, whose wood pile was largest, and whose corn promised best; while every face we met was the face of a friend. So with many a nod and smile, and word of neighborly greeting, we drove at last faster, as we came to the end of our journey, up to our father's door.

They had heard from within the sound of our coming wheels, and there, on the threshold, stood our mother, smiling and stretching out her hands. Presently, from across the street and across the gardens, one and another of our friends came in, always so glad to see us. Glad to see us for ourselves, and glad for the ripple of outside life we brought to the quiet neighborhood. The table was laid with the choicest of farm and dairy; the little family troubles were brought out for considertion and sympathy, as well as the family joys; and for our brief stay we were the center of the household and neighborhood.

But of all the pleasures of the welcome home, the smiling mother with outstretched hands is the dearest symbol now.

It is eight years since the eager hands were folded for their rest under the grass on the hillside. Folded forever! We go and come, and come and go, but they beckon us nevermore. We see the white headstone that says so little and yet so much, from the windows of the room that was hers, but we see nothing besides.

Has that loving heart forgotten, then? Are the hands to be stretched out to us never again? Are the swift feet stayed forever in their coming? No! no! It is only that our journey home is not yet accomplished. This empty, hungry, aching "mother-want" will be one day satisfied.

We are on our journey, up hill, down hill, and in all sorts of weather. Along familiar scenes and among friendly faces. Nearer and nearer, faster and faster. Already they within the veil may have heard the sound of our coming, and be pressing to meet us with outstreaching welcome. The things which God hath prepared have not entered into the heart of man, but we have each our own thought and expectation of heaven. And for me, my heaven is always as a going home. And as the heavens are higher than the earth, so will be the joy of that home coming higher than the joy of this.—Francis Lee, in Christian Union.

INVOLUNTARY SELF REVELATIONS.—Every day is a day of judgment—a day of reaping as you have sown, of revelations of what you are. "No man is concealed," nor can be. Not one of you can go through life, all the way, with the reputation and character of a good scholar if you are not really such. Things will be constantly occurring to reveal you, and society will not be long in ascertaining your precise height and depth, your solid contents, and your superficial dimentions. In the same way, you cannot pass for what you are not in respect to actual moral character; somehow or other you will come to find yourself weighed and measured. You will pass among your fellows for what you are worth, and for nothing more. Depend upon it, the best way to be thought good is to be good; the surest way of being had in reputation is to have a character.—Binney.

"Only Currant Wine."

Two little boys of twelve years old, cousins and constant companions, trudged up a steep hill together, carrying between them a basket of apples. They were to deliver them to the landlady of the "Cross Keys" tavern, and they had carried them over a mile from the farm where they lived. First they had crossed the bridge over the Sowden run, a narrow plank, without railing, where they had to walk carefully, for the run, though narrow, was very deep. Then came the long steep hill, and the boys were very tired when at last the "Cross Keys" was reached, and the basket of apples deposited on the porch. Mrs. Morrison, the rosy-cheeked, pleasant-voiced landlady, came out to pay the boys, and have the basket emptied. "Come in," she said kindly, "and rest awhile. That is a heavy basket for young arms, and a long walk for young legs."

So the boys went into the bright bar-room, and sat down by a stove, for the air was sharp though it was only October. Pretty soon, Mrs. Morrison came with a great slice of cake for each one, and a glass of red wine, sweet smelling and tempting. Walter Lennox, the older of the cousins, took the cake with a "Thank you," and Harry took his also. But Mrs. Morrison said:

"Drink the wine. It will warm you."

"Thank you," Walter said, "mother does not like me to drink wine!"

"Oh, but this is only currant wine, home made. It can't hurt you. Drink it up!" and the laudlady set down the tray and went to see about the apples, leaving the boys alone.

It was in the middle of the afternoon, and there was no one in the bar-room. Harry ate part of his cake, and said:

"I don't believe that it will hurt us, Walt. It smells as if it was very nice."

"I dare say it is nice, but I am not going to taste it. Current wine now may lead us to rum and whiskey when we are men."

"Nonsense! I'm going to drink mine."

It did taste good, being spiced, sweetened and warmed. So good, indeed, that after Harry had finished his own glass, he concluded he would take Walter's too. It was there, and it was a pity to waste it.

When the boys were rested and warmed, they took up their empty basket, thanked Mrs. Morrison for her kindness, and started homeward. But Harry had very red cheeks and bright eyes, and Walter had never heard him talk so fast. He was rather a quiet boy, but now he bragged and shouted, sang and talked so strangely that Walter was amazed.

"See here, Harry," he said, when they reached the foot of the hill, "I don't think currant wine is good for you."

"Yes it is though!" cried Harry; "I never felt so splendidly in all my life! I'm as warm as a toast. My head feels big, to be sure, but who cares for that?"

"Take care!" cried Walter, as he reeled against him; "your legs are shaky."

"Shaky! Not a bit of it. I'm going to run across the bridge."

"No, Harry—no!" said Walter, now really frightened, "you must not. Don't—oh, don't!" he cried, as his cousin shook him off impatiently. "Oh, Harry, you will fall in!"

But Harry was already half way to the bridge, running, but in zigzag fashion, that showed only too plainly that he was dizzy with the unaccustomed drink. Walter ran, too, but before he reached his cousin, Harry was at the bridge. "Come on!" he shouted; who's afraid?" and with the last word in his mouth he made a false step on the narrow plank, and fell headlong into the run. With loud cries for help, Walter threw off his hat and boots and plunged in after him. The current was strong, and the water very cold, but Walter tried bravely to find his cousin, calling loudly for help, till several men came running from the fields.

"What is it? are you hurt?" they asked.

"No! I am all right. Harry fell off the bridge, and I can't find him. I'm afraid he has struck his head."

Strong arms came to the lads assistance, and the men ran down the sides of the stream, shouting Harry's name. Walter swam after them, now really fearing they would find only a dead body.

They found Harry at last, senseless and to all appearance dead. A couple of the men lifted him in their arms, and carried him to the farm-house, poor, dripping Walter following them, sobbing as if his heart would break.

A doctor was summoned, and all night the family watched beside Harry, who was many hours unconscious, and then came to life in a burning fever.

Chilled and soaked when his blood was heated by the wine, the poor boy was ill for many long weeks with rheumatic fever, suffering the most severe pains, and often entirely hopeless. All the long winter he lay upon his bed, unable to move without pain, and when the pleasant spring-time came, he could sit up and look out upon the green fields, with the doctor's words in his heart: "I must tell you, lad, though it pains me. Your life has been spared by our kind heavenly Father, and you may be an old man. But Harry, you can never walk again."

Never again! Oh, little children, who can run and play, can jump upon the soft grass, climb the great cherry tree, slide upon the frozen ponds, think of the little boy, who could never again rais his poor crippled feet, never again move, even from room to room alone, and all for one act of thoughtless folly.

You have seen men reeling in the streets from the effects of vile liquor, whisky, rum and other poison, that steal away sense and reason, and you have thought, many of you, "When I am a man, I will never touch drink." But the boy in this story, every word of which is true, was but twelve years old, and the liquor which he drank was only sweet, home-made currant wine. And yet in the foolish excitement of his brain, he committed the rash act that cost him the use of his limbs for life.

Think of him whenever you may be tempted to taste any liquor but the pure water God provides plenteously for us all, and take a lesson from the story of the effect of "only currant wine."—N. Y. Witness.

A Little Sermon for Little Folks.

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."—John xiii: 17.

I. "These things;" that is, your duties. You have duties wherever you are.

1. At home, obedience and respect to parents, and kindness to brothers, sisters, and servants.

2. At school, respect to teacher, faithfulness in study, and fairness in play.

3. On the street, good manners, modesty, kindness, minding your own business.

II. How should you do your duty?

1. Not for pay. That is a low motive. Some always ask, "What will you give me?"

2. But from love. So the Saviour did when a boy at Nazareth. So the angels do God's will (which is only another name for duty). This will make you do it cheerfully.

3. Better every day. By trying to do your duties, you will become more skillful. So you improve in reading, writing, and music. Peter says, "Grow in grace."

III. Doing duty makes you happy. Sin cannot make you happy. Sin did not make Eve happy, nor Cain, nor Judas. Disobedience at home does not make you happy; idleness, unkindness, bad manners, no kind of sin can make you happy. But happiness comes from doing your duty. That is God's reward. This is the promise in the text. Think of this every day for just one week, and see how true it is.

Try, then, to know your duty. Be faithful in duty in doing it from love to God and man; then you will be happy every day on earth, and forever happy in heaven.—The Myrtle.

Agents Reports for Quarter Ending October 1st, 1874.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard sets a good example to all agents who reports through the Cynosure by having his reports carefully made out and promptly sent in. If agents will observe two duties they cannot fail to be successful: first, be sure to have a good report to make; second, make it at the proper time.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard reports lectures delivered 71
Cash collected ..... $ 88.39
Cynosure subscriptions $8 1-2
Amount paid from treasury .. $2 21
Expenses, including salary .. $317.70

Rev. J. T. Kiggin's reports has not been received for the last quarter. He has been suffering from the fever and ague. Nevertheless, he has been hard at work,

Rev. D. S. Caldwell sends in a report which shows that from August 10th to Sept. 16th he delivered thirty lectures, and attended twenty-two meetings and organized one society in Crawford county, Pennsylvania. A friend who heard one of these lectures writes that it was about the best lecture he ever heard on the subject. You would suppose that a man who works so successfully and so incessantly, must command a good price for his labor, for "the laborer is worthy of his hire." Let us look at the financial side of the work. Cash receipts since commencing the work, Feb. 1st, 1874, $217.23. Traveling, postage, and stationary, $59.63. Total realized $157.60. A little less than $20 per month. How many of our readers who do not raise their own food could support a family on such an income? Mr. Caldwell writes, "I must say that in despite of my best efforts to be cheerful, I am powerfully depressed in spirit. . . . I have been driven to the most extreme economy. . . . Yet notwithstanding, I feel that I cannot, I dare not abandon the work, and what to do I scarcely know. If I only could leave home untrammeled, knowing that my family were comfortable, then the work would have what there is of me, as it is, I am shorn of my strength, to a great extent. But withal God lives and I must not dispair. His cause must succeed, even should we utterly fail. My most fervent prayer is that he will provide some way by which our most enlarged expectations may yet be met in this glorious cause."

We want one hundred of the six hundred persons in Ohio who take the Cynosure, to give or raise FIVE DOLLARS each for the Ohio State Agent and send it to H. L. Kellogg, treasurer N. C. A., 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., or directly to Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Nevada, Wyandott county, Ohio., and Mr. Caldwell will be relieved for the winter. Mr. Berry of Ohio has led off in this work by sending in five dollars. Let ninety-nine others promptly follow. Take up a contribution in your church if possible; if not, solicit from your friends, or pay it yourself. Every dollar received will be reported through the Cynosure. Mr. Caldwell will require the localities which he visits to pay his traveling expenses and what they can for the cause, but this present pressing need requires prompt action. Being the tithes (tenths) into the store-house and the money will be on hand.

Rev. H. H. Hinman, of Illinois, has given imperfect reports, as no definite arrangements were made with him; but as the matter of salary is now adjusted, we expect full reports for the quarter commencing October 1st.

Rev. J. L. Barlow, New York State agent, has sent in a report for one month of fifteen lectures delivered, eight meetings attended; $38.44 collected; two Cynosure subscriptions obtained; expenses, $9.47; one town organization effected. He has been at work in Tompkins, Cayuga, Madison and Chenango counties. He is directly responsible to the New York State Association, but also sends his report to us so that friends in New York can more intelligently sympathize with and aid him, because of reading the report of his labors in the Cynosure, together with that of other agents. We hope to present complete reports from Messrs Kiggins, Caldwell, Hinman and Barlow for the present quarter at its close. The treasurer asks the agent, except Mr. Barlow, to send receipts for all monies collected by them and retained either for their expenses or their salaries.

We need $750.00 for the State work of Indiana, Ohio and Illinois. (this estimate includes all salaries and expenses) during the present quarter ending Jan-1st. We need $550.00 for the salaries of the General Agent, Corresponding Secretary and assistant, together with the bill for postage and printing which this quarter will be unusually large. Let all be prompt and liberal in attending to this work so that our agents will be well cared for and our debts all paid on the first day of the new year.

Religious Intelligence.

—Mr. Edward B. Sellers, a graduate of Wheaton and Andover Theological Seminary, has gone to Talladega, Ga., under commission from the American Missionary Association.

—The Third Presbyterian Church of Chicago, has, in the last four years, received 867 new members, of whom 312 were upon profession of faith in Christ, and 555 by letter. This is a degree of prosperity uneaqualled in the history of Presbyterianism in the West.

—The Episcopal General Convention whichmet in New York on the 9th, had a strong discussion last week over the confirmation of Prof. Seymour as Bishop of Illinois. A very strong opposition is developed on account of his ritualistic views. A long debate was carried on in secret session.

—It has been proposed to hold a conference of Lutherans to ascertain what points the different organizations disagree, and the nature of the disagreements, and whether closer relations can be established between them. If an organic union could take place the united church would contain 2,100 ministers, 3,550 congregations, and 475,000 communicants.

—The Tabernacle church, of Chicago, has extended a call to J. W. Healy, a former pastor, and Knight Templar, who has been for several years connected with the Freedmen's work in New Orleans, and he has accepted. Deacon T. T. Gurney of this church is one of the greatest Masons in the West.

—Prof. Wallace, of Monmouth College, believes that the United Presbyterian church has taken up too many missonary and educational enterprises, and there should be a change of policy. He advocates a union of the theological seminaries of Monmouth and Xenenia and other consolidations, and the starting of no new enterprises until those now in hand are well supported.

—The Presbytery of Chicago, after acceding to the request of Pro. Swing to drop his name from their roll, by a vote of 18 to 11, listened to a strong protest against such action signed by a number of its members. The Swing case will come up on appeal before the Northern Illinois Synod now meeting in this city. This body embraces 146 churches with a membership of about 15,000. It is conjectured that the Synod will decide against Prof. Swing.

—John V. Farwell and E. S. Wells, two prominent business men of Chicago, are active lay preachers. Hardly a Sabbath but finds them preaching or helping the Sabbath-schools of some remote neighborhood of Cook county. Lately they visited Joliet and preached to the 1,200 prisoners in the penitentiary in the morning, held a general Sabbath-school meeting in the afternoon and a temperance mass meeting in the evening.

—The new Publishing House of the Evangelical Association in Cleveland, O., was dedicated on the 8th instant. The services, held in English and German, were attended by a large number of the leading ministers of the church. The denomination was organized about the begining of the century; the Publishing House was established in 1816; the first number of the "Christliche Botschafter," the German organ of the church, was issued in 1836; the English organ. the "Evangelical Messenger," in 1848.

News of the Week.

The City

The Woman's Congress held in the Methodist Church Block last week attracted considerable notice from the representative women present and the important matters under discussion. ——President Grant visited Chicago with Mrs. Grant and several distinguished persons from Washington last Friday, remaining over the Sabbath. The marriage of his son Frederick to a Chicago lady takes place this week.

The Country.

A passenger train ran off the track near Chillilcothe, O., because of a misplaced switch. The engineer and fireman were killed. On Saturday afternoon an express train on the Pittsburgh and Ft. Wayne road struck a cow and was partly thrown from the track injuring several passengers.—— The students of Michigan University and the police of Ann Arbor are at war. Last week the latter attempted to prevent a hazing spree on the College grounds and were worsted. The students paraded the streets in the evening in a victorious procession blowing horns and the defying authorities. A bloody fight was hardly prevented. ——Post-master Gen. Jewell's vigorous management, which promises much for that branch of the public service has offended some of the party hacks who have long drawn their support from public money and they will work to prevent his confirmation.——It is said that Gen. Bristow of the Treasury is growing weary in the labor of reforming his department, and White House influence is said to be the cause.——A bloody riot occurred on the 11th between two factions of the Republican party in the parish of St. James about 60 miles from New Orleans. The persons engaged were all negroes. Knives and pistols were freely used snd with telling effect, for many were seriously wounded.——The American Woman Suffrage Association held a large meeting in Detroit last week and elected Bishop Gilbert Haven, D. D. President for the ensuing year. Resolutions were passed thanking the 22 United States Senators who voted last session in favor of woman suffrage in the Territory of Pembina. The grangers and Odd-fellows were also commended for admiting women to membership.—— The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has received a letter from the Agent of the Osage Indians, located in the northeast part of the Indian Territory. These Indians have heretofore resisted all efforts for their civilization, but now there is a general desire among them to be instructed in the various pursuits, especially in farming. The Agent is carrying out their wishes and among other things putting up mills and giving them agricultural implements.

Political.

The State elections of the 13th have probably surprised many politicians. In Ohio the Democratic majority is put down at 10,000, and a gain of six congressmen. Garfield and Foster are returned by small majorities, the latter by only 150.——The Indiana Democrats are believed to have elected their State ticket by 5,000 to 10,000 majority, and claim seven congressmen.

In Iowa the Republican majority is estimated at 30,000; in Nebraska 10,000, being the largest vote ever polled in the State; Dakota is Republican by perhaps 2,000 majority. The constitution was carried by a majority in Arkansas.——The result in Iowa will have a severe effect on the anti-monopolists who have shown great strength in the local elections of that State.—— Gen. Butler has been renominated by the Essex Republicans by various tricks and bribes.

Foreign.

The recent report that the German government was trying to obtain possession of the island of Porto Rico is emphatically and officially denied. That power respects the Monroe doctrine as well as the United States.—— It is reported that the Carlists have lost 1000 men in an engagement near Amposta.——The Spanish government has paid $75,000 indemnity to Englsnd, partly for the Virginius butchery.—— The town of Akhtolyi, in Turkey, containing 5,000 inhabitants, and situated on the Gulf of Burghas, in the Black Sea, has been totally destroyed by a conflagration.——The British ship Kingbridge, from London for Sydney, came in collision in the British Channel with the ship Candahar, and was sunk. Eleven of the crew of the Kingsbridge were drowned.——It is officially announced that the English Government will iwithdraw its diplomatic representatve at the Vatican, in Rome. The date has not been fixed.

—Annual Meeting of the North-east Pa. Association, Nov. 3d, in Free Methodist Hall, Wilkesbarre, Pa. It is proposed to organize a State Association in connection with this meeting. D. MCDOUGAL, Wilkesbarre; A. L. POST, Montrose, Pa.

Home and Health Hints.

The Benefits of Sleep.

The rule should be in sleep as in all things—avoid extremes. Because Napoleon I, and Von Humboldt, and other intellectual giants needed only four hours' sleep per day, it seems a strange conclusion that this is enough for everybody. Different constitutions require different amounts of rest, and different kinds of exertion also, followed by the same man, will require more or less sleep. In general, severe muscular labor demands a longer period of rest than the more quiet kinds of work; and any pursuit which constantly taxes the watchfulness of the brain needs to be followed by considerable sleep, as many school teachers and mothers of large families can testify. While it is clear enough that "it is better to wear out than to rust out," and while there are doubtless very many persons, especially in the country, rather inclined to rust, there is also a large class, especially in the large cities of our country, who are wearing themselves out at a fearfully rapid rate. Restless ambition to outshine and outdo everybody, is one chief source of this mischief. The merchant works night and day that he may outwit his rival in some new enterprise; the reckless politician leaves no stone unturned to gain his purpose; the pleasure-seeker spends the hours God meant for rest in the vain effort to grasp some happiness which always vanishes just before it is reached, like the "will-o'-the-wisp." What is the effect? Visit any place of amusement, or business, or worship, in our large cities, and study the faces of the crowd as I have often done—do you find here the happy expression of contentment, peace or praise? I fear it is more common to meet the anxious brow, the pale, sunken cheek, the wild, restless eye which betoken broken rest, care and trouble. Business is done at far too great risk of all that is noble in our country. And I can't help thinking that "a little more sleep"—not in the sense used by the sluggard—might mend matters. I doubt if any rule can be given for all persons. While Napoleon I could get along with four hours, and the fat boy in Pickwick slept most of the time, ordinary persons will need from six to eight hours, and children nine or ten.—Country Gentleman.

To Restore Gilt Frames.—Take one ounce of cooking soda and beat it thoroughly with the whites of three eggs. Blow off the dust with a pair of bellows, or brush it out with a feather duster. Then dip a small paint brush into the mixture, and rub it all over the guilding, into every tiny crevice, and it will render it fresh and bright. —Country Gentleman.

Whitewash that will Stick.—To make whitewash that will not wash off by the rain, one peck of lime should be slacked in five gallons of water, in which one pound of rice has been boiled until it is all dissolved. The rice water should be used hot, and the mixture should be covered up closely until the lime is slacked. Then a pound of salt should be added and the wash heated to boiling when used.

DEFENCE OF
JUDGE DANIEL H. WHITNEY,

Master of Belvidere Lodge, Before the Grand Lodge of Ill., On charge of Unmasonic Conduct, in bringing Samuel L. Keith the Murderer of Ellen Slade to justice.

In the year 1851, Judge Whitney of Belvidere was summoned before the Grand Lodge of Ill., to answer to charges made against him for unmasonic conduct. Unable to appear in person, he sent the following defeuse, a doctiment of great power and of wonderful interest, revealing more of the character of the Order than is generally known, and showing the veritable results of the practical workings of the Lodge. The words of this honest and fearless public officer and upright man, should be read and pondered by every American citizen.

Most Worshipful Grand Master and Members of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of Illinois:

My pecuniary circumstances deny me the privilege of availing myself of the exercise of my right to appear before you, and in person defend myself against the charges, which, I have been informed by our M. W. G. Master, will be laid before you at your present communication; and I am consequently compelled to submit in writing that defence which it would be my highest pleasure to snbmit personally, were it my power so to do.

I anticipate the first subject to which the Graud Master will call your attention is the following letter (the heads of which I have numbered for convenience) to-wit:

"The following statement of facts is submitted for the consideration and action of the Grand Master:

1. Daniel H. Whitney is Master of Belvidere Lodge, No. 60. An excitement has grown up in our commuuity out of a charge of crime against one of our brothers, Samuel L. Keith.

2. Mr Keith for a time cluded the vigilance of onr Police, and there grew up in the public mind an anxious desire that he shonld be arrested.

3. The fact of Mr. Keith's friends and counsel being three of them Masons, pointed suspicion to them, as being coucerned in the hiding.

4. While at the same time some of the strongest aud most active men in the pursuit were kuown and staunch Masons.

5. Dr. Whitney has not ceased to charge individual brothers, and by inference, the Lodge, with conniving aud arranging to defeat the ends of public justice.

6. In so doing he has headed and been regarded by others as the head of an Antimasonic excitement, and the bitterest Antimasons among our people quote him exultingly as authority for their charges against the order and individual brothers.

7. At a public meeting held at the Court House in Belvidere, the 24th day of June, D. H. Whitney did say substantially these things: 'That Joel Florida, (the Sheriff, a brother Mason), if he had a warrant against Keith, and saw him, and had it in his power to arrest him, would not do it.' Being asked by Mr. Gooding, P. M. (post master) why Florida would not arrest Keith, Dr. Whitney answered, 'because he is a Mason and an Odd-fellow.'

8. He also, at the same place, improperly made allusion, to the obligation of a Master Mason.

9 In the presence of Dr. Hurlbut, and to an excited crowd of outsiders, he said 'that he had learned that the Masons were going to attack him in the Lodge because he had done his duty in pursuing a murderer, and that he was ready to defy and meet them.'

10. In the Lodge he has reiterated the same statement, and defied the Lodge to interfere with him.

11. Many other things are reported of him which may be true or may not; and we, the uudersigned, Master Masons of Belvidere Lodge, No. 60, believe that he is rapidly rushing toward open and avowed hostility to the order, and feel perfectly convinced that the safety of the Institution requires immediate action on the part of its high authorities.

12 There are other particulars which we cannot communicate by writing, which press us to this measure, and we do earnestly urge immediate aud energetic measures. Given under our hands at Belvidere, this 28th day of June, 1851.

"Belvidere Lodge, No. 60.

I, Ralph D. Rix, Secretary of said Lodge, do hereby certify that I know the persons whose names are above written, and that they are members in good standing, Master Masons of the Lodge, and entitled to credit as such. In witness whereof, I have hereunto appended my private seal, (no Lodge seal being provided) at Belvidere, this 30th June, 1851.

RALPH D. RIX, Secretary, [seal]."

Accompanying which, I presume, will be the following private letter addressed by me to the Most Worshipful Grand Master, viz:

"Belvidere, Boone Co, Ill.
July 6th, 1851.

M. W. G. Master of the Grand Lodge of F. A. M's. Ill.:

Dear Sir—I must beg of you to excuse me for addressing you on Sunday, for the reason that our mails are very irregular now; and because I but learned last evening that charges had been forwarded to you against me, several days since.

1. As these proceedings were without my knowledge, and in express violation of mutual arrangements made at the regular communication of the Lodge, held on the evening of a week previous to last Thursday, I am unprepared, fully to anticipate the charges; and hoping that this will reach you in time,

2. I write, and state that this Lodge has been, for nearly, two years past. nearer a hell than anything earthly that I can conceive of.

3. I find myself associated, as a Masou, with drunkards blackguards, loafers, gamblers, whore masters, and murderer and their aiders and abettors and accessories.

4. Disgusted and ashamed of such associates, some two years ago I applied for a demit, which was granted, but afterwards, through the importunity of worthy members, and we have such, I consented to a motion to rescind the vote granting the demit, and took the office of Senior Warden, worried on through the year, and, hoping that I might be able to restore harmony in the Lodge, and arrange its greatly deranged finances, and relying on pledges that discipline should be enforced, I took the office of Master, evidently against the good wishes of the loafers and rowdies; and the Lodge has struggled on, improved only in its finances, until the death of Ellen Slade;

5. Whom, it appears from the finding of the Coroner's jury, Samuel L. Keith, a member of this Lodge, seduced, and procured an operation to produec an abortion which resulted in her sudden death, June 20th;

6. When the open and palpable course of members to screeu, secrete and run off Keith, I promptly rebuked, and endeavored to throw the odium from the institution of Masonry and upon those whom I believe guilty of the base transactiou.

7. Bnt after all, here is the head and front of my offending; A warrant was pnt into the hands of Joel Florida, Sheriff, and member of this Lodge, on Sunday night, commanding the arrest of Keith; the Sheriff made no effective move to execute it, nor sent out officers, nor gave the warrant to any one. All was excitment, and at a large meeting assembled at the Court House, I denounced the conduct of the Sheriff, aud repelled the charges publicly made agaiust the Institution, and assured the people that Masonry taught the contrary, and that these men were acting on their own responsibility and in derogation of their duties, not only as citizens, but as Masons.

8. I (being Judge of the county) issued on Wednesday morning a warraut, and put it into the hands of officers and men on whom I could rely, and in whom the people had confidence, and they arrested and bronght Keith back to town on Friday morning.

9. I have given my opinion in open Lodge, that the Lodge has the power to try, suspend, or expel their Master, and offered to submit as a private member, to the discipline and dealing of the Lodge; this, it seems, is not satisfactory, aud I do not care what course is pursued, nor what the result may be, the value of the quill with which I write. I wish you to send me a full copy of the charges, together with all the names of the accusers.

10. One thing is apparent, we have Masons here who construe their obligations precisely as has been charged by the enemies of Masonry. I have never so learned, I have never so taught Masonry; and if I shall now learn that such is Masonry, I swear by the Great Supreme Architect, and by the God of gods, that I have enough of it, and that the world has too much of it. As I have learned and tanght Masonry, aud as I believe you have learned aud teach it, I remain fraternally yours, &e.,

D. H. WHITNEY, W. M.
Belvidere Lodge, No. 60, F. A. M's."

Most Worshipful and Brethren:—Before entering upon an examination of the charges contained in the foregoing letter of accusations, and such others as I anticipate will be added by our Grand Master from verbal statements made to him in open Lodge by certain members, I deem it important to advert to the proceeding of the Grand Master when here; and now state most distinctly, that the course pursued by the Grand Master was courteous, prompt and impartial, leaving no one just cause to complain, so far as the same came under my observation.

On the 25th of July, 1851, about 10 o'clock A. M., the Grand Master called on me at my own house, where he found me in bed, recovering from a severe attack of sickness. He informed me that he must dispose of the object of his visit that day. requested him to give more time, as bnt few of the members could be notified, and the attendance would be, principally, my accusers, and so far as their words and actions could influence the Grand Master, they would stand my accusers, the witnesses against me and my judges; and I desired more time because I did not feel well enough to attend; a right which I claimed and the Grand master conceded. But after speaking of his distance from home, (being by the usually traveled route over four hundred miles) and the great inconvenience to him of delay, I consented and directed him to the Senior Warden. A few of the members were summoned to attend at the hall at 2 P. M. By the assistance of a friend, I got to the Lodge, and remained there until the Grand Master annonnced his determination to recall the Charter, and close the Lodge until after the next communication of the Grand Lodge.

The Lodge has between sixty and seventy members; twenty-one attended, but only fifteen were much of the time in the Lodge, nine of whom had signed the letter of charges, five, were favorably inclined toward me, (one being a clergyman, and two church members, the only professors of religion present), and one, brother S. W., acted rather conservatively; and of the other six who were occasionally in the Lodge, one or two manifested the same bitterness, that my accusers did.

After the Lodge was opened, S. A. Hurlbut spoke at considerable length of the charges in the letter, and made others, verbally. No charges were made by affidavit, nor any evidence given under oath, nor were any persons present but Master Masons.

I will now reply to the charges contained in the letter of accusations, and which I first saw in the hands of the Grand Master.

RUM AND TOBACCO.

Two Scenes.

A gentleman took his son to a drunken row in a tavern, where the inmates were fighting and swearing, and said he:

"Do you know what has caused all this?"

"No sir."

His father, pointing to the decanters, said: "That's the cause. Will you take a drink?"

The boy started back with horror, and exclaimed:

"No!"

Then he took the child to the cage of a man with delirium tremens. The boy gazed upon him affrighted, as the drunkard raved and tore, and, thinking the demons were after him, cried, "Leave me alone! leave me alone! I see' em! they're coming!"

"Do you know the cause of this, my boy?"

"No sir."

"This is caused by drink; will you have some?" and the boy shrank back with a shudder as he refused the cup.

Next they called at the miserable hovel of a drunkard, where was squalid poverty, and the drunken father beating his wife, and with oaths knocking down his children.

"What has caused this?" said the father.

The son was silent.

When told that it was rum, he declared that he would never touch a drop in his life.

But suppose that lad should be invited to a wedding feast where, with fruit and cake, the wine-cup is passed, amid scenes of cheerfulness and gayety, where all the friends are respectable, beloved, and kind to each other, and he should be asked to drink, would he refuse? Or suppose him walking out with his father on New-year's day to call on his young lady friends, to enjoy the festivity of the ushering in of the new year. With other things, wine is handed to him by a smiling girl. His noble-hearted father, whom he loves, presses the wine-glass to his lips, and compliments the young lady on the excellence of its quality; what wonder if the son follow his example?

—Annual.

A Newly Discovered Parable.

And the kingdom of Satan shall be likened unto a grain of tobacco seed which, although exceedingly small, being cast into the ground grew and become a great plant, and it spread its leaves rank and broad, so that bugs and vile worms found an habitation thereon.

And it came to pass in course of time that the sons of men looked upon it, and thought it beautiful to behold and much to be desired to make lads look big and manly. So the sons of men put forth their hands and plucked the leaves thereof, and did chew thereof, and some it made sick and others to vomit filthily.

And it further came to pass that those who chewed it became unmanly, and they cried out, "We are enslaved, and cannot cease from chewing it!" and the mouths of all that were enslaved became foul and they were seized with a violent spitting, and they did spit even in ladies' parlors and in the house of the Lord of Hosts.

And the saints of the Most High were greatly plagued thereby. And it came to pass also that others of the sons of men snuffed it, and were taken suddenly with fits, and they did sneeze insomuch that their eyes filled with tears, and they did look exceedingly silly. And yet others most cunningly wrought the leaves thereof into rolls and did suck most vehemently at the other end thereof, and they did look very grave and calf-like, and the smoke of their torment ascended up for ever and for ever.

And the cultivation thereof became a great and mighty business in the earth and the merchantmen waxed rich in the commerce thereof, and the saints of the Most High defiled themselves therewith.

Even the poor, who could not buy shoes, nor bread, nor books for their little ones, spent their money for it. And the Lord was greatly displeased therewith and said, "Wherefore this waste, and why do these little ones lack shoes and bread and books? Turn now your fields into corn and wheat, and defile not yourselves any more, and I will cause my face to shine upon you and bless you."

But with one accord they exclaimed, "We cannot cease chewing and snuffing and puffing—we are enslaved!'

EXTENT OF THE LIQUOR TRADE—In England, there are consumed annually, on an average, 728,200,000 gallons of beer, and probably 60,000,000 gallons of spirits; in Germany, 146,000,000 gallons of beer and 121,500,000 gallons of wine; in France, 51,800,000 gallons of beer and 600,000,000 of wine, and probably 40,000,000 of spirits. In the United States the consumption of beer reaches 297,000,000 gallons, about 22,000,000 of wine, and 73,000,000 gallons of spirits. The value of the liquor consumed annually in these four countries is not less than $2,000,000,000, and, with the money invested in its production and manufacture, the money spent in it certainly exceeds $4,000,000,000.

PHYSIOLOGY OF INTEMPERANCE.—Plato rebuked a man for playing at dice, who answered that he was playing only for a trifle. But, said Plato, is the habit a trifle? Of all habits none are so controlling as indulgence in strong drink. The appetite is constantly increasing, while moral energy is becoming weaker. In the ordinary course there is therefore little hope of reform, and it is rare to see complete recuperation; loss of fortune, pains of disease, misery of his family, do not reclaim the confirmed inebriate. The fear of such results may check in some degree the moderate drinker, but in most cases even this is only for a time. His mind becomes clouded, his moral perception impaired, and while he may be conscious of his weakened condition and its cause—still he will seek temporary strength in the fatal expedient of more frequent stimulent.—Sanitarian.

That the book is one of great interest and value is shown by the following

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issned by him, purporting to give a full and accnrate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Mnrder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation througbout the conntry forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's mnrderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The anthor opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Chnrch; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book mnst be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y.,, and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actnally Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Note if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Postage on the Cynosure.

After Jan. 1st, 1875, the THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. The postage on the Cynosure is 20 cents a year.

If the subscription price of the Cynosure was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscriber for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

The State Conventions.

One year ago in November the vigorous and successful Indiana State Agent realizing the great importance of the Christian Cynosure very sensibly resolved to endeavor to get one thousand Cynosures taken in the State of Indiana before the fourth of next November. Several friends joined him in this work and faithfully assisted him. At that time there were 425 subscribers in the State. There are now 686. Will you not make up the lacking 314 at the Indiana State Meeting? The Cynosure is in great need of help. If the paper is what it ought to be it must have a great increase in the subscription. Do not let the Convention pass without pledging 314 subscribers to make good the one thousand. Thus you will help the paper in its great need. Sustain and encourage your agent in his noble plans to enlarge the work and help the Cynosure out of debt.

We hope our Pennsylvania friends will also be earnest and persistent in their labors for the Cynosure. Will not all who attend the meetings at Wilkesbarre, Pa., or Dublin, Ind., try to bring with them at least one new subscription? We hope that in view of the great importance of the Cynosure to the cause every friend of the reform that attends these meetings may be induced to subscribe for the Cynosure if he has not already done so.

"THERE IS A TIDE WHICH TAKEN AT ITS FLOOD, LEADS ON TO FORTUNE."

The weather is fine. Forests are beautiful. Work is vanishing under the touch of industrious hands. Money is coming in to reward the labors of farmers. Will you not improve all these advantages by vigorously canvassing for the Cynosure? Go out determined to do what you can to double the subscription list. See Publisher's department, sixteenth page.

ELECTION DAY in twenty-four of the United States occurs on the third of next November. We hope all who wish to extend the circulation of the Cynosure in States where elections occur, will make a special effort to get subscriptions on that day. Provide yourselves with Cynosure circulars beforehand. They are sent free to all that request them.

The President of the National Christian Association, Rev. B. T. Roberts, Rochester, N. Y., writes: "In answer to your question, as to the best time of holding the next meeting of the Association, I can give my opinion, in which brethren with whom I have consulted concur. It seems to me that May is preferable to February. In the latter month preachers are generally engaged in protracted meetings." Of course the views of the President of the Association, unless there should be overwhelming reasons against them would prevail. The general feeling on the subject of the National meeting is that it should occur in May or in June in accordance with past usage.

Topics of the Time.

RITUALISM ON TRIAL.—The Episcopal General Convention of the United States after eight days discussion with closed doors has voted against the confirmation of Prof. Geo. E. Seymour, Bishop-elect of the diocese of Illinois. This remarkable debate, following so soon a similar inquiry into the ritualistic practices and belief of Dr. De Koven while candidate for the bishopric of Wisconsin, is proof not to be mistaken that the Episcopal church in this country is not yet ready to shut up its usefulness and piety in forms and ceremonies. Prof. Seymour was elected with considerable unanimity to the charge left vacant by the death of Bishop Whitehouse, and his confirmation by the national convention was scarcely doubted until evidences of his ritualistic sympathies were brought forward. The question of his moral fitness was not raised; the other was all-absorbing. American Christians cannot view this decision ungratefully. It preserves unbroken the steady march of the churches toward greater unity, fellowship and Christlike simplicity. The formalities of religion which rise like a mist before the eye of faith can well be spared. The saved sinner and his Saviour cannot be brought too nearly together.

CATHOLIC FREE SCHOOLS.—Ex-mayor Medill in his popular letters from Europe to the Chicago Tribune has this to say of the free school system of Switzerland, which the revolution of 1848 introduced into the Alpine Republic, while at the same time Jesuitism was banished: "As the enforcement of the school law was left to the action of the authorities of each Canton, it has resulted that in the Ultramontane Cantons the priests have nullified the Constitutional provisions, and popular ignorance is almost as dense as it was a quarter of a century ago before the adoption of the Constitution of 1848. The only thing taught by the clericals is dogmatic catechism, to which has lately been added Papal infallibility. But, in the other Cantons, which are Protestant or "mixed," popular education has made great progress." With this agrees a Methodist home missionary in New Mexico. That territory has, so far as legislation is concerned, an excellent school law, but the Jesuits have worked themselves into its management, and in their hands it is entirely inoperative. Such facts are looked upon with amazing coolness by our American people. Not a month has passed since the Catholics of Hartford and New Haven attempted openly to get control of the public schools in those cities at the polls, and the same efforts are with more or less energy carried on in every considerable city and in hundreds of outlying districts. Blind obedience is necessary to the Papal system as it is to the lodge; and with corrupt politicians on the one hand and worldly religious teachers on the other, that system is being brought into coveted possession of our most sacred privileges. If our free school system is worth anything the Jesuit guerillas should not be suffered to tamper with it. Catholic schools are never free.

GERMAN JESUITRY.—The papers for a fortnight have noticed the arrest and close confinement of Count Von Armin by the German Government, with the usual speculation on the reason and result of such apparent arbitrary use of power. These speculations have been superseded by more reliable news which is substantially this: Count Von Armin was sent some time since as the minister of his government to the capitol of France, with full instructions on his conduct, as a representative of a victor toward the vanquished Germany had proved her power, she now sought peace. But the minister showed her as with yet drawn sword. He was received by President Thiers and immediately began a course of action tended to involve the two nations in renewed hostilities. He wrote to Emperor William criticising the policy and aiming to subvert the authority of Bismarck. When MacMahon appeared his offensive actions continued until he was ordered home. Von Armin is a strong Catholic, and the Catholic journals of the Empire supported his insubordination, even praising him as the fit successor of Bismarck and denouncing the latter as totally unfit for the position he occupies. For this insubordination and the threatened publication of official correspondence the Count will soon be tried. The case reveals the desperate plottings of the Jesuits. War, with its horrors and impiety, they provoke without scruple, if they may thus secure private revenge or add to the power of Ultramontanism. The astute German premier doubtless apprehends the far-reaching interests of the struggle in which he is engaged. Though undertaken for the preservation of state authority, it is in reality between true and false worships, the Gospel of the Son of God and the counterfeit systems of Satan whom the children of this world worship.

Dare to Do Right.

I love the man whose honest heart
  Will bravely dare and bravely do;
Who will not act the coward's part,
  But strong in right, will right pursue;
Whose knee ne'er bending at the nod
  Of titled pomp or regal power,
But bows alone before his God,
With hope his crown, and love his dower;

Who dares to face a world of scorn,
  And dares a brother's hand to span,
Though dark the sin and rough the form,
  If yet that brother be a man;
Who strikes where'er a wrong is found,
  And brands a tyrant to his face;
Nor courts applause, an empty sound,
  But firmly treads in virtue's place.

Such are the men who've stemmed the tide
  And clove the way through giant wrong;
Who've fought triumphant, side by side,
  'Mid perils deep and troubles long;
Their martyred forms are thickly strewn
  On many an ancient field of crime,
But seeds of truth they've widely sown,
  To blossom rich in future time.
Amid those armies of the dead,
  Whose legions pale and silent lie,
Their lives a passing fragrance shed,
  Their names immortal, ne'er shall die.—Selected.

A Challenge.

Standing not long since by the open grave of a near relative in attendance upon the funeral services, my attention was attracted by a somewhat conspicuous marble monument near by, on which I first noticed a sculptured medallion around the outer edge of which were clearly cut the following letters: H. K. T. W. S. S. T. K. S., and below an inscription, a part of which was as follows: "Hiram King of Tyre, Widow's Son, sent to King Solomon for this registry stone." [According to Masonic tradition Hiram King of Tyre and Hiram the widow's son were different persons. —ED.] Looking at the upper part of the monument, I noted the familiar compass and square, which I afterwards found on several other monuments less conspicuous not far off.

These, then, are not Masonic secrets. They are the current and significant history of Freemasonry in stone. Masons take no pains to disguise them, but on all occasions flaunt them with their lamb-skin aprons and other trumperies in the face of those who may challenge their meaning, and demand to know what is the purpose and intention of those who thus parade their symbols as matters of public notoriety and importance.

They state certain pretended facts in connection with these symbols, as in the inscription just referred to. They speak of the institution as ancient. They identify it with Hiram King of Tyre, and with Solomon, with St. John the Baptist, with St. John the Apostle and with St. Andrew. They infer an historical connection of the present Freemasonry with those revered characters. They pretend that the institution has been continuous from the time of Solomon to the present.

If this claim has the slighest basis of truth, the testimony will be found scattered throughout all the ages in stone. The medallion with the symbolic letters will be dug up among the ruins of all the old cities of the East wherever Freemasonry has prevailed throughout the ages. The compass and square will be found everywhere among all the old cemetaries in Tyre, in Pompeii, in Herculaneum, in Rome, in the Catecombs, in the Egyptian tombs where so many curious and instructive things have been found. They will appear perhaps even, in the Pyramids, doubtless at Athens and other noted places in Grecce, and at Constantinople and Antioch. Surely at Palmyra, and at Tadmor in the wilderness, the chosen work of Solomon, or at Damascus, where kings of different nations called each other "Brothers," (1 Kings xx. 32, 33); possibly at Ninevah or at Babylon, but certainly at Jerusalem. Did "brother" Morris find any such thing there? He brought us fragments of almost every thing else, plenty of trinkets of little or no value. But did he find any of these Masonic symbols there? If he did he did not put them in his book, nor distribute them among his friends. He told us about the Moabite Stone, but he found no compass and square upon it. He has signally failed to give us the slightest evidence that Freemasonry existed in any form earlier than the eighteenth century.

We are not asking for secrets. We do not care to know them if there are any. But such monuments are, so to speak, imperishable. The antiquarian who may visit the locality three thousand years hence will probably find the monument to which I have referred, with the mystic symbols engraven upon it. testifying to the fact that Freemasonry did exist in this nineteenth century. The marble of all the old cities of the East, though broken and defaced, is as sound as when taken from the quarries and bears down to the present age all the symbols that were engraven upon it. If Freemasonry existed, beyond all peradventure its symbols are there. Failing to produce them it convicts itself of downright and deliberate falsehood. The whole thing is a historic fanfaronade. Its very foundation is utterly void of truth; and then where are its vaunted morals?

It is a fair challenge. Let those symbols which are made so prominent now, and about which Masons make no secret at all, be produced in the history of the past. There are learned men among the Masons, historians and antiquarians. Let them bring out their treasures. We will be as glad to see them as they will to produce them. Let them be honest and tell us the truth. It is no worse to find the compass and square in history or in antiquity, than to carve it on marble or engrave it on a seal or medal. And if it is honestly and fairly produced to sustain the claims of Freemasonry, we will confess that we were mistaken. But if not, we must continue to hold, and declare it the wicked fabrication which we believe it to be. D.

The Illegality of the Masonic Oath.

BY T. H. POLLOCK.

From the Jersey City Herald.

I propose then, now to make good my declaration that "these oaths are illegal." I shall endeavor to show this, first because the lodge has no lawful authority to prescribe or administer an oath at all, and secondly because the penalties are illegal.

1st, Because the lodge has no lawful authority to prescribe or administer an oath at all. There are but two organizations that have lawful authority to prescribe and administer oaths. These are the church and the state. They properly exist, separately and each independently of the other, each is a proper and permanent government, neither being created by the other, so neither is amenable to or dependent on the other. Not so with the Masonic lodge. It is a dependent organization, a creature of, or existing by permission, of, the civil government. The Masonic, or any similar organization, has no lawful authority to exist or act but as granted by the civil law, which is supreme. And the authority to prescribe and administer an oath is not granted to, nor conferred upon the Masonic or any other like corporation.

No one but a lawfully appointed officer of the church or of the state has lawful authority to administer an oath. No private citizen may either require or administer a lawful oath. The lawful administration of an oath affords an opportunity to commit the "crime" of perjury. But what is perjury? Sir Edward Coke defines it "to be a crime committed when a lawful oath is administered in some judicial proceeding to a person who swears willfully, absolutely, and falsely in a matter material to the issue or point in question."—Blackstone. Book 4, p. 137. This definition is adopted in Penn., see 4, Penn., L. J., 163. Also substantially in New York, New Jersey and other States. Now, Mr. Editor, this ought to be regarded as both good and sufficient authority as to what perjury is, and when it may be committed, and until you adduce better I shall rest upon it. You perceive this crime may only be "committed when a lawful oath is administered in some judicial proceeding."

Does that sublime spectacle of leading a poor blindfolded and almost nude candidate about the lodge-room, and administering to him an oath that he "will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any part or parts, art or arts, point or points of the secret arts and mysteries of ancient Freemasonry which he has received, is about to receive, or may hereafter be instructed in, to any person or persons in the known world, except it be a true and lawful brother Mason, or within the body of a just and lawfully constituted lodge of such, etc. Does this, I say, look like Sir E. Coke's or Sir Wm. Blackstone's "judicial proceeding?" Not much! The general rule of the oath is to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," but the Mason swears positively and circumstantially that he will not tell the truth, and that he will conceal it! Surely these great men must have lived before Masonry was born. They could not have been Masons. So much for the "judicial proceeding" part of the definition. Now as to the "lawful oath" part of it.

Sir Wm. Blackstone says: "The law takes no notice of any perjury but such as is committed in some court of justice, having power to administer an oath, or before some magistrate or proper officer, invested with similar authority in some proceedings relative to a civil suit or a criminal prosecution." So you see that to be a lawful oath, it must be administered "in some court of justice." Is the Masonic lodge a court of justice? If it is why not try "small causes" and administer justice generally and generously? If it is not where is its authority to administer a lawful oath? Is any officer of the Masonic lodge, as such, "a magistrate or proper officer invested with similar authority?" There isn't much legal comfort here you perceive for Masons. But still further. The civil law provides officers lawfully chosen and duly commissioned to administer all the oaths that are allowable by the civil law, and every one except Masons and their "kin" seem to know this and act accordingly. When an officer of a bank, railroad or other corporation needs to make an affidavit, or have an oath administered, he does not go before the president or any other officer of the company, but before a lawful "magistrate" who is duly authorized to administer the oath. Whenever any good citizen has due occasion to be sworn in any lawful matter, he appears before some "court of justice" or lawful "magistrate." And the "law" says the same authority, "takes no notice" of any other oaths, neither should it, except to punish the profane and blasphemous use of the name of Jehova.

Thus it most clearly appears that no Master Mason or other officer or member has even the slightest authority to administer an oath in the lodge, not even though he were an alderman, a justice or a judge, would he have any authority to go into a Masonic lodge and administer any one of the many Masonic oaths that Masonic law prescribes.

Now until the contrary is shown I claim that I have made good my declaration, that "these oaths are illegal." If these oaths are illegal the law prescribing them is also so far illegal, and if this does not knock the bottom completely out of Masonry, if it don't make every member a *Free*mason in the sight of the law, if it does not break off the supposed bondage or obligation of an unlawful and blasphemous oath. If it does not do all these things, tell me, I pray you, what it does do?

No, sir, the Masonic lodge has no lawful authority to prescribe an oath at all, and every member who has ever taken those oaths is absolutely free from any lawfully binding obligation as is the man who never took them. True indeed, those who have taken these unlawful oaths are chargeable with a rash and improper act, for which repentance and forsaking it is the only remedy. See Lev. v. 4, 5 vs., but they are not bound by either civil or moral law to the keeping of them as Masons claim.

But these oaths are illegal—

2d. Because the penalties attached to them are "unknown and contrary to law."

The only penalties known to the civil law for perjury, are fine, imprisonment, and incapacity to bear testimony, these are the only civil penalties attached to this crime. But Masonry could never get along with such penalties as these. It must "hew out" others more in keeping with its dark system.

As Masons may attempt to deny anything that may be said in establishing this point, I shall adduce some record testimony. I shall quote from a petition of about 1,400 citizens of the State of Connecticut, sent to the General Assembly of that State in the year A. D. 1833.

They say, "The disclosures which have been recently made by the seceding Masons of the secret proceeding of those lodges fully prove that the institution of Freemasonry consists of numerous degrees which may be increased to an unlimited extent, and that an oath of an extraordinary character is administered at the entrance of every degree. Your petitioners would not trespass upon the principles of decorum by an unnecessary recital of all these horrid imprecations, but justice to the cause they have espoused compels them to exhibit the following specimens, which are selected from the oaths administered in the different degrees. The Entered Apprentice Mason swears, 'I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any part or parts, art or arts, point or points of the secrets, arts and mysteries of ancient Freemasonry, which I have received, am about to receive, or may hereafter be instructed in, without the least equivocation, mental reservation, or self-evasion of mind in me whatever, binding myself under no less penalty than to have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea.'" The paper contains portions of the Master Mason's oath, that of the Royal Arch Mason, and others, in all of which are found similar characteristic penalties, as in that of the Entered Apprentice here given, which, if true, will clearly establish the unlawfulness of Masonic penalties. The above named petition was duly referred to a committee, by which, after notice of the time and place, it was considered with open doors, and here is part of the report, viz.: "That we have had the same under consideration and inquired by legal evidence into the truth of the matters therein set forth, and are of the opinion that the same have been substantially proved, and are true." "The committee believe the administration of such oaths to be highly improper, and that the same should be prohibited by legal enactment. Our reasons for this opinion are:

1. Because they are unauthorized by law.

2. Because they bind the person to whom they are administered to disregard and violate the law.

3. Because they are in their natural tendency, subversive of public morals and blasphemous.

4. Because the penalties attached to the breach of them are such as are entirely unknown to our law, and are forbidden both by the Constitution of the United States, and by the constitution of this State."

This shows us what Masonic oaths and penalties were then. Masons tell us that Masonry don't change. It may grow, but never changes. See Sickels, Mackey, Webb, and others. I leave you to "cipher out" this problem for yourself, whilst I jot down an opinion or two on this point. Daniel Webster, the great American statesman and expounder of the Constitution, says, "It is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths and the formation of all such obligations should be prohibited by law." Gov. John Hancock says, "I am opposed to all secret associations." President J. Q. Adams says, "Secrets written in blood should be revealed; a tree that bears such fruits should be hewn down." "No butcher, says he, "would mutilate the carcass of a bullock or a swine, as the Masonic candidate swears consent to the mutilation of his own, for the breach of an absurd and senseless secret." "It is an oath of which a common cannibal would be ashamed."

An Editor's Trials.

The Cynosure of October 1st contained a very interesting article from the pen of Seth W. Payne, who, though a Freemason, sums up his considerable experience with in honest, if not very flattering terms The following is a brief history of the struggles of this interesting young man:

Among the inmates that used to assemble each morning for the daily routine of convict labor, at the State Penitentiary at Albany, was a young man in the prime of life, whose name stands at the head of the editorial columns of a daily paper owned and edited by him in the thriving city of Utica, in the central part of this State. Several years ago, after some experience with country newspapers, Seth Wilbur Payne, the subject of this sketch, and who began his careers in Utica as a boot-black, traveled over Europe on foot and wrote sketches to the Utica Observer under the title of "Poor Student." Though a student of life, Payne was no bookworm, and returned in time to enter into active business in the suburbs of the metropolis. By his characteristic perseverance he soon accumulated capital, and in the fall of 1870, with his available funds, amounting to some thousands of dollars, set out for Utica to start The Daily Morning Call, in competition with two established and wealthy journals. The prospects of having his mettle and purse put to a severe test in this well-filled field caused him to turn westward, where the promising but unbuilt city of Duluth, on the Eastern Division of the Northern Pacific road, attracted and secured him among its earliest settlers. In accordance with traditional pioneer custom of starting with nothing and gaining prominence and wealth by individual effort, the first number of the Duluth Morning Call, the size of a letter sheet, was printed on a hand-press in a rude cabin, where a dry goods box served as an imposing stone and tallow candles nailed to the cases furnished the compositors light. A sketch of this office appeared in the London Illustrated News as a novel illustration of pioneer civilization. The Call proved a spicy and characteristic sheet, was quoted by the press generally, grew to a respectable size and was soon in such demand as to compel the happy editor to increase his facilities by the erection of a commodious office and purchase of a Taylor press. The winter of 1870–71 was unusually severe, even for the wilderness of Minnesota, and the glorious promises of business enterprises proving a myth, soon reduced the number of inhabitants from several thousand to a few hundreds, and, as usual, those who remained did so from a lack of funds to get away. The Call was throughout bitter and unrelenting in its denunciations and exposures of the fraudulent inducements held out by the railroad company to attract settlers, and especially workingmen, to Duluth, and the company retaliated by refusing to allow the Call to be sold on their line, and in other ways persecuted the editor until he was obliged to suspend publication.

Added to the loss of capital and business, came a family bereavement, wrecking all hopes for success in the West, and Payne returned East in time to get control of the Utica Daily Bee, a small morning paper started soon after his proposed advent there with the Morning Call. Grasping this unlooked for opportunity with a will, Payne set to work to retrieve his fallen fortunes and establish an independent daily. For expressing too broad an opinion as to the probable motive of a certain district judge in the McCarty street car shooting case, he was arrested and sentenced to four months hard labor in the penitentiary, which sentence he served out. Meanwhile his wife, who during this eventful newspaper experience had become familiar with the duties of the sanctum, edited and published the Bee regularly, enlivened its columns frequently by paragraphs, jail personals and sketches from the pen of the imprisoned editor. This last effort to establish an independent paper seems not to have passed unnoticed. Before Payne's removal from the county jail to the penitentiary, a deputation of able citizens interfered, and were authorized to offer full pardon if he would retract the obnoxious statements in his paper. After delivering his answer in the following caustic words, he proudly shook the dust of "pent-up Utica" from his feet until the expiration of his term in the following July:

"I thank you, gentlemen, for your kindness, and I wish I could comply with your request. It grieves me to think that I have wronged Judge Doolittle. I am sorry that circumstances required me to state so plainly my opinion of him. I did not do it to injure Judge Doolittle, but to befriend an unbefriended woman. I may have been mistaken in all this matter. My eyes and ears may have deceived me. It is human to err, and I have often thought that God had given me more than an ordinary allowance of human qualities in this direction. I am constantly making mistakes. I may have made a mistake in thinking Judge Doolittle a dishonest man; but, gentlemen, those were my honest thoughts when I expressed them through my little paper, and I should be a sneaking hypocrite did I not tell you that they are my honest thoughts now. I wish they were otherwise. I am sorry to think ill of any man; besides I crave my liberty; but I cannot accept it on the terms you offer."—Telegram.

Fuss and Feathers.

From the Chicago Tribune, Oct. 22.

A telegram tells a strangely-uninterested world that the Great Council of the Indiana Improved Order of Red Men has convened at Bourbon. The Pottawatomie Tribe, No. 16, has given the G. C. of the I. I. O. of R. M. a banquet. There must have been a very joyous gathering, for not only was the Great Chief present, but eke the Great Sachem, the Great Keeper of the Wampum, and other Great Somethings-or-Other ad lib. The Great Builder of the Camp-Fire and the Great Tomahawker and the Great Smoker of the Great Pipe of Peace are not mentioned in the dispatches, but they are no doubt on hand. Such chances to write capital letters after one's name are not willingly lost. If Jones, of Podunk, signes himself Grand High Head Center of the Podunk Section of the Sovereigns of Sham, shall not Smith, of Waupun, append to his name the initials which signify to the initiated eye that he, Smith, who is to the outer world a retail grocer, shines in a select circle as the Great Scalper of the Waupun Tribe of the Indiana Improved Order of Red Men? It is surely a harmless fancy. If Smith, in the privacy of the "lodge-room," or the "council chamber," or the "wigwam," enjoys strutting about with red on his cheeks and an assortment of feathers in his hair, and a bow which he cannot string and arrows with which he cannot hit a mark ten feet off in his hands, why should he be denied the gratification? Nay, if he chooses to provide innocent amusement for the street-boys by parading in public with aprons or other toggery, why should the wish be gainsaid? The life of the average American is so very flat that even such fol-de-rol may be a diversion. Our particular Smith is doubtless proud of being not only a Red Man with two capital letters, but an Improved Red Man with three. He feels a keen thrill of delight when, after he has climbed three flights of back-stairs, and wrapped in a mysterious and impressive manner upon a small door, the Great Scout of the Wigwam Entrance whispers in a husky voice: "Who is the stranger who seeks the council-fires of the Winnebagoes?" It would be sad, indeed, to have to reply, "Smith, retail grocer." How infinitely more satisfactory to answer: "Tis Bounding Buck, the Great Sculptor of the Etc., etc."! After such an interchange of big words, the narrow room, with its soiled carpet, its settees, and its big spittoons, is an earthly edition of heaven to the enraptured Smith. He spends a happy evening in "gathering round the council-fire" (Anglice, putting his boots on the stove), "smoking the calumet," and listening to the "braves." When his stammering speech, studied with remarks about burying the hatchet and unstringing the bow, and other extracts from the sayings of dime-novel Indians, has received its meed of applause, Smith goes home under the firm conviction that the Order of Improved Red Men, especially as represented by the Winnebago Tribe, and more particularly by its Great Scalper of that tribe (to-wit: Smith), is about the biggest thing on earth. Let us leave him undisturbed in his sweet delusion. He is but one of many worshipers of fuss and feathers.

PURITANISM AND HERESY.—The most dazzling word known to the vocabulary of the nineteenth century is "Puritanism." The most imposing fact that the nineteenth century finds in history is Puritanism. For the nineteenth century stands in the midst of a blazing splendor such as no part of the past ever knew, and this splendor is an emanation from Puritanism. Our era has a form of democratic society such as the sages of Greece, Rome and mediæval Italy vainly longed and strove for. And this she owes directly to Puritanism, to Puritan development of Matthew 18. 17. She possesses the priceless gift of toleration; every human being among us having a right to think, speak and write just what opinions he plesses, and to worship just as he wishes. This most magnificent possession the nineteenth century owes to Puritanism. For Roger Williams, although a Baptist, was completely Puritan in his training. The nineteenth century has a system of free education of priceless value. This she owes to Puritanism. In all the great humanities of ministering to the poor, the sick, the bereft of reason, Puritanism has led to the highest and noblest ground yet occupied, except in the matter of caring for the poor, where Quakerism far outdoes her. But . . . the nineteenth century is as thick with heresies as a tropical soil is with plants. And these heresies stimulate to discussion, quicken and invigorate, thought and investigation, and awaken passion, which gives enterprise, energy and industry, ending in a boundless production of every good and useful thing. Now, Puritan lands are the very hothouses whence these heresies are taken. Massachusetts is the chief house of Puritanism, and from the days of Ann Hutchinson to these of the Index, her air has been thicker with heresies than sunbeams with motes. Truly, it is not wonderful that from Macaulay's article on Milton to the latest poems of Whittier and Lowell, and essays of Emerson and Holmes, the finest modern literature has been one continued pæan to Puritanism.—The Journal.

It is advisable to keep continually before the people the burdensome cost of war. It is the heaviest financial yoke laid upon the people of this age, and in some countries it crushes them to the last point of endurance. It not only strips them of their money, but barbarises public sentiment, by making the mere soldier honored above the worthiest benefactor, and it diverts the public energy from the paths of industrial development and prosperity. Everything, therefore, which tends to break up this hateful dominion of violence ought to be encouraged, like those influences which have nearly put an end to duelling in enlightened communities. Duels among nations are yet to be equally condemned by public opinion.—Boston Post.

WESTFIELD, Ind., 10 month, 16th, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I was in company with Bro. J. P. Stoddard through most of his campaign in Hamilton county, Ind. He delivered twenty-four lectures in this county against Freemasonry and its kindred secret orders. He is a bold and able speaker, though mild and pleasant. I believe that he has been instrumental in doing much good in turning the minds of the people in the county to investigate for themselves those secret orders, and what they are doing. May God bless the dear brother abundantly and the cause in which he is engaged. We had our American ticket for county offices in the field, which received quite a commendable vote. We feel much encouraged to press on in this good cause. P. RICH.

Elder Rathbun at Fairfield, Mich.—A State Lecturer Wanted.

WESTON, Mich., Oct. 20, 1874.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The friends of the anti-secret cause will no doubt be glad to hear from this part of the field again.

Since Mr. Baird was here in March last, we have had no lectures till last week. Elder D. P. Rathbun came among us then and delivered five lectures. He lectured twice in the Baptist church, once in the South Christian church, and twice at Imerson's Hall at Fairfield village.

There was a good turn out at all the places and especially at the last one, and the interest grew till the close; and considering the topic handled, five better lectures were never listened to by this people.

When the bills were posted giving notice of the lectures the Masons professed to very glad; for "times," they said, "were getting rather dull since Mr. Baird was here," when they claimed to have reaped a great harvest of recruits. But that kind of talk has ceased to alarm any intelligent Anti-mason about here in consequence of its being so often repeated.

In the Cynosure of Oct. 8th, brother Rathbun sat for his portrait to an artist signing his name "Goodwin" which caused us to look for an individual resembling a Camanche or Modoc; but great and happy was our surprise to find a pleasant-spoken and affebal Christian gentleman, and a week's acquaintance only increased our respect and esteem for him.

His critic "Goodwin," appears to belong to that class who > "Condemn with faint praise

> And without sneering sneer."

But few of the fraternity attended the lectures till the last one which was on Saturday night, and as that was lodge night and the lodge was just across the street, a good many of them came in before the close of the lecture. They set an example, however, which might be creditably followed by their brethren of the craft in other places. They conducted themselves like gentlemen; but it may be owing in part to the healthy state of public sentiment hereabouts.

At the close of the last lecture a merchant in the place, Mr. W., a Fellow-Craft, rose and said that as the speaker had said considerable about the meanness of the lodge he wished to know if he, (Bro. R.) would publish the meanness of the M. E. church in the place in appropriating a donation the Masons had made a former minister of that church, to their own credit.

Bro. Rathbun said he certainly would and with the greatest pleasure if the gentleman would write it out and sign it, which he promised to do.

After he had taken his seat Bro. Van Norman, a former class-leader and official member of the church, took the floor and gave a circumstantial account of the matter referred to by Mr. W.

The minister in question was a Mason, and was sent back the third year at the request of Masons, they promising to assist in his support, but after he came, utterly refused to give one cent for which the church should have credit. The church was to give him $800 salary if they could raise it; but would guarantee $700 of that amount. The church actually paid him $730, which was all they could raise. The donation of the Masons was never passed to the credit of the church or claimed by them in any way. Bro. Rathbun said he would append this to Mr. W's. report when it should be forth coming. Mr. W. rose again and said there must be some mistake about it, and those who had misinformed him must explain it and took his seat somewhat crestfallen. During his remarks he said he was not a Mason, had taken only two degrees, and when he had taken the third he supposed he would then be a Mason. But as some of the audience had seen him in a Masonic procession recently, with both corners of his bib down, it was feared he might be accused of lying, so one of the older brethren, it is said, called out to him to sit down, which he did.

Here, as elsewhere, when Masons begin to talk in public they get into difficulty, and they certainly came out second best in this case, and this matter about the minister's salary, which they had kept in the wind for years, has now ended in their total discomfiture.

Anti-masonic principles are taking root here and spreading. Last spring at our town meeting we polled one hundred votes for a clean Anti-masonic ticket, and what is true of this town is true of other towns in the county and State as to Anti-masonic sentiment, though, perhaps, undeveloped. What is imperatively needed is organization. Without this, opposition to this great evil will be without effect; but with proper organization, properly directed, its strength can only be measured by the might of truth against error.

I wish to take this opportunity to invite attention of the Anti-masons of Michigan to this subject. We need a lecturer who shall devote his whole time to the work of lecturing and organizing towns, counties, and the State. Bro. Rathbun appears to be favorably impressed with what he has seen among us in his recent tour in the State; and I have no doubt but he could be obtained for that position if it was so desired.

Brethren, let us hear from you through the Cynosure and otherwise in regard to the matter. At all events, Organize! Organize!!

Bro. Rathbun had the misfortune to lose his pocket-book, containing $26, either by dropping it, or having his pocket picked, probably the latter, but he went away, we are happy to say, rather better off than when he came. He went from here to Gorham, Ohio, about 25 miles distant, and leaves for home on Wednesday, the 21st inst. The Lord is showing how great things he must suffer for his name's sake, but we believe he will use him for his glory.

I cannot close without expressing the hope that the matter of organizing the State will be taken up and pushed with energy till it is accomplished.

Yours for truth and Gospel,

C. QUICK.

Jottings from the New York Field.

DEAR K:—My last, if I remember rightly, left me at Carthage. The morning of the 2d of October, found me again on the wing, or without metaphor, steaming away on the cars to WATERTOWN, and from thence ten miles South, to Adams village, where I arrived some time after dark, and was taken in charge by Marquis Woodward, a good Baptist brother, member of the church in whose house of worship I was to speak. He drove with me through darkness which might be felt to the place of concourse, where, in consequence of the threatening weather, I found only a few men, with the pastor of the church, awaiting my coming. To these I was soon introduced. In conversation, I told them that my plans would compel my stay with them over Sabbath, when something was said about my preaching for them. To this I replied that I would gladly preach for them in the morning, if they would allow me the desk in the evening to give them a sermon on the Religion of Masonry. The pastor, being appealed to, responded rather cooly, I thought, that the house belonged to to the brethren, and they could do as they liked; and as they "liked," it was decided that it should be as I wished.

This matter being settled, I took the stand, and spoke for an hour, on the "Beginnings" of Freemasonry, to the smallest audience I have yet had. It, however, made a good beginning, and paved the way for what was yet to come. At the close of the meeting, Bro. Woodward took me home with him, through the darkness, and made me welcome, and during my stay gave me some thing of a history of the church.

The old State Road Baptist church, with its house of worship, situated one mile east of Adams Center, is a mother of churches, and is now a vigorous body or over 200 members; and what will most interest your readers, has for forty years retained on her church records a noble protest against Freemasonry; and has until lately, rigidly carried out her discipline against members who broke her covenant by joining the lodge. Just at this time, however, she begins to lay in the work. She has now a member, who has become a Mason, and who has locked horns with the church, and bids fair to drive her from her position. The pastor, with many of the younger portion of the church, it is believed, are in favor of retaining him, and with him, of course, giving the devil of secretism a home in the church. A desperate struggle or a weak surrender is imminent with that church. Let all who love Christ better than this modern anti-Christ, pray that God may give the old soldiers a glorious victory, this once, and again if need be.

The arguments for the treacherous surrender are such stereotyped "nambypambyisms" as these: "Other churches admit Masons, and if we don't do the same, they will all be against us; and point the finger of scorn at us. Or, it will stir up strife in the church, and make difficulty," etc. The Masons all about are telling the young man to stand his ground and fight it out with the church. Here will be found an all-sufficient reason why the pastor should not be pleased with my visit and labors at this juncture of affairs. If he indeed favored the surrender of the position so long maintained by the church, my presence must have been an embarrassment to him, and I really felt for him. At all events he gave me scant courtesy, giving me no encouragement to converse with him, not even inviting me to his house. I attributed this to his undecided position, and not to any natural want of courtesy or kindliness of heart.

The next day I met with the church, in their monthly covenant meeting, and joyfully took part with them, feeling it good to be there. In the evening I addressed a goodly number on the "Obligations of Freemasonry," and on Sabbath preached morning and evening, taking up my latter discourse the "Religion of Masonry." I can but believe that much good was done here; and such, I was given to understand, was the feeling of the older members, some of whom told me they looked upon my coming, as truly of God, from which they had derived courage to go on with the contest they saw before them. God grant them a safe deliverance!

It was in this town of Adams that Prof. Finney was converted, and abjured Masonry. Dea. Wm. Harris told me that he remembered hearing Mr. Finney offer a prayer at a Masonic funeral more than 50 years ago. It was with this church, that Elder Freeman, the father of A. D. Freeman, whose "Appeal to Baptist ministers" you lately published, so long labored, and his memory is yet fondly cherished by the members, as I discovered after having alluded to his experience while taking the oath in the lodge room. By the way, did I ever tell your readers about it? If not, let me tell it as I had it from the lips of his own son A. D. F.

The old gentleman was receiving and repeating the Master's oath, from the lips of the Worshipful Master, who was also a Baptist minister, of his acquaintance; and when he came to the clause respecting the keeping of secrets, Elder Freeman said: "Bro. Emory I can't take that oath!" The Master, however, quieted his scruples by telling him that nothing bad was meant by these words. They were only some of the "old land marks" and would all be explained to his satisfaction; and so he went on, and swallowed the pill thus sugared. He was to have it explained sooner than the Worshipful or himself anticipated. After the work of the evening was over, and the brethren were mingling together, a certain judge in no wise celebrated for his piety, approached the new made brother, and began to test him. Supposing a case "where some brother had wrought some wrong action, and he should come to you, and tell it to you, as a secret, would you keep it?" After some hesitation, Bro. F. replied in the affirmative. The old judge went on from bad to worse, until he culminated in this: "Suppose a brother should find it necessary to take a horse, which did not belong to him, and come to you, asking you to secrete him, and keep his secret, would you do it?" "No!" thundered the now thoroughly awakened Christian. "Then," said the judge, "You are not a Mason!" "Well, then, I am not," was the prompt response; and not being satisfied with the "explanation" our friend walked no more in that "Jewry."

I have taken up so much space with Adams and its suggestions that I have not room nor time to tell of Perch River, of Stone Mills, and Limerick, where, with the exception of Perch River, the same dark and stormy nights attended me, and kept from the meetings many who would have been present, under more favorable auspices. I, however, filled all my appointments, speaking eleven times in ten days, under circumstances of much encouragement, finding true friends for myself and our cause in Elder Fisk, Constableville; Messrs. Albert Holt, in Carthage, Rufus Day in Limerick, Hon. Hugh Smith, of Perch River, and C. D. Graham, of Stone Mills; who, with their families, did all in their power to compensate me for my loss of home privileges. These are God's moral heroes. May his blessing be with them to the end.

Jefferson county is one of the old and strong camping grounds of the Anti-masonry of the Morgan times, and its fires are not yet spent. A little blowing upon its embers and they will break out into a fresh and glowing heat, which will burn up the modern anti-Christ. So mote it be.

Elder Barlow in Jefferson County.

STONE MILLS, Jefferson Co., N. Y., Oct. 7, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Last winter I invited an old minister, a seceded Mason, to preach on the subject of Freemasonry and he gave the institution a rough handling for which he received an anonymous letter threatening his life. After writing a number of letters, I succeeded in getting our State Lecturer, Rev. Mr. Barlow, to lecture at three different points in this vicinity, Perch River, Stone Mills, and Limerick. I heard him at the first two places, and I must say that he is the right man in the right place. He held the audiences spell-bound for about two hours, and I think people have remained quiet an hour longer at either place.

The speaker gave Freemasonry the greatest expose it ever got in all this country, and proved all his assertions by Masonic authority. I very much doubt if Mr. Barlow's superior as a Anti-masonic lecturer can be found in all the land; and I here would say through your valuable paper to all Anti-masons in the State of New York that if they want Freemasonry exposed in all its features, get Mr. Barlow to give them a few lectures.

I was at the village of Dexter to-day and have got the consent of a number of leading men for Mr. Barlow to lecture in the Presbyterian church in that place, and I expect to get other appointments for him at La Fargeville and Brownville, and perhaps at Watertown.

Mr. Barlow has set the Anti-masonic ball rolling in good earnest in this vicinity. The people who heard the lecture appeared to be astonished when they heard the exposures of Freemasonry, especially in its religious features. I I am quite sure that all the people need is that Freemasonry be exposed fully and they will oppose the institution with their might.

I will say before closing that I was under the necessity of having Mr. Barlow speak in our school-house; the two churches in our place are so much under the control of the craft that they cannot be used for Anti-masonic lectures; but at Perch River the church was obtained. I long for the time when our churches will be free from Freemasonry and then the Lord can use them to the pulling down of Satan's kingdom. C. D. GRAHAM.

Idolatry vs. Christianity.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR BROTHER:—If there is really any thing in which Kansas excells every other State, it is in furnishing opposite extremes. This is not only true in regard to her soil, climate, production, politics and education, but the same principle is observed in contrasting her systems of religion. A notable instance of the latter came to our notice on Sabbath, Oct. 11th, in the Presbyterian church of Manhattan, Riley Co.

At the beginning of the morning service the pastor announced that a funeral service would be held in the church at two o'clock in the afternoon, adding that service would be held "promptly at two o'clock by railroad time." Imagine our conjectures, after having seen one of the "Widow's Sons" on the street early in the morning wearing a badge of black crape and white gloves.

The theme of the pastor's discourse was the atonement made by Christ for sin. He spoke in an able and eloquent manner of its completness, its entire satisfaction of God's wrath, of the great love wherewith Christ loved us in giving himself a ransom for our sins, and of the sinner's justification through faith in his atonement. He concluded the service by a prayer for the spread of the Gospel and the overthrow of Satan's kingdom

The church, although capable os seating 400 persons, was furnished with only a small congregation. The Sabbath-school followed the sermon, and was composed of seven classes. The teachers all appeared to be impressed with the importance of the truths contained in the lesson. Here, again, both pastor and wife were earnestly engaged enlisting the attention of the youth to the great truths of the Gospel. Christ was again the leading theme; his power being illustrated by the casting out of the "evil spirit." Mark ix. 17, 29. The sermon, the Sabbath-school, songs sang and prayers offered, all went to show man's unworthiness and Christ's great sufficiency.

In the afternoon at the appointed hour we again repaired to the church. Behold the change! With difficulty we secured a seat in the almost breathless audience, ninety seats being reserved for the funeral procession. For half an hour we waited, the number being steadily augmented by a constant stream of curiosity seekers pouring in until all but the reserved seats were occupied. Still we waited, but hark!—"Halt! Close up now!" burst on our ears. Turning our eyes in the direction of the door, we beheld a procession of men wearing white aprons and gloves and badges of black crape, one of whom bore a "drawn sword," two others "painted rods," one the "open Bible," on which were placed the "square and compass." Some were young men, but most middle aged and well dressed. Following this procession was a hearse containing the remains of the departed "brother-Mason." The corpse was borne into the church by six strong "brothers" and placed directly in front of the pulpit. Then came the procession, "Master and gavel," "Marshall and sword," "—— and open Bible on which were placed the exalted compass and square.

The choir, secured for this occasion, consisted of the superintendent of the Congregational Sabbath-school and wife, the "instructres in vocal music of the State Agricultural College," and others, accompanied by the Presbyterian church organ. The pastor of the church (Rev. Mr. Reid,) read the Scripture, another minister offered a prayer in the name of Jesus, asking, among other things, a blessing on the "fraternity." A few remarks were made by J. A. Anderson, (Rev.) President of the State Agricultural College. He spoke of the deceased "brother" and addressed the craft as "brethren."

He said he would remind them of the meaning of some of their "symbols," the "straight line," the "circle," the "compass." "With a compass we draw a circle; there must be a point around which it is drawn; this point represents the brother, the line drawn the limits of his life. But this circle must pass through two points, one above, one below, this we represent by two parallel lines; the one below represents John the Baptist, the forerunner of Christ, or the "beginning of Christ." (Compare with this John 1–4 and xvii. 5.) "The one above represents John the Evangelist, the end o Christ or the last of Christ's family. (Compare Luke 1.33; 1 Cor. xv. 25–28; Matt. xii. 48–51.) He said the scene before us teaches the great lesson of mortality; commended the widow and the bereaved family to the sympathy of the order, and closed with another prayer in the name of Christ.

The coffin was then opened, and the audience took a last look at their neighbor whose spirit had gone to "God who gave it." The procession was headed by the craft and the drawn sword. Reaching the grave the "craft" formed a "circle" around the grave. The reading of the burial service by the "Master," commending the spirit of the deceased to its Giver, lowering the coffin, depositing the "white apron" in the grave, requiem by the choir, the "grand honors," depositing the evergreen sprigs, and a prayer by the "Worthy Chaplain" in Christ's name, closed the sacriligious rites.

The reader should bear in mind that these prayers were not made in a Masonic lodge and, therefore, not to be taken as representing the character of lodge prayers, Masons being sworn to conceal and never reveal the secrets—i. e., the private workings of the order.

We are informed that at night the Y. M. C. A., at the Agricultural College was attended by seven young men. The leader read the 6th chapter of Mark and opened the meeting by a short prayer. A visitor arose and compared described exercises and institution with the chapter read and other passages of the Bible, earnestly requesting the young men to investigate the great doctrines of the Bible and compare them with the institutions of secrecy. Then followed a prayer for the coming of Christ's kingdom, and the downfall of secret societies. Mr. Editor, does this not complete the contrast? But what is to follow? The Y. M. C. A., we hear, have invited Pres. Anderson to lecture to them shortly. What! a "high Mason" lecture to the Y. M. C. A? "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision." I meet with many kind friends here and many anti-grangers and Anti-masons. The former farce has about exploded.

SIGMA.

Vivisection.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

A discussion has been going on between Henry Bergh, the great animal protector, and Dr. Dalton, who flourishes an "M. D." as a caudal appendage to his name. The drift of said discussion has been to solve these questions: First, does it hurt an animal to cut it to pieces while alive? Second, is the world any wiser because a few men have brutally haggled and cut to pieces animals and birds under the pretext of making scientific experiments? I agree with Mr. Bergh, that no man has a right to gratify a curiosity of any kind by acts of cruelty. And I assert that Mr. Bergh in protesting against such atrocious practices is doing a good act for civilization. Any man who tortures a dumb beast needs civilizing. It would be good policy for our missionary societies to send missionaries to every scientific college in the world, to civilize those professors who carry on such dismal tragedies and use the name of science as an excuse for their cruelties.

Then again, it is not a good example to set before the youth of our land. It has a tendency to make them hard hearted and wicked. There is nothing that is moralizing or that will be beneficial to science about it. No correct idea can be derived about any organ of any animal, if at the time the experiment is made, the victim is pinned or nailed to the table, and struggling in agony, uttering piercing cries, while the knife of the dissecter is performing its brutal work. If it is necessary to experiment on birds and animals, kill them decently, then study them thoroughly. But do not cut them to pieces alive. This is one of the evils of our colleges and it should be obliterated, and not allow the name of science to be disregarded by the practice of vivisection. Yours with respect,

CLARK D. KNAPP.

OUR MAIL.

Henry Hamm, Loda, Ill., writes:

"Enclosed is a post-office order for two dollars and twenty-five cents. The two dollars is for the paper and the twenty-five cents for the postage."

We intentionally put this first. This makes the fourth person who has remitted for postage before we asked for it. We thank these prompt friends, and desire to call the especial attention of our readers to the article on Cynosure postage, page sixteen.

Philip Bacon, Wheatogue, Ct., writes:

"I am trying to do what I can. Yesterday I met one of our popular D. D's, and approached him on the subject of Freemasonry. He confessed that he knew but little about it. I lent him 'Finney' and he promised to read it. His mind seems to be open ready to receive the truth. God grant that the good seed may bring forth an abundant harvest in the advancement of truth against error, which will be to the glory of God. . . . I am anxious to have all good men and women read your paper. May the Lord help us all to do our whole duty."

E. M. Lewis, Sublette, Ill., writes:

"I am much pleased with your paper and believe it represents the only honorable politics by which true Christians may be guided in these times. The unfruitful works of darkness have crept into many hearts in this section, and but few dare utter a word against it, yet I think some would be glad to be freed from the dreadful yoke, but fear the hideous craft. God, in his mercy, has, by his providence, prevented me from taking any stock in secrecy as yet except in the I. O. G. T. and those I joined about nine years ago, and attended one meeting only after my initiation. . . . I am becoming more and more earnest in doing what I can to press the truth concerning those matters home to the hearts of those with whom I am called to associate."

John A, Lambert, Correctionville, Ia., writes:

"There is a little reform fire beginning to burn here. May the Lord increase the flame till it burns all sin."

E. Manville, Turner, Ill., writes:

"I do not like to be without the Cynosure."

G. W. Keller, Medicine Lodge, Kan., writes:

"We have hard times here. This is a very new country. No small grain sowed; and the worms, bugs and grasshoppers ate up everything that was planted. We are seventy-five miles from any point of supplies, then have to pay heavy freight bills. I am now making my arrangements to move into an older settlement in a few weeks. Secrecy influence and rascality of all kinds are very prevalent here. Pray for us."

Mrs. Gideon Durfee, Plymouth, Mich., writes:

"The Lord God is a sun and shield to all who put their trust in him."

F. D. Parish, Sandusky, O., writes:

"I should be very glad could your paper be more extensively taken here and elsewhere, though it does not in all respects satisfy my own views of what our organ should be. . . . I have often urged our Anti-masons to take the paper."

We publish this for the sake of saying that the only sensible way for making the paper better is the one Mr. Parish uses. That is to pay for the paper yourself and get others to pay for it; at the same time pointing out in a kind way its defects. The more expense, within limits, that we put into a paper the better it is.

C. F. Danby, Mt. Holly, O., writes:

"I like the paper exceedingly well, and would not like to part from it. I have not succeeded in obtaining any subscribers yet, but will try to obtain some this winter."

David Kelly, Farmington, Ia., writes:

"I have tried to get new subscribers. Have not got any yet. . . . Let us take courage and battle for the right."

Ira C. Lyon, Ripon, Wis., writes:

"The temperance question has been the great absorbing question for the last six or eight months in Ripon, and I have labored with my might in that work; and to-morrow the State Temperance Convention meets in Ripon. The prohibitionists have nominated a man to represent this district in the next legislature, a good man and true, and we mean to elect him."

B. Williams, Warren, Ill., writes:

"I shall try to attend (the Illinois State Convention which meets in Chicago, Nov. 18th and 19th) and try to get others to come."

We wish every county in the State would send from two to four delegates; but we do not expect this. Let us have representatives from seventy-five counties without fail. Be sure that your county is well represented.

A. C. Burnside, Obrien, Iowa, writes:

"I am in favor of the reform and will do all in my power to help it along. But I think the prospect for getting subscribers poor in this locality as they are mostly secret-society men here but principally grangers. I think a good rousing address from some of our State lecturers would rouse them or stir them up. It does me good to read of the effects of some of the lectures of brother Kiggins and others elsewhere."

M. Lipsett, Sandusky, O., writes:

"Those tracts, I think, have done more to use up the lodge here than any other cause. They circulate in families and are read with astonishment. I pass the tracts around to Masons. They never make any reply except one of my acquaintances told me Bernard must be a mean man to promise to keep secrets and then reveal them. I gave him tracts on that subject, and he does not seem to want to talk to me about any subject. . . I get discouraged, often, and wish I had nothing to do with Masonry, but I hate it and believe it is a swindle and ought to be put down."

If we would be healthy, happy and successful, we must do much disagreeable work.

J. B. Bell, Longton, Kan., writes:

"I am bound not to send my name alone this time. Times are extremely hard in this part of Kansas, owing to drouth, chintz bugs, and grasshoppers. These are great judgments; may they be sanctified to the people."

When a subscriber from the grasshopper region shows such a spirit, what ought others to do who live in localities where the crops have been reasonably good? Will you not do your best to send in new subscriptions?

Philip Bacon, Wheatogue, Ct., writes:

"I feel that this is the Lord's work, and I am glad to do it for him."

Jesse Stubbs, Vermillion, Ill., writes:

"I am as zealous in the cause of anti-secrecy as any man living I believe, but am unable to do much for the cause from old age, poverty and hard times, though I hope to do better in the future."

E. S. Bunce, Muscatine, Iowa, writes:

"I have been journeying fromhome for the past month. . . I am glad on returning to find my faithful friend, the Cynosure, waiting my approach and with pleasure peruse its columns. May heaven's choicest blessings be upon it and its managers."

Rev. J. Olney, Bushnell Basin, N. Y., writes:

"I like the paper first rate and will try to enlist others to take it if I can. My conference let me have missionary ground this year. So I shall go over a good deal of ground during the year and I will see what I can do."

We hope you will be very successful in obtaining subscriptions.

Our venerable friend, Robert Stockwell, Lafayette, Ind., orders the paper sent to his grand-son at Key West, Florida, (this is the only paper which goes to that State) and writes:

"I wish him kept free from all Free and accepted Masons. I think them a branch of Satan's police. Your paper also advocates temperance which greatly enhances its value with me. I go against whisky, lager beer, and tobacco—all great evils. Our natural wants are enough, and if well attended to, all-sufficient for us. We need no artificial ones. . . I hear occasionally from our good friend Gen. Phelps. He is true to the anti-secret cause. I think a few good lectures in this city, by a strong man, would add many subscribers to your paper. Please excuse this poor scroll. My hand is not steady, but as good I suppose as most of my age. I lack a few weeks of ninety years. I am blessed with good health for which I feel very thankful to the Giver of all good."

The handwriting is very good.

LESSON XLV.—NOV. 8, 1874.—THE TWO COMMANDMENTS.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK xii. 28-34, and Commit 28-34. Primary verses 30, 31.

28 And one of the scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, Which is the first commandment of all?

29 And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord:

30 And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment.

31 And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.

32 And the scribes said unto him, Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; and there is none other but he:

33. And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbor as himself is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices.

34 And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durst ask him any question.

Not far from the Kingdom, verse 34.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

What is the first topic? Who first came to question Jesus? (ch. xi. 27-33.) What did they question? In this they made themselves judges. When the Lord asked them a question what was their reply? (ch. xi. 33.) They were false; they said, "we cannot tell." Jesus will not answer falsehood. He said, "neither tell I you." The story (ch. xii. 1-11) he told to illustrate their condition and punishment. Who next asked questions? (verse 13.) Who next? (verse 18.) Who next? (verse 28.) What does Matthew call him? (ch. xxii. 35.) The scribes were learned men who copied the law. He wished to learn. The scribes had 613 classifications of the commandments, 365 prohibitions for the days of the year, and 248 commandments corresponding to the parts of the body.

What is the second topic? Where are these Scriptures found? (Deut. vi. 4, 5; Lev. xix. 18. See also Ex. xx. 3.) There is only one God, and only one commandment. All the others are included in this. What is said in 1 John iv. 20. 21? What in Rom. xiii. 10? How are we to love God? (verse 30.) That is with our whole being. Do you think any one except Jesus ever did this? How are we to love our neighbors? Not as we do love ourselves, but as we should love ourselves.

What is the third topic? Did the scribe approve of Jesus' reply? (32, 33.) What does God say about obedience? (1 Sam. xv. 22.) What about Jesus as our sacrifice? (Heb. x. 12, 14.) He kept the law, rendered the obedience, and then made an offering for us.

What is the fourth topic? What is meant by discreetly? (verse 34.) What did Jesus say to him? (verse 34.) What do you think Jesus meant? How near could you come to entering into a house, and yet not enter? How near to a dinner and not eat? How near to being saved, and yet be lost? Are you near to God in your thoughts, in your lives? Will you be in the kingdom?

What is the fifth topic? Had Jesus answered all his questions? What did the Lord then do? (verse 35; Matt. xxii. 41, 42.) Has Jesus answered your questions? He will ask you some. "Are you a sinner?" "What think you of Christ?" "How far are you from the kingdom?" When will you enter?—National Sunday-School Teacher.

The Sabbath-School at Home.

That earnest advocate of the Sabbath-school, Dr. Vincent, enforces one point in many of his addresses which might go unheaded because it is so obvious; but can hardly be reiterated too often. The work of the Sabbath-school can never supplant that of the family. The notion that a youth's or a child's religious life begins and ends with the Sabbath-school is well nigh fatal to a healthy household Christianity. True home religion finds in the school an assistant, not a substitute. The school should be disbanded that takes away from the family circle aught of its responsibilities or sweet domestic intercourse.

The Sabbath-school may be vitalized as a spiritual force says Rev. J. B. Tyler:

(1.) By a more distinct recognition of the true source of spiritual life and power; studying the Scriptures as a vital means of grace. Making the schools Bible schools; ruling out the nonsense and clap-trap, and studying and impressing the Word of God upon the heart. (2.) Personal attention of pastors to the schools. (3.) Concentration of forces to flank the enemy instead of allowing him to establish his batteries before we charge upon them. (4.) By more intelligent faith in the religious possibilities of childhood. (5.) Indentifying the school more fully with the home.

—How to obtain and keep order in Infant Classes: (1.) Keep the children's minds busy. (2.) Provide frequent changes. (3.) Find illustrations in familiar home pictures. (4.) Meet them socially through the week. (5) Never give information without asking for it again. (6) Never ask a child what he does not understand, but exemplify first and question afterwards, and give the child opportunity to question the teacher.

No one teaches well who does not question well. The aim of questioning is to stir children to mental activity. We know best what we experience. The teacher needs to know how much of each lesson the child has in his heart, and to do this the child must have the pleasure of telling it. The teacher must tell facts that he himself wishes to remember. Impressions must be burned in as in the camera before they will stay. Every question should have for its object the development of the truths of the lesson.—Mrs. Sara Timanus Crafts.

Morgan's Murder Sustained by Masonry.

[Anti-masonic Review, 1829.]

All the stout-hearted of the fraternity at the West, long denied the forcible abduction, and in the East and the South they continue perseveringly to deny it. On grand juries a majority of Freemasons, not only acquitted their brethren presented for this crime, but strangely certified in one instance, that no proof was offered, showing that Morgan had been carried on the Ridge Road. Freemasons calumniated the Lewiston Committee; threatened the lives and the property of its members; and made their honest name odious in this Christian land.

"Denunciations," says Mr. Weed in the Anti-masonic Inquirer, of Rochester, "commenced with the first steps taken to ascertain the fate of Morgan, and the vengence of Masonry has pursued the people through every stage of that investigation. For the first three months after the outrage, the man who even hinted that Masons had committed it, was branded as a calumniator. Those who voluntarily entered upon an investigation, were denounced as disturbers of the public peace. The fraternity, with almost one voice, and with their boasted 'force of concert,' sent abroad endless fabrications, to mislead and abuse the public mind, and a paper in this village, which alluded to the outrage, was bullied into a retraction by one of the conspirators."

By these and like individual acts of malevolence toward those who have dared to look into the abuse of a freeman by secret Freemasonry, the institution has sustained, and does yet sustain the monstrous outrage. But higher proof follows. Taber Potter, a Royal Arch Mason of Seneca Co., discloses the fact that Dr. Fyfield, the delegate from that county to the grand fraternity of New York, informed him Masonically that the Grand body paid by vote money from their funds for the support of the Morgan conspirators. A great storm was raised, Mr. Potter and the publisher were prosecuted in the amount of $5,000 alleged damages; but, lo! the suitor after two continuances entered a nolle prosequi.

Parson G. Shipman, of Onandagua county, in May last says: "I was informed in June, 1827, by one of the members of the Grand Lodge, in whom I could place implicit confidence, that a distinguished individual in Niagara county, who was deeply implicated in the abduction of Morgan, and who has since been convicted (but not sentenced) was paid out of the funds of the Grand Lodge, one hundred dollars, because he had suffered! I was also informed that the Grand Lodge had increased its charity fund for the purpose of assisting those who were implicated in the Morgan affair. Within a few months the above has been confirmed to me by two other individuals, members of the Grand Lodge in 1827."

Henry F. Yates, a Royal Arch Mason of Montgomery county, N. Y, says: "No honest and conscientious Mason, who attended the Grand Lodge in 1827, in the city of New York, can and dare deny on his corporal oath, that the Grand Lodge did vote and pay to Eli Bruce, [since convicted of the Morgan conspiracy,] $250, to indemnify him, in part, for his losses and removal by Gov. Clinton from his office of sheriff of the county of Niagara."

This he challenges the Grand Lodge, if they deny it, to submit to a feigned issue in the Supreme Court, and pledges himself to prove it to their shame, and to the satisfaction of the court and jury.

It is admitted by Western Masons in familiar conversation, that much money has been contributed by the constituted authorities of the fraternity, to support the Western sufferers? And who are the Western sufferers? The men who "have robbed the State of a citizen, a citizen of his liberty, a wife of her husband, and a family of helpless children of the endearments and protecting care of a parent."—Judge Throop.

The men who have thrown a firebrand into the standing corn of our privileges, and are determined at the risk of the harvest to fan the flame already kindled there; the men who have put the State in commotion, the public treasury to expense, and the laws of the land at defiance, for the sake of false and double-tongued Freemasonry.

Add to this, that Richard Howard, or Chipperfield, was received, and entertained and concealed, as a suffering brother, by the Knight Templars of New York, knowing him to be the confessed murderer of William Morgan; and the whole is hidden among them under their oath of secrecy—(Avery Allyn). Let not the reader think this is too much to be credited. Hiram B. Hopkins and others state a fact equally strange, and equally showing that the institution of Freemasonry sustains the outrage upon the liberty and probably upon the life of Captain Morgan. At the installation of the chapter at Lewiston, 14th Sept. 1826, many Masons were assembled from different and distant parts. Among them were Rev. clergymen of different denominations, civil and military officers, and men sworn to support the constitution and laws of the land, and also, the constitution and laws of Freemasonry. In the early morning of that day Captain Morgan had been falsely imprisoned in the Powder Magazine, at Fort Niagara. "And this was generally known among the Masons assembled there."—H. B. Hopkins.

It is the language of charity unconscious of these facts, to say: "I entertain the most entire confidence that the fraternity did not participate in this crime—I fully believe that they hold the perpetrators in just abhorence, that they would rejoice if the guilty were discovered, and would aid in bringing the murderers to condign punishment;" but the facts are otherwise. The veracity of Avery Allyn has not been, and cannot be impeached, and the testimony of Hiram B. Hopkins is not controverted. By the reluctant and late testimony of these witnesses, the fraternity are made to appear in large bodies to have connived at the outrage, to have concealed important facts relating to it, and to have aided in his escape one of the most daring and lawless actors in the violent affair.

And the fraternity, far from rejoicing, when the guilty are discovered, by every jest, and foolish speech, would have at first persuaded the public that no crime had been committed: and forced to yield that, they next set every wheel in motion to distract the honest men in pursuit of the perpetrators of the crime; and now they revile Bates Cooke, Timothy Fitch, and Frederick Whittlesey, and abhor Edward Giddins, and Avery Allyn, ten-fold more than they do Wright and Cheesbro, Ganson and Lawson and Sawyer.

So far from aiding "in bringing the murderers to light," many of the fraternity hate those who attempt it. A Mason that speaks the honest convictions of his mind to the prejudice of Freemasonry in the Morgan outrage, is pursued sharper than the kidnappers of a freeman.

And the effort to give the new check degree with its sublime word, L. O. S. is sufficient to send ministers of Freemasonry, plenipotentiary, to Europe; but to catch the murderer, the order have not strength to send a constable to Liverpool, nor even to hold the fraternal assassin when he is in their hands.

With this evidence before us, the institution must be adjudged not altogether free from the fate of Morgan; but it is deeply stained with it. That the proof obtained comes by the hardest, is enough to satisfy an impartial mind that more is in secret, which time will reveal to the conviction and overthrow of the Masonic institution, and to the confusion of its supporters.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was not sacrificed by private malice, or personal antipathy: he fell not by hands nerved with the violence of sudden passion, or of cold avariee. But Freemasonry has her penalties: to these the life of Capt. Morgan was forfeited, and to these his life was sacrificed by the cruel hands of his brethren in cold blood, stimulated by the spirit of the order.

THE FAST DAY, NOVEMBER EIGHTH.

As this is the last number which will reach all our readers before the fast day, we wish to answer some practical questions concerning it; as, Who shall fast? Why fast? and How to fast.

These questions and others are answered in the ninth chapter of Ezra, the ninth chapter of Nehemiah, and the ninth chapter of Daniel. Indeed, narratives and instances of fasting run throughout the Old Testament and the New. Moses fasted as law-giver; Elijah as reformer and prophet; and Jesus Christ, as the Messiah of the Gospel.

In most of these instances, the fasts were for ridding the world of false religions and restoring the true. One has but to look on the map of the globe to see how false religions sink and the true religion elevates mankind; and the deluge of stupid and useless substitutes for the religion of Christ which is now rushing in to overwhelm the mind of this great and free country is sufficient to fill thoughtful minds with horror. And while the prophet Daniel, to use his words, "was praying and confessing my sins, and the sins of my people," angel ministries were employed for their deliverance. In 1831, while the slave power controlled and corrupted every public interest, the Synod of Cincinnati appointed a day of fasting and prayer for the deliverance of the church and nation. Let us, in like manner, fast and pray for the overthrow of the dark power which stood behind slavery and sheltered it; and which now under one shape and form after another is seeking to perpetuate the reign of lust and cruelty at the South, and embroil the nation so that evil and not good shall reign.

Let us, as Daniel did, confess and forsake our own sins and the sins of our people. The power which is to remove both is in the skies. It will come forth to our aid and instruction again, as of old. And God the Father who is insulted and provoked by invented and rival worships to his own, will be reconciled to us if we seek him aright.

And let us never forget that "we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against wicked spirits in high places." And remember the words of Christ, that "This kind can come forth by nothing but by prayer and fasting." God will certainly be entreated and answer us. He is the "God of light in whom there is no darkness at all." And the net work of secret lodges under various names now encircles the globe we inhabit, and does more to darken conscience, destroy morality, and hide Jesus Christ from the eyes of the soul than all other causes put together. Every idol temple is a lodge, and every lodge is an idol temple! And yet missionaries of the Cross have been advised, and some take the advice, to become "blind leaders of the blind" by joining lodges which exclude Christ and worship Satan!

UNREGENERATE MINISTERS.

The number of preachers is steadily increasing who seem to be utterly ignorant of the spiritual life, and who do not possess even the language of Canaan. W. H. H. Murray who has just left Park Street Church, Boston, would seem to be one of these. He opened his ministry there with a bold and dashing humanitarianism, in which he recommended the city of Boston to purchase and adorn a wooded park back in the country, and run cars to it, which should pour the poorer masses of the city down in that wooded park on the Sabbath, to give them a good time, and enable them to enjoy the Sabbath day. Similar ideas have been often uttered from the Plymouth pulpit of Brooklyn. This, of course, would bring back the worships and debaucheries of the "groves and high places" of extinct Israel or the later orgies of Bacchus in Greece, where the groves of Attica were nightly made horrid with the shrilling screams, dishevelled locks and nude persons of the female Bacchantes. But this stuff was swallowed by gaping multitudes as a gospel of pity for the poor and working classes; besides, was it not original, lovely and eloquent?

It is said of Jeroboam, after the terrible denunciations of his godless worships at Dan and Bethel, by the prophet who was afterwards deceived and slain by a lion, that "After this thing Jeroboam returned not from his evil way, but whomsoever he would, he consecrated him, and he became one of the high priests of the high places. And this thing became a sin unto the house of Jeroboam, even to cut it off and to destroy it from the face of the earth."

The time was when something was made of the evidences of regeneration and a divine call to preach; but the "high places" of Brooklyn and Boston and New Haven are fast making such notions obsolete, and filling the American pulpits with a spawn of unregenerate preachers who draw and delight those delirious multitudes, who are indeed zealous for religion, but who prefer Barrabbas to Christ! "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."

THE GREAT APOSTASY BEGUN.

The Chicago Tribune, which advocates a "broad road" theology, yet with some mark of astonishment. gives entire, an article from Rev. Geo. S Merriam, a Congregational minister, and assistant editor of H. W. Beecher's paper, The Christian Union, which commits that paper to simple, vulgar, bald Universalism.

The Christian Union editor, after asserting that the doctrine of the endless punishment of the wicked is a "slander upon God," which is "rapidly dying out of the minds of men," proceeds to say, "Mankind could never have got out of some of its ruts if it had not, by a divinely implanted instinct, trusted its own best intelligence against what seemed to be inspired teaching." Again, "On such a subject as the eternal destiny of the race, it seems to me at least as satisfactory and as reasonable to ask our own minds what is consistent with supreme intelligence and goodness, as to study the probable correctness of Aristotle's etymology of aion."

The whole article is consistent with these extracts. It is an appeal to that "mankind" who crucified God's "Beloved Son;" and who would have crucified the Eternal Father if they could; whether that Father can consistently with his "supreme intelligence and goodness," punish sinners during their eternal voluntary persistence in sin! Nay, the writer charges that if God does so punish the wicked dead, he will be guilty of "shutting them up to eternal sinning." Whereas, Christ has not shut up "Satan and his angels," for whom hell is "prepared;" but they met and tempted and resisted him and "tormented" men on earth. The Scriptures teach that hell is the voluntary chosen home of the wicked; that they prefer it to heaven, as rogues and prostitutes prefer a liquor-hell to a prayer-meeting, even while "wailing and gnashing their teeth" and "cursing God and looking upward." So the Commune prefers its political hell to well ordered society in France to-day.

True, John saw an angel flying in the heavens, "having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand;" and he bound Satan, and "shut him up." This is vision, photograph, prophecy. But, we are told in literal language, that Satan is to be "destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming," i. e., by the prevalence of truth. And to charge God with shutting up men to sin because he punishes them for sinning, is as impudent and illogical as for Ku-klux brigands and cut-throats to charge the United States with "shutting them up" in the dens and fastnesses to which they flee from the society of good men, as men will flee to the darkness and discomforts of hell because they love darkness and hate light.

Reason has no protest against the endless punishment of incorrigible men. We have seen evil pursue folly, and misery vice; and it is rational to suppose it may be so in hell where there are no prayer-meetings, Sabbath-schools and other means of moral recovery; the doctrine of endless punishment must depend on revelation, as must all doctrine of the world beyond this. And if the Bible teaches anything, it teaches endless punishment. Job declares: "The eyes of the wicked shall fail and he shall not escape." Moses, that God will "hide his face from them;" at the end; Isaiah, "He that made them will not have mercy upon them, and he that formed them will show them no favor;" Daniel, that "They shall rise from the dead to shame and everlasting contempt;" Jude, that the wicked Sodomites are suffering "the vengeance of eternal fire;" and John, that "they shall be tormented forever and ever in the presence of God and the Lamb;" and the Son of God and final Judge of men, that "They shall go away into everlasting punishment!" Therefore to charge the doctrine of "endless punishment" on the few faithful ministers that preach it while the Bible everywhere asserts it, is worthy only of sneaks and cowards who dare not yet directly snub and insult the Bible, and so charge its plain teaching on good men and abuse them for it.

But what produces this protest against endless punishment by that paper now? Are its readers, the admirers of H. W. Beecher and his managing editor, Oliver Johnson, who disbelieves the Bible to be God's word, in danger of being consumed with overmuch fear and dread of Divine punishment? No. They have shown that if Mr. Beecher should commit adultery Saturday night they would hail and relish his preaching none the less on the Sabbath following.

We respectfully request The Tribune to insert this our protest against the impudence and irreligion of The Christian Union. The endless punishment of the wicked dead is to-day an article of professed belief in all the evangelical churches to which that paper looks for its support. And the coolness of its impudence toward those churches in deriding and scouting this article of their belief, is only equalled by its blasphemy of God in charging him with "shutting up to sin" the lost in hell, unless he gives them the liberty of the universe. The time will come when such sheets as the Union will not be allowed in the houses of Christian men and women.

DIED, at St. Charles, Minn., on the 16th inst., Oren Cravath, one of the oldest and firmest friends of our reform. He was widely known throughout Minnesota and the North-west as a staunch opponent of the lodge, and seldom passed through Chicago without visiting the Cynosure office. The particulars of his death and interesting facts connected with his useful life are given elsewhere in a communication from a near relative.

NOTES.

—The position of the papal church against the lodges is drawing large comment from the press from the defection of Lord Ripon. Popery, as the careful reader of Robison and Barruel will find is not opposed to secret orders on general grounds, but from her trouble with the Illuminati, Freemasons and other secret orders, which a hundred years ago endeavored to revolutionize society and reform the church. They were bitter opponents of the Jesuits, who now rule the papacy, and in self-defense denounce all rivals as dangerous to their own power.

—The English Independent, in a long article on this question. says, "The modern church of Rome, having sold itself to the Jesuits, will not tolerate any secret society that pretends to be, or possibly may become, a rival to the Jesuits. She makes this as a test of obedience, and those who are willing to take her for their spiritual guide, and to put their consciences in her keeping, have no right to complain if she exacts this as a test of the sincerity of their conversion. Forsaking all other, will they keep only to her? to use the words of the English marriage service. A good Romanist is to have no other allegiance than hers; and as the husband is entitled to prescribe what society his wife shall keep, and what friends she shall surround herself with, so the church of Rome lays down the same terms to those who wish to enter her communion."

—The Hebrew Leader, a strong secret society organ, says that a belief in the authenticity of the Scriptures is not a prerequisite for Masonic membership. This is in harmony with the degraded use of the Bible in the lodge; but not with the sanctimonious language of Masonic orators when working for members whom they imagine to have some conscience and piety.

—Remember the day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of secret societies and the promotion of pure Christianity. Do not forget the lecturers on that day. Pray that they may have a fresh consecration for the work, a new baptism of the Holy Spirit; that they may be instrumental in turning many to righteous ness. Remember them also by contributing to their support. Remember in prayer the State Associations, the district, county and town associations. Pray earnestly for those bodies of believers who testify against secret societies. Also that the churches which fellowship adhering Masons and all ministers who are connected with the lodge may renounce their errors, may have their eyes opened to the exceeding sinfulness of their conduct. Pray for the Cynosure that it may be a servant of God and used by him to "prepare the way of the Lord." Pray for the increased usefulness of other publications on the subject of secret societies. Please have the notice of this day given out a week before hand in all your chuches and published in all your local newspapers.

—S. L. Morse, in the Southbridge (Mass.) Journal gives another instances of the use of Masonry to corrupt legislative bodies. He says, "a case in point is now on the journals of Congress. The bribe was offered by Col. John Anderson to Hon. Lewis Williams, chairman of the committee on claims, House of Representatives, in these words: 'I give it to you as a man and a Mason, hoping you belong to that society.' Mr. Williams being no Mason was at liberty to reject the bribe and expose the villain, which he did. If he had been a Mason he would have been under oath to keep his secret."

—The position of Grand Master of the Freemasons of Ireland, vacant by the death of the Duke of Leinster, has been offered to the Duke of Abercorn, and it is understood that the position will be accepted.

—The Evangelical Synod of North America at its late meeting in Creston, Ill., came sharply upon the grange question. The record and practice of the Synod is wholly opposed to the secret orders, and in some remote churches the grange pushed stoutly against the bulwark of the church. Pastors in Minnesota and Dakota felt the presure and wrote asking the Synod to strengthen their hands by action condemning the grange along with the rest of the family. Members of the grange were present in the Synod, and though not belonging to it, were permitted to speak. A lively discussion ensued, but a resolution was finally and strongly passed to the effect that "the Synod considers the grange as a secret society opposed to the Word of God and the principles of Christianity, and it is of the conviction that no Christian can unite or remain in intelligent connection with the order without great sin." The ministers and members of the churches were warned against uniting with this or any other secret order.

—Alaska is not to be altogether "left out in the cold;" for the Grand Lodge of Washington Territory has chartered a Masonic lodge in that region. It is to be presumed that the undress parade connected with the initiation will be modified to accommodate to the freezing temperature.

—Pittsburgh Gazette publishes the following notice: "Rev. Dr. Dempsey and Rev. Mr. Patterson are to debate the following question at New Galilee, on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago railway, on the fourth Tuesday of October: "Are Secret Oath-bound Associations Incompatible with the Christian Religion and Republican Form of Government?" Mr. Patterson affirms, and Mr. Dempsey denies. The debate is to be held in the U. P. church, in New Galilee, and to continue two days. Dr. Dempsey is a Mason, and nothing seems to more fully awaken him than a square tussle on the interesting theme."

As this debate was to begin on Tuesday of this week we are unable to publish more than the notice. If Mr. Dempsey has not reformed in his methods of carrying on debate, the meeting will probably be postponed on some technicality. Our readers will remember the efforts of friends in Jefferson county, Ohio, some three years ago, to bring Mr. Dempsey to face the arguments of Rev. J. H. Timmons, of Pennsylvania, and their ill-success. The defender of the lodge was a great dodger, and was as loth to meet the issue fairly in public as a saloon keeper to stand trial for damages. We hope the friends in Pennsylvania have him well in hand, and expect an interesting report from them.

Oren Cravath.

MALLET CREEK, O., Oct. 18, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR SIR:—I have just received a telegram informing me that my half brother, Oren Cravath, died at St. Charles, Minn., on the night of the 16th, of apoplexy of the heart.

This will be painfully interesting news to the reformers throughout the land east and west.

My brother was born on the 6th of June, 1806, in Homer, N. Y. He was left fatherless at the age of two years. At the time of the Morgan tragedy, being then in his 21st year, he entered heartily into the issues of that day against the powers of darkness, until he supposed victory had been gained. About this time the temperance and anti-slavery reforms were inaugurated, both of which enlisted his sympathy with all his powers of body and mind. His house, his table, his teams, the best he had was at the service of human liberty, to assist the poor, panting fugitive fleeing from under the wings of the American eagle to the dominion of Queen Victoria to secure to themselves human liberty so dear to all, yet denied them in this boasted land of the free and home of the brave.

Bro. Cravath, at about the age of 46, having been an invalid for seven years from rheumatic difficulties, removed to Oberlin to educate his children. About the age of 51 or 52, as an experiment of health, he went to Minnesota. The experiment proved so successful that he took a land claim, sent for his family, and the result was that he with his sons became extensive, enterprising and influential farmers in Saratoga township, Winona county. Their farms being to this day known far and near as the Cravath farms.

Early in life he united with the Presbyterian church in Hanover, while Father Keep was its pastor. Since which time all churches, ministers, politicians and people that were earnestly, honestly and openly working to promote the cause of God and humanity, enlisted his sympathy and support. At the first appearance of the hydra-headed monster, Masonry, he was among the first to sound an alarm. For several years past being wholly unable to do manual labor, he has traveled much with his companion, visiting friends and water cures, etc., for their health. Whether at home or abroad, he was known as one of God's chosen few who stood by his principles and the right, because it was right, taking no council from temporizing public men, politicians or ministers; believing one with God and the right is a majority; that the millions against God are a miserable and hopeless minority.

In a letter written to me the 9th of last month, he said in reference to his Anti-masonic work, he had hoped to do more the past summer, but could not on account of his health. "I believe it is God's cause and will succeed. The only thing for us to do is our duty. I feel as though my work would soon be done."

During the anti-slavery struggle brother Cravath was constantly sowing the good seed by the side of all waters, distributing anti-slavery literature, talking with all upon the subject of human liberty. And since slavery was abolished he had practiced the same course in reference to secret societies.

No doubt hundreds of the panting fugitives will bless him to all eternity as the instrument under God of their deliverance from human blood-hounds. And no doubt hundreds of our young men have been saved by his timely council from the darkness of the lodge. Who will do likewise?

And it almost seems to me that I can hear the blessed Jesus saying, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." Who would not exclaim. "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his." And may the God of the widow and fatherless give the wife and four sons grace to turn this great affliction into the richest and choicest blessings to themselves and the world, by earnestly carrying forward every good work in which the husband and father was engaged; and may his mantle fall on many saved from slavery and the lodge through his influence.

Mrs. Laura White, who died in Scotland the past season, the wife of George White, the leader of the "Jubilee Singers," was brother Cravath's only daughter. Rev. E. M. Cravath, the field secretary of the American Missionary Association, is his eldest son.

Yours in affliction, SAMUEL HALE.

Another Exposition and Corrections.

XENIA, Ind., Oct. 16, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I see in the paper for the 8th of this month Rev. Thomas Evans' reply to my "Exposition," in September 3d. Now, sir, duty requires that I should correct some of the Rev. gentleman's statements, and make some more exposures in regard to the Xenia affair.

First, he says, "The facts are these:" "The man who was made trustee never accepted the position." True, he did not, but does that lessen the violation of the principles of the church? or the guilt of their open inconsistent act, Mr Evans being chairman? The man knew too well the reasons for which they had elected him were too palpably plain to the public; hence his refusal.

Next, he says that he made the statement at the time, "that it was not in keeping with the usages of this church, that persons belonging to secret orders be made officers in this church." Now two of the men who were there, and are members of the church and also anti-secret society men, say that you,—yes, sir, you, the great "defender of the principles of the church,"—"made no such statement," and I presume the rest would say the same.

"But this same man gave $18 to the church, his wife being a member." Now the giving $18 is like the man who paid $50 for a dog, paying with two pups at $25 each. This same man paid the $18 with a chandelier that cost $8 or $10, and that was more than likely done, in the consideration, as stated in my first expose, "that the anti-secret society should be turned out of the house." Think of this, Elder El And then again, "his wife being a member." This I would say is quite an error. She is a member of the Wesleyan church. So was her husband, as I understand and class-leader, until he began to practice paganism with his Christianity. This is correction number two.

This same man stated that the night before you elected him, that you, Thos. Evans, "met with them in the Odd-fellow's lodge in this place as an Odd-fellow, and opened the lodge with prayer." How is this, sir? You were certainly told of it when you came to dedicate the church. I heard nothing of your making any public refutation of the statement. This looks rather suspicious for yourself or the man who "manifested such a Christ-like spirit."

But "I left the Sabbath-school and my class the day of dedication and gave but $3 towards fixing the church." This is partly true. I should certainly have staid and heard such an "able defender of the principles of the church." But as I am "too good" to have any inclination to hear "hood-winked" or "Jack" ministers, I hope to be excused for my act.

You forgot to state in connection with said act that the superintendent, and also class-leaders, and also the secretary, and leader in singing, did not attend

The Home Circle.

Sowing and Reaping.

Sow with a generous hand,
Pause not for toil or pain;
Weary not through the heat of summer,
Weary not through the cold spring rain;
But wait till the autumn comes
For the sheaves of golden grain.

Scatter the seed, and fear not,
A table will be spread;
What matter if you are too weary
To eat your hard earned bread!
Sow, while the earth is broken,
For the hungry must be fed.

Sow;—while the seeds are lying
In the warm earth's hosom deep,
And your warm tears fall upon it,—
They will stir in their quiet sleep;
And the green blades rise the quicker
Perchance for the tears you weep.

Then sow,—for the hours are fleeting,
And the seed must fall, to-day;
And care not what hands shall reap it,
Or if you have passed away
Before the waving corn-fields
Shall gladden the sunny day.

Sow; and look onward, upward,
Where the starry light appears,—
Where, in spite of the coward's doubting,
Or your own heart's trembling fears,
You shall reap in joy the harvest
You have sown, to-day, in tears.

A Pleasing Incident.

Sitting in a station the other day, I had a little sermon preached in the way I like; and I'll report it for your benefit, because it taught one of the lessons which we all should learn, and taught it in such a natural, simple way that no one could forget it. It was a bleak, snowy day; the train was late; the ladies' room dark and smoky; and the dozen women, old and young, who sat waiting impatiently, all looked cross, low-spirited or stupid. I felt all three; and thought, as I looked around, that my fellow-beings were a very unamiable and uninteresting set.

Just then a forlorn old woman, shaking with palsy, came in with a basket of wares for sale, and went about mutely offering them to the sitters. Nobody bought anything, and the poor old soul stood blinking at the door a minute, as if reluctant to go out into the bitter storm again. She turned presently, and poked about the room, as if trying to find something; and then a pale lady in black, who lay as if asleep, on a sofa, opened her eyes, saw the old woman, and instantly asked, in a kind tone, "Have you lost anything, ma'am?"

No, dear. I'm looking for the heatin' place, to have a warm 'fore I goes out again. My eyes is poor, and I don't seem to find the furnace nowheres."

"Here it is," and the lady led her to the steam radiator, placed a chair, and showed her how to warm her feet.

"Well now, ain't that nice!" said the old woman, and spreading her ragged mittens to dry. "Thanks, dear; this pretty comfortable, ain't it? I'm most froze to-day, bein' lame and wimbly; and not selling much makes me kind of down-hearted."

The lady smiled, went to the counter, bought a cup of tea and some sort of food, carried it herself to the old woman, and said, as respectfully and kindly as if the poor woman had been dressed in silk and fur, "Won't you have a cup of hot tea?" Its very comforting such a day as this.

"Sakes alive! do you give tea at this depot!" cried the old lady, in a tone of innocent surprise that made a smile go round the room, touching the glummest faces like a streak of sunshine. "Well, now this is jest lovely," added the old lady, sipping away with a relish. This does warm the cockles of my heart!"

While she refreshed herself, telling her story meanwhile, the lady looked over the poor little wares in the basket, bought some soap pins, shoe-strings and tape, and cheered the old soul by paying well for them.

As I watched her doing this, I thought what a sweet face she had, though I considered her rather plain before. I felt dreadfully ashamed of myself that I had grimly shaken my head when the basket was offered to me; and as I saw the look of interest, sympathy and kindliness come into the dismal faces all around me, I did wish that I had been the magician to call it out. It was only a kind word and a friendly act, but somehow it brightened that dingy room wonderfully. It changed the faces of a dozen women, and I think it touched a dozen hearts, for I saw many eyes follow the plain, pale lady with sudden respect, and when the old woman got up to go, several persons beckoned to her and bought something, as if they wanted to repair their first negligence.

Old beggar-women are not romantic; neither are cups of tea, boot-laces, and colored soap. There were no gentlemen present to be impressed with the lady's kind act, so it was'nt done for effect, and no possible reward could be received for it except the ungrammatical thanks of a ragged old woman. But that simple little charity was as good as a sermon to those who saw it, and I think each traveler went on her way better for that half hour in the dreary station. I can testify that one of them did, and nothing but the emptiness of her purse prevented her from "comforting the cockles of the heart" of every forlorn old woman she met for a week after.—Louisa M. Alcott.

Guizot on the Authority of the Scriptures.

The following are extracts from an address by the celebrated French scholar and statesman, M. Guizot, in the French Reformed Synod, 1872:

When I entered for the first time within these walls, and saw the open Bible in your pulpit, the deposit of divine revelation in matter of faith; when I heard that venerable title of Moderator given to the presiding officer of the Synod, and every day heard the Moderator read a chapter of the Holy Scriptures, without believing to have returned to the sixteenth century, I have felt myself, nevertheless, in possession of the heritage of our forefathers in everything which intellectual progress and civilization have permitted us to keep. I have experienced a lively joy in those ecclesiastical customs which exist in no other church besides our own. . . . . But this satisfaction was of short duration, and I have the sorrow to hear the Holy Scriptures denied as matter and source of faith—to hear the Bible dethroned. I heard here the formula of this strange doctrine that there is no other faith than that of the individual conscience, it being thus the sole authority in matter of faith. . . . What disavowal of the doctrines and religious practices of the Protestants of the sixteenth century! In presence of such acts there is no longer any church nor any religious liberty. . . . . I do not contest the progress of science; like others I have drank at the cup of human science; more than many others at that of human power; and I have learned to know the limits of science and of those of human power. Neither the one nor the other can satisfy the religious wants of human nature, considered either in the individuals or in society. Where are the philosophers that have founded religions? Socrates? Plato? Neither the one nor the other—no, nor any. The impious words of Laplace: 'God is an hypothesis of which I have no need,' are the faithful representation of the materialism of our days. The true misfortune of our social state is that people have endeavored to banish the supernatural and believed too much that human science was sufficient to explain everything. . . . Now men have not created the human soul, and upon that soul God acts by turns through natural and supernatural means."

In the government of the world, facts, notable, positive events outside of things, accomplished themselves in in their time. Christianism is one of these events. One must seek in the Bible for the origin of Christianity.

All persons who recognize themselves as Christians ought to recognize also the feebleness of their science, its insufficiency; but they ought to unite together against the disease of our times, skepticism, incredulity, human pride. The divine power manifested in Christ is above science, above human power; to depend on this power alone to drive away error or to correct it is a grievous and culpable illusion. Faith in the supernatural is an indispensable thing for progress, for the permanent dignity of humanity.

A Son's Reproach.

On October 28th, a young man was hung in New York. His father was an ungodly man, disregarding every requirement of the decalogue before his rising family. In his dwelling, no Bible was read, no prayer ever offered. Maternal affection was not hallowed by the fear and love of God. The sons grew to manhood, with all their depraved desires nourished at the fireside of home.

Of two brothers, one was married. Between his wife and the younger brother arose an attachment, which was followed by jealously and hate in the domestic circle. The guilty youth selected a night when the aged father was sick, and calling at the house in which his brother had retired to sleep, he requested an interview with him. When he appeared, he seized him by the hair, and with a single blow of an axe, severed his head from his body.

The fratricide then fastened the door upon the inside, and fleeing, charged the deed upon his father. The reason of this unnatural crime, the second murder in design, was revealed in the court-room, when, turning to the gray-haired parent, he said, in presence of the assemblage: "Father, if it had not been for you, I should not have been here: you trained me for this." He also remarked to the young man who arrested him, "Oh! if I had your bringing up, I should not have killed my brother;" and extending his right hand, he added, "but this cruel hand did the deed."

What awful instruction comes from the wreck of such a family! A child's reproach on earth is bitter; how will it be, fathers and mothers, even if your offspring escape the legitimate progress and development of depravity into open disgrace, to meet their reproaches in hell? The domestic circle was designed to be the very gate of heaven, and fearful will be the anathema upon those who make it either a shining or a dark and revolting ante-chamber of the lost spirit's eternal home.—Ex.

Anecdote of Hume.—An amusing anecdote is told of Dr. Robinson, of Scotland, who, with a ready wit, drew an illustration from a misfortune of David Hume to point an argument. It was as follows:

The celebrated Mr. Hume wrote an essay on the sufficiency of nature; and the no less celebrated Dr. Robinson on the sufficiency of Revelation, and the insufficiency of the light of nature. Hume came one evening to visit Robinson, and the evening spent on the subject. The friends of both were present, and it it said that Robinson reasoned with accustomed clearness and power. Whether Hume was convinced by his reasoning or not we cannot tell; but at any rate he did not acknowledge his convictions. Hume was very much of a gentleman, and, as he rose to depart, bowed politely to those in the room, while as he retired through the door, Robinson took the light to show him the way.

"O, sir," he continued, "I find the light of nature always sufficient," as he bowed on..

The street door was open, and presently, as he bowed along the entry, he stumbled over something concealed, and pitched down stairs into the street. Robertson ran after him with a candle, and, as he held it over him, whispered softly and cunningly,—

"You had better have a little light from above, friend Hume," and, raising him up, he bade him good night and returned to his friends.

Help Yourself.

Fight your own battles. Hoe your own row. Ask no favors of anyone, and you'll succeed five thousand times better than one who is always beseeching some one's patronage. No one will ever help you as you help yourself, because no one will be so heartily interested in your affairs. The first step will not be such a long one, perhaps; but, carving your own way up the mountain, you make each one lead to another, and stand firm in that while you chop still another out. Men who have made fortunes are not those who had $5,000 given to them to start with, but started fair with a well earned dollar or two. Men who have, by their own exertions, acquired fame, have not been thrust into popularity by puffs begged or paid for, or given in a friendly spirit. They have outstretched their hands and touched the public heart. Men who win love do their own wooing, and I never knew a man to fail so signally as one who had induced his affectionate grandmamma to speak a good word for him. Whether you work for fame, for love, for money, or for anything else, work with your hands, heart and brain. Say "I will!" and some day you will conquer. Never let any man have it to say, "I have dragged you up." Too many friends hurt a man more than none at all.—Grace Greenwood.

Rich Without Money.—Many a man is rich without money. Thousands of men with nothing in their pockets are rich. A man born with a good sound constitution, a good stomach, a good heart, good limbs, and a pretty good head piece is rich. Good bones are better than gold; tough muscles better than silver; and the nerves that flush fire and carry energy to every function are better than houses or land. It is better than a landed estate to have the right kind of father and mother. Good breeds and bad breeds exist among men as really as among herds and horses. Education may do much to check bad tendencies or to develop good ones; but it is a greater thing to inherit the rich proportion of faculties to start with. The man is rich who has a good disposition—who is naturally kind, patient, cheerful and hopeful.

Recent Spanish History.

The course of events in Spain since 1868 is without a parallel. In that year the long-smouldering popular sentiment against Isabella and her Government showed signs of bursting into flame, and in July the Government avowed that it had proof of a revolutionary scheme in which three great sections of the Liberal opposition were concerned. The result of this alleged discovery was that Gens. Serrano, Dulce and others were thrown into prison, and that the Queen's sister, the Duches of Montpensier, and her husband, being accused of complicity in the plot, were desired to quit the country, and upon the Duke's representing that his wife, as an infanta of Spain, could not be exiled except under the hand of the Sovereign, the Queen signed the warrant with her own hand. At the same time many eminent disaffected persons were banished; but these proceedings entirely failed to arrest the impending torrent. In September, 1868, it came with an ugly rush. For many years great attention had been paid to the fleet, and Spain had gradually regained her position as a naval power of the best second-class order. Great dismay was therefore occasioned to Isabella's party when, in September, the news came that an insurrection had broken out in Cadiz, and that the fleet off that port, and Admiral Topete, its commander, had joined the insurgents. This was the signal for a general rising, and in a very short time Serrano, Prim, and other exiled generals, were back again.

Between the 19th of September and the 7th of October, 1868, a few encounters took place between the insurgents and the Queen's troops, but the advisers of Isabella soon felt the pricks were too many for them to kick against, and when the garrison of Madrid made common cause with the citizens, and refused to fight, the struggle was necessarily at an end. On the 3d of October Serrano entered the capital amid great enthusiasm, and four days after Gen. Prim arrived and received, if possible, a yet more enthusiastic reception. That evening Madrid was brilliantly illuminated, and the populace appeared wild with delight. And where was Isabella the Catholic all this time? Rome's darling daughter, the recipient of the Golden Rose, that special mark of pontifical approval, had been paying a visit to a brother sovereign, who, although then in a position to give the law to Europe, was destined two years later to be in even a worse plight himself. Louis Napoleon and the Empress had been on their usual autumn visit to Biarritz, and, when the revolutionary triumph was filling the streets of her capital with tumultuous joy, Isabella was at her castle at San Sebastian, the capital of Guipuzcoa, on the Bay of Biscay. She soon saw that matters had come to so desperate a pass that in common prudence she had better quit the Spanish soil, and accordingly at the end of September, 1868, she started for French territory. She was accompanied by the King Consort, who played a very secondary part in her establishment, her uncle, Don Sebastian, her notorious Confessor, Father Claret, and other members of her household, and was met at the frontier by three officers of the Emperor's establishment, and at the railway station of Hendage by the Emperor, Empress and Prince Imperial. The Emperor placed the palace of Pau at her disposal, and there she took up her abode, and thence soon after fulminated a protest against her opponents.

Soon a provisional Junta was elected, and a Ministry was formed under Gen. Serrano, and at the instance of the Junta a number of decrees instituting liberal measures, among others ablso lute liberty of the press, appeared. But from that time there has not been a month of real serenity in the country. Ministry has succeeded Ministry, Cortes Cortes. A King was advertised for all over Europe. With the utmost difficulty a gallant young gentleman was found to accept the miserable office, and by a miracle he escaped with his life from the odious honor thrust upon him. In 1872 a further complication arose, in consequence of Don Carlos coming forward to claim the crown. He was supported by the aristocratic and sacerdotal interest, and has effectually succeeded in keeping the country over which he aspires to rule in a condition of anarchy, bankruptcy and confusion.—*N. Waiting and Working.

An army was advancing to fight against the enemy. The enemy was in sight and the general had begun to draw up his men for the battle. Some he ordered to advance in one direction, others in another, and every one was ready and willing. But turning to one regiment he said, "This regiment must wait here; no man is to stir a step till the order is given."

In a few minutes the battle had begun. Regiment after regiment marched on past the soldiers that were waiting, and very soon all but that one regiment were engaged in the battle. It was hard for the brave men that were waiting to see their friends march on past them to fight the enemy, and not to be able to march along with them. But at first it was so very hard; for at first the enemy were beaten back on every side, and shouts of victory came from their friends, and the men in the waiting regiment said, "How lucky they are; they will beat the enemy without us."

But presently all this was changed. Down from the hills behind the enemy there poured fresh soldiers, who gradually drove back the army step by step. And now the sound of the battle came nearer and nearer, and the men perceived that their friends were being beaten, and it seemed hard indeed to wait. Wounded men were carried past them, whom they knew; and as the enemy pressed nearer still, they could see their friends cut down or run through the body, and that made these brave men almost mad with anger. Presently the shots began to fall among them as they stood close together, and, though the general sent orders to them to lie down, yet some were shot dead without having struck a blow against the enemy. All this was so hard to bear that some of the young soldiers began to murmur, and one of them cried out, "Why does he not let us charge? Are we to die lying here like sheep?" But the old soldiers, though they ground their teeth in anger, said, "Be still. We must obey orders. Our general knows what he is about."

The next moment the order came "Up, and charge." Immediately they leaped up and dashed forward at the enemy. But no more fighting remained to be done, for at the mere sight of these fresh soldiers, the enemy turned and fled, and would not wait till the soldiers could get near them to strike a blow, so the battle was won with hardly any loss.

As they were marching back in triumph, the young soldier that had complained during the battle, said to one of his comrades, "The battle has been won, but we have done nothing to win it; it has been won by our friends, and not by us." But his comrade answered, "You are wrong there; I have fought in a dozen battles before this, and I have never seen anything so hard as this. It is easier to fight than to wait. But after all, whether one fights or waits, it is all one to a good soldier; a soldier's business is to obey orders, and if you obey orders you are doing good service, whether it is your turn to fight or to wait."

Christ our Master has set us all our tasks, and he will come and ask each one of us, some day, "Have you done the task I set you?" If we have done our best at it, he will say, "Come with me and rest." If we have not done our best at it, he will say, "Depart from me." Do not say, "I could do a more difficult work; Jesus has given me noth-to do." Whatever is done for Jesus, though it be only waiting, will please him.—Parables for Children.

Too Big to go to Sunday-school.

A story was once told of a boy who thought he was too big to go to Sunday-school. His feelings were much larger than his body was. He had been to Sunday-school for a while, and then ceased to go. His kind teacher wondered what the matter was; and feeling anxious about the young man's welfare, went to visit him and learn if possible, the cause of his non-attendance at the school.

The question was asked, "My young friend, why do you not come to Sunday-school as you once did?" Straightening up to his full height he answered, "Because I'm too big, that is the place for children."

The teacher tried to persuade him to return to the Sunday-school, but he would not go.

After a while the teacher went to visit him again. This time he was in a different place. Big as he was he had done some bad act that helped him through a very small door into a dark and lonely cell. "How is it," said the teacher, "you were too big to get in the large door of our school, yet it seems you have found your way through a much smaller door here; don't you feel a little smaller now?" The boy frankly confessed that he did, and would rather go to Sunday-school than be confined in a gloomy cell.—Free Methodist.

A True Hero.—A boy nine years old was bathing one day, when, by some mischance, he got into deep water and began to sink. His elder brother saw him and ran to save him, but lacking strength or skill, he also sank to the bottom of the river. As the two drowning brothers rose to the surface for the last time they saw a third brother, the youngest of the family, running down the bank for the purpose of trying to save them. Then it was that the dying nine-year-old acted the part of a hero. Struggling as he was with death, he gathered all his strength, and cried to his brother on shore, "Don't come in, or father will lose all his boys at once."

Noble little fellow! Though dying, he forgot himself, and thought only of his father's grief. He was a genuine hero. His brother obeyed his dying command, and was spared to comfort his father when his two dead sons were taken from the river clasped in each other's arms.

Boys you are not called to be heroes in this way, but you are called to consider the feelings of your parents, and to study how to avoid giving them pain. The best way to do this is to love them dearly. Love will not only keep you from hurting their feelings, but it will make you sources of great joy to their hearts. Blessed are those children whose words and deeds make sweet music in their parents' souls!

said school on said day, and sit under the droppings of your dedication sermon.

But next, why did I give but $3, while the "Christ-like man" gave $18? Dear Elder, you somewhat erred here; I have not given it yet. I only subscribed it. But why not more, and paid? You will recollect that this was after you had elected that "Christ-like man," and before you had turned the society out of the house. Those same trustees and many in this community have frequently heard me say that I would not give anything towards the support of a secret order church. I did not like to be denied. I do not think that I shall ever pay it, unless there is a change. I am "too good" to do so, or to "unite with such a bad church." But, dear sir, your informant about the $3, I suppose, failed to tell you that, before electing that trustee, my money and hands helped repair and keep up the expenses of said house; that these shoulders have born several bundles of shingles up to the top of said house; and that other anti-secret society men did the same. And why did they do this? Because they considered that it was a church and house where free discussion was tolerated touching the present and future interests of man.

Again, your reasons for "turning the society out of the house," look rather snakish. "The anti-secret society had assumed a political form, etc". The political phase of the question has never been discussed in the society here; it has been principally the religious aracter of those secret orders. But the truth is asch stated in the other article, "sold to the devil."

Again, you say that Xenia is a standing argument of the injury done by the anti-secret order men. Dear sir, how did you come to have that evidence? Did the "Mason's great Architect" reveal it to you? Please point us to one church that is located under the droppings of the lodge, that is in a prosperous, Christ-like condition, where the ministers and a portion of all of the members have pursued a similar course to this; notwithstanding "such champions of anti-secrecy as Darby and others are there? Now, the results of the trustees' and your action: no Sabbath-school, no class-meeting, and no U. B. preaching in the house since the dedication! Come over, dear brother, and help us. Lay off the hood-wink. Arm yourself for the battle against these dens of "iniquity." Expose their corruption in church and state, and God may yet prosper this church and community.

Petition.

The Secretary of the National Christian Association is sending out petitions for circulation. In doing this some of the best Anti-masonic workers may be overlooked.

About the twentieth of last May, one thousand and seven petition headings were sent out from this office, asking that Masons should not be allowed to lay the corner-stone of the Chicago Custom-House. In less than one month, fourteen thousand names were presented to President Grant attached to this petition. If such a multitude of names could be collected by a few week's labor how many could be obtained in three months?

We wish to send the accompanying petition to Congress next February. Please circulate it as thoroughly as possible, preserve it carefully, and on or before the first day of February, 1875, put it with the names you have collected into an envelope and forward to C. A. Blanchard, Cor. Sec'y. N. C. A. 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

One friend who could not personally circulate the "Corner-stone Petition," hired his son, a boy of twelve years, to attend to it, giving him a small amount for every name he should secure; and thus obtained several hundred names. The largest number of names sent in were collected by an elderly gentleman in Ohio.

We have one blank prepared for legal voters and another for all who believe Freemasonry to be subversive of the legislative, executive and judicial departments of American Government.

Any friend who would like to circulate the petition will have the blanks sent to him or her if ordered before November 25th.

PETITION.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress Assembled:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, believing (in the words of Daniel Webster) "That all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and good government," respectfully ask your honorable body to withdraw the charter giving by Congress in April, 1864, to the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia.

We further petition that it be made unlawful to appoint to official positions under the government of the United States, persons who are under and acknowledge the binding character of oaths administered by secret organizations.

Also that in the United States Courts, in all cases, criminal or civil, the right of peremptory challange of jurors who are members of any secret society shall be granted to all parties in litigation who are not members of such societies.

And that membership in any secret society, by the presiding officer of a court shall be held to be a sufficient reason for change of venue whenever demanded.

Religious Intelligence.

—The new Episcopal Bishop of Wisconsin, Edward R. Wells, was consecrated on Sabbath in St. Thomas church, New York.

—The late Bishop Whitehouse requested before death that his church in Chicago should be made free and kept so for all time. A parishioner has paid off all incumbrances that this request may be realized.

—A colored Apollos is said to have been discovered in Rev. Samuel Parks, a Presbyterian of Tennesee. He is working as an evangelist among his own race and is said to astonish black and white with his ability in expounding and illustrating gospel truths.

—The First Baptist Church of Chicago who lost their building in the fire of last July, have selected plans for another house. The new edifice will be further to the south and will cost, with lot, organ, etc., $100,000, with a seating capacity of 1,500.

—The Alumni meeting of the Chicago Theological Seminary (Cong.) was held the past week. The meeting was fairly attended, but such topics as are of secondary importance to an earnest pastor, as Liberalism, Beecher's Lectures, Arnold's Rationalism, etc., occupied too much of the time of the meeting.

—Rev. Mr. Dudley, of Plymouth church, Milwaukee, is another convert to broad-guageism. On Sabbath evening he stated that he wanted a new church where he could preach to infidels, skeptics, liars, thieves, etc., as well as Christians, and which will throw away the old manual and receive all persons seeking Christianity without regard to their belief of misty doctrinal points.

—The appeal of Prof. Patton in the Swing case was argued before the Synod of Northern Illinois in session in this city last week. The action of the Chicago Presbytery in dropping the name of Prof. Swing from their roll was ruled as an error; the appeal was sustained by a vote of 44 to 2 on both charges and the name of Prof. Swing ordered to be stricken from the roll.

—The largest congregations on the Sabbath in New York city be between Twentieth street and G and running from river to river. The Protestant strength is very much greater on the west than on the east side. There are about twelve Presbyterian churches within the limits named. Some of the congregations are very large, and some of them very small. The Thirteenth street church has a congregation that requires every part of the house, above and below. This church has always kept up a great force of young people. It has probably the best working congregation in the city. The pastor, Dr. Burchard, has held his position for thirty-one years.

—Full reports of the Old Catholic Congress in Freiburg show that there was an attendance of 200 delegates. The Congress declared that it was the duty of the Government to ascertain how many Catholics there were by making the electors of all the communes vote on the question of the recognition of the infallibility of the Pope. Bishop Reinkens, at public meetings and elsewhere, declared fully his views of the "church of Christ," He said that the hierarchy was not the church of Christ; that the church consisted of the society of believers, that it does not save men, but is saved itself, that Christ is the only mediator between God and man, and he only can save, and that the bishop is the only representative of the church over which he presides.

—The sixth annual report of the American Baptist Teloogoo Mission, from March, 1843, to March, 1874, printed at Madras, says that "the work of the Lord has made decided advancements during the past year, throughout the entire mission. Conversions continue to be numerous, the number being 700. Oppositon has, in a great measure ceased, or if it still exists, does not effect the progress of the work in any great degree. Much credit for the satisfactory progress of the work is given to the native ministry. There are twelved ordained ministers attached to the mission—three having been ordained during the past year—and thirty-three unordained. The total number of members now belonging to the mission is 3,728.

News of the Week.

The City.

Ex-mayor Medill has returned from a long European tour of about a year. The Cincinnati Gazette suggests his name for Presidential nominee, which is not bad.——McDonald, the gambler, who was arrested for inciting a riot in a saloon and threatening to shoot the keeper, has been set free, the grand jury not finding a bill. There is much indignation at the decision.——The Board of Police and Fire Commissioners have agreed upon the employment of Gen. Shaler of New York as Consulting Engineer of the Fire Department. This appointment will satisfy the insurance companies, and they will probably soon return.——The great social topic last week was the marriage of Lieut-col. Frederick D. Grant to Miss Ida M. Honore at the residence of the bride's father, H. H. Honore. Rev. Isaac Everett, of the Christian church performed the ceremony.——Pres. Grant remained over Tuesday last week with Mrs. Grant to attend the wedding of his son. He visited the new Post-office now being erected and held a public reception at the Palmer House.——Last Sabbath the communists of the west and north portions of the city met in a Turner hall and nominated candidates for Congress, the State Legislature and county offices. At the same time a large political meeting was held in the interest of the liquor party. Those who attended were almost entirely foreigners.

The Country.

A fearful lake catastrophe took place last Thursday. The propeller Brooklyn, on her way from Cleveland and fifteen miles south of Detroit, exploded her boiler and sunk almost immediately. The steamer had nine passengers, and carried a crew of nineteen. Thirteen persons were killed, of whom five were passengers, and eleven were wounded, including four passengers. The wounded were brought to Detroit and placed in the hospital. Some of the wounded, as well as persons on the steamer Huron City, which was close by, assert that the Brooklyn was racing with the steamer Cuba when the explosion occurred.——The trial of Harrington in the District safe burglary case at Washington, was commenced yesterday. A jury was obtained, and the case opened by Mr. Riddle, on behalf of the Government. The jury, for the most part, are said to be composed of competent, unprejudiced citizens, four of whom are colored.——Morgan and Sons of San Fransisco, a shipping firm who were acting as agents for the grangers, failed last week. Their liabilities on the Pacific coast amounted to $350,000.——A small rebellion was raging in Indiana last week not far from Chicago, caused by the opposition of the Mich. Central railroad to the crossing of their track on a level by the Baltimore and Ohio road. The former contested the case in court and was beaten. But the officers sent from one to two thousand men to prevent the construction of the crossing. A sheriff's posse was driven off and when Gov. Hendricks sent a few companies of State militia there was every prospect of immediate and fearful bloodshed. The leaders of the Mich. Central surrendered just in time to prevent such a catastrophe.——Henry Clews & Co., the well-known bankers of New York have failed and their business has passed to an assignee.——A Sheriff's posse was arrested and held in bail in Alabama on the charge of being Ku-Klux. Several hundred warrants are said to have been issued for the arrest of citizens.

Foreign.

A destructive storm visited the English and Scottish coasts last week. A number of vessels were wrecked and many lives lost along the coast. All the rivers in the north of England and Scotland are much swollen. The railway and telegraph lines are interrupted; trees uprooted in all directions, and chimneys and walls prostrated. Many persons were injured in Edinburg by flying debris. Three houses at Stockton on-Tees were demolished and one person killed. At Ayr, Scotland, twenty vessels broke adrift in the harbor, which is shallow and exposed, all of which were more or less damaged, and one totally wrecked.——A great fire occurred in Tiflis, the capital of Georgia, in Asiatic Russia, last Saturday. A large portion of the city was destroyed.——The gas-works of Dublin were destroyed by fire on Friday and the city is now entirely without gas.

REFORM NEWS.

Good Work in Southern Pennsylvania.

Mt Top, York Co., Pa., Oct. 17, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

There is some fierce fighting along the line through York and Franklin counties. On the 29th of September there was a lecture at Salem Church, by Rev. J. M. Bishop, on Freemasonry, and on the evening of Oct. 1st, by the same at Scotland in the Covenanter church to an overflowing audience; subject, Odd-fellowship. Here a leading member of a sister church said on the following morning, "That lecture will accomplish such an amount of good in this community as no tongue can tell." Meetings were held on the evenings of Oct. 12th and 13th at Fayetteville. On the first evening Bro. Bishop lectured on Odd-fellowship, and dealt out truth in a telling manner; the second evening he was accompanied by Rev. John Fetterhoff, formerly of the West. Bro. Fetterhoff made some effective remarks after Rev. J. C. Weidler had made a very appropriate and earnest appeal at the throne of grace. Rev. J. M. Bishop then lectured at length on Freemasonry, after which the writer brought up the rear by adding a little to the much already said. In this town, that faithful worker, J. S. Youeky, lives and works. This U. B. brother belongs to Rev. J. P. Anthony's charge; the latter was prevented from being with us by serious illness of sister Anthony. So you see there is still something being done. I think the lectures will do much good.

Yours for the spread of light,
L. A. Wickey.

Lecture in Peoria County, Ill.

Ligonier, Ind., Oct. 14, 1874.

Brother Kellogg:—After a brief visit through Illinois west and as far as southeastern Kansas, I find myself pleasantly situated again at home. I first visited my parents and youngest brother near South Port, Peoria Co., Illinois. During my few days visit there I came in contact with some ardent lodge defenders, and by request of my brother I left an appointment for Saturday evening, Sept. 19th, to be met on my return from Kansas. But not being posted on the time table, from southern Kansas to South Port, I failed to start for my appointment in time, and learning I would not reach South Port until after midnight, instead of 6 o'clock P. M., I sent a telegram requesting a change of the appointment from Saturday to Monday evening. But to my surprise I traveled faster than the telegram, as my brother had heard nothing of my dispatch, neither had he a week later. The next morning (Sunday) I accompanied my brother to Sunday-school where my tardiness of the night before was accounted for and an appointment announced for a lecture Monday evening. Monday evening came and a respectable audience met at the school-house, whom I entertained for an hour and forty minutes, good order being maintained throughout. In regard to the withholding of the telegram, circumstantial proof must place the blame of this disgraceful and dishonest attempt to stop free speech upon the operator at South Port. The operator in Missouri, whom I paid for sending this dispatch, did not know for what purpose I had an appointment, and therefore could have no object in withholding the dispatch, while the man at South Port did. The latter is also known to be not only a Mason, but has been heard to make bitter denunciations against those who are opposing Masonry. . . . . C. G. Fait.

J. T. Kiggins at Xenia, Ind.

Rev. J. T. Kiggins was here on the 18th of last month, and lectured in the Christian church to a respectable audience. The writer procured the house, two of the trustees being secret order men. His subject was, "The principles of Freemasonry and kindred orders are opposed to the Word of God, opposed to the laws of our land and opposed to manhood, consequently a person to be a good Mason must be a bad man." Several prominent Masons and Odd-fellows were present; good attention was paid. The subject was handled with the speaker's usual ability.

At the conclusion the speaker made this proposition to the Masons and Odd-fellows: 'that if one of them knew that he had misstated anything that they should rise to their feet.' Not one arose. 'Then if they knew that he had told the truth for them to sit still." They all remained still. I do not not know how they felt, but I am certain that there were some there who felt for them. J. M. Darby.

The Jay County Association, Ind.

Westchester, Ind., Sept. 30, 1874.

Meeting called to order by the President, and opened with prayer by Rev. D. W. Abbott. The secretary being absent, M. C. Warner was elected secretary pro tem. D. W. Abbott, J. T. Kiggins and Wm. Myers were appointed a committee on resolutions. M. C. Warner, W. Milligan, Stephen Stralley, Peter Walter, and Sidney Potter were chosen as committee on finance.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

After singing and prayer, Rev. W. B. Warner delivered an address on the apostacies of the present age. The committee on resolutions reported the following:

Whereas, The sentiment of opposition to secret societies is increasing, and

Whereas, We are more and more convinced that Freemasonry and its kindred orders are the most dangerous enemies of our free institutions; therefore,

Resolved, That we hail with gratitude the onward march of truth.

That we will with renewed zeal unite our efforts to spread the light of truth on secret orders.

That we will with our voices and votes oppose the promotion of any person to any position of trust or responsibility in church or state, who is indentified with any of these orders; and

Whereas, The editor of the Portland Commercial refused to insert articles in his columns upon this subject when furnished by members of this association, thus debarring us from expressing and the people from reading our views, therefore

Resolved, That we advise all who love free discussion and a free press to patronize only such as will treat this association with the same consideration that they would show to any other body of citizens.

The following officers were then elected for the next year:

President, Wilson Milligan; Treasurer, J. R. Morehouse; Secretary, G. A. Jones; Vice-presidents, Peter Walker, Pulaski Mills, Thomas Wells, John Edmonson, John H. Fait, Lewis Cristler, Wm. Myers, John P Hearn, Henry Able and Lewis S. Farber.

A bill for printing was presented, allowed, and ordered paid.

Wilson Milligan and wife and Dr. Morehouse were appointed delegates to the State Convention to be held at Dublin, Oct. 28th. The next meeting will be held at Bellfountainc.

The secretary was requested to furnish a copy of the minutes for publication in the Jay County Granger and the Christian Cynosure.

Farm and Garden.

Fall Prospects in Kansas.

Manhattan, Riley Co., Kan., Oct. 13, 1874.

Threshing machines have made the Caw Valley resound with their glad echo for the past two weeks. There is an abundance of wheat here this season; but we are informed by a grain dealer here that it is of second and third grade by St. Louis standards, owing to the extreme drouth of summer. Wheat sells at 75 to 80 cents; corn $1.00 per bushel. There is still a considerable quantity of the latter in this section, two firms here having 20,000 bushels each from last year's crop. This year's crop was an entire failure. Late potatoes have made a partial crop and sell at $1.25. Apples and peaches were badly injured by the grasshoppers in this section; but made a fair crop in the Neosho Valley as also the corn and other crops. The grasshoppers have left, and large area is being sown to wh at. Late rains and favorable weather have revived the grass and increase the prospect for a wheat crop next year. Grangers may plant and Masons may water, but God giveth the increase. A Masonic funeral took place in the Presbyterian church here last Sabbath. The pastor assisted in the services. We need some tracts. Send us two hundred Honeywell's.

Yours truly,
J. W. G. McCormick.

Walking Horses.

By the careful training of ambitious and active horses, they may be made to walk five miles an hour as easily as the ordinary horse now walks three. There is no reason why an average pace of four miles an hour should not be kept up with ordinary loads throughout the day. In the day's travel, this would make a gain of ten miles and the trained horse would have accomplished forty miles as against the thirty miles for the untrained one, and this just as easily to the horse of spirit as to the one with the slower gait. If the horse have not the mechanical structure for this gait, of course he cannot do it. Having it, it may be brought out just as easily as a trotting or a running gait; and if premiums were given for this purpose at our Agricultural Fairs, it would be found that individual horses would be able to make, not only five miles an hour, but some of them six. The naturally fast walker, when trained, will even do a given amount of work, at the increased pace, easier than at the slow pace. This we know from experience.

The energy displayed among all classes of breeders has been directed constantly to reduce and degrade the walking gait, and, as a consequence, we find, each year, fewer and fewer fast-walking horses. This spirit has pervaded our Fair rings until now it is difficult to find a premium offered for the fastest walking horse. In looking over the premium lists already received by us for 1874, embracing nearly all the Western States, we find only four premiums offered for walking horses, one by the Kansas City, Mo., Industrial Exposition, and the other by the Northeastern Iowa Agricultural Society. We are glad to be able to chronicle these two, and hope that the number may be increased until the fast walking horse shall at least be regarded on a par with other road and working horses. A great error has been made in ignoring this most valuable of all the gaits of the horse. Certainly, reform is needed in this direction.—Western Rural.

Home and Health Hints.

Bronchitis.—These symptoms generally precede this disease: chills, stuffiness of the throat and pain in the larynx, hoarseness, oppression of breath, fever, which steadily increases although it is rather an inflammatory condition. What will be the result if nothing is done? Cough, sore throats; a person with vigorous digestion and plenty of blood, will have very high fever, while one less sanguinous, with lax tissue, catarrh or bronchorea. This last state may simulate consumption, both from the character of the expectorations and its quantity (which has averaged more than a pound daily for weeks, together with the hectic, which accompanies all inflammatory conditions of the bronchial.

What should be done? At first two or three degrees of heat; something placed before the nostrils so as to send the humidity back again, as a humid atmosphere seems more acceptable to a tense congested mucus membrane (the pathological condition of this membrane in a cold is first dryness, afterwards excess of moisture, third, exfoliation of cells) which constitute the enormous amount of expectoration. So the atmosphere, if humid, without making one feel chilly is the best, also free from dust. Avoid coughing and especially blowing the nose. Keep the hands warm and dry. Avoid touching your damp pocket-handkerchief: spread it out so it will be dry. Many a cough has been kept up by this neglect. Use plenty of hot soup, drinking freely of cold water. Hot oat-meal porrige, hot milk, hot lemonade in great measure, are good. By these means your bronchitis, which might lay you up for ten or twelve weeks in the changeable weather of Chicago, may be all banished in four or five days time.

DEFENCE OF JUDGE DANIEL H. WHITNEY,

Master of Belvidere Lodge, before the Grand Lodge of Ill., On charge of Unmasonic Conduct, in bringing Samuel L. Keith the Murderer of Ellen Slade to justice.

member of Belvidere Lodge), charging him with murder, they having found from the evidence, that several months previous had he seduced Ellen Slade, and that on the Sunday preceding the 20th of June, he took her from her mother's, some eight miles out of town, brought her to town, and kept her in a private room in his store, where, Dr. Woodward testified before the jury, at Keith's request he visited her Monday and Tuesday, and that Tuesday evening she was brought to his (Dr. Woodward's) house. An abortion was produced, and she died from the effects of the operation on the succeeding Friday night. June 20th. This was the original cause of the "excitement."

2. "Mr. Keith for a time eluded." &c. Mr. Keith, it appears was secreted in town from Sunday night, June 22, until Tuesday evening, and it is well known to this whole community that the Sheriff used no vigilance to arrest him.

3. "The fact of Mr. Keith's friends and counsel, three of them being Masons," &c. It was not that Mr. Keith's friends or counsel were Masons, that "pointed suspicion to Masons" as concerned in the secreting and hiding of Keith. About noon, Monday, June 23d, I came into town and found the street full of men in a high state of excitement, and threatening to mob the office of brothers Fuller and Burgess, and to lynch Burgess, because it was reported by the Coroner and several of the jury, that Burgess under pretext of aiding the Coroner in the investigation, (the proceedings being ex parte) was admitted into the jury room, and after ascertaining the evidence against Keith, left the room, then disclosing the fact that he was counsel for Keith. This "pointed suspicion." The Sheriff was also in town, with the warrant in his possession, and not manifesting the slightest disposition to execute it. This also "pointed suspicion." In my hearing, brother Masons and Odd-fellows were taunting and burlesquing those who were manifesting an anxiety for Keith's apprehension. This "pointed suspicion." The people were also excited to suspicion of unfairness on the part of Masons and Odd-fellows, and "suspicion pointed" to these institutions, because the Coroner and several of the jurors reported the fact, that just as the testimony was closed and the warrant drawn up, it was announced that Keith had fled; when all of the jurors instantly signed the warrant, except S. C. Gooding, who was the only Mason on the jury, and well known to be both a Mason and an Odd-fellow. He refused for about an hour and a half (which was construed into delay to give Keith time to escape or conceal himself), and then signed it.

4. "While &c., in pursuit, &c., were known and staunch Masons." This is a gross falsehood and known to be so to every one who signed the letter of complaints; and known to be untrue to more than a thousand responsible citizens of this county. Brother Connell was the only Mason in pursuit of Keith at all. I sent him out when I issued the warrant, because I knew he regarded his duty as a citizen, and would, and did, faithfully perform it.

5. "Dr. Whitney has not ceased to charge," &c. It would have been not only folly, but madness, if I had been base enough, for me, the Master of the Lodge, to have denied the improper interference of Masons in the very face of a community possessed, at least, of common sense, and to whom that improper interference was known beyond reasonable doubt. It is not true that I have charged this upon the "Institution and Order,"—on the contrary, in the presence of some hundreds, assembled at the Court House on the 24th of June, I assured the people that Masonry taught no such thing, as I had learned it; nor did I believe that Odd-fellowship did; and that the course being pursued by several of the brethren would receive the rebuke of the Lodge; and I certainly thought so then; and although I now find myself on trial for exposing iniquity, and discharging my duty as a good citizen, as the head of the Lodge, and as the public officer, instead of those who were most grossly culpable and plainly guilty, I will yet indulge the hope that a majority of this Lodge view this matter precisely as I do; and so believing at the time, I assured the people at the C. H., that the conduct they witnessed in several of the members of the Lodge, would not receive the countenance of the high authorities of the Institution, and pledge myself to ascertain if such were the acknowledge obligations of Masons to each other, and if so I would declare it publicly; and I prayed God, if I ascertained such to be Masonry, to palsy my limbs and strike me dead if I ever crossed the threshhold of a Masonic Lodge again. This prayer I now repeat, and I swear that I will keep that vow to the letter.

6. "In so doing, he has headed an Anti-masonic excitement." &c. The Grand Master will undoubtedly recollect how utterly false this charge was shown to be, and that S. Bassett, the only one of the accusing brethren present at the Court House, and one of my bitterest prosecutors, admitted before him in open Lodge that I there repelled the charges made against the Institution, and that what he complained of was my charge against the Sheriff, and what he considered an improper allusion to the oath or obligation of a Master Mason. And it is well known to hundreds, and espacially these Anti-masons, that I charged the improper obstruction of the law upon individual members, and such has been my course since, always naming the individuals, who, in my opinion, were so engaged, viz: Hurlbut, Burgess, Gooding, Bassett, Peck, & Co., the last of whom is the mere tool of others, an ignorant old twaddler, deserving really neither censure nor commendation for anything he might say or do. And further, of my Anti-masonry; before the last fall election, it so happened that the Democratic ticket was composed entirely, or nearly so, of Masons. A large portion of the Whigs and not a few Democrats, were for organizing an Anti-masonic party. A mass meeting was called, and I, as the only man in the county considered as possessed of the influence, was put forward to allay the excitement and prevent such an organization; and in a speech of some two hours, I pointed out the impropriety of such an organization without more cogent reasons than had yet been offered, and induced the abandonment of the organization: although as I expected at the time, it made me enemies in my own party; but it is a way I learned of my old Methodist mother, who is now beautified at the right hand of the Grand Warden, in the supreme Grand Lodge above, to "do right, and let consequences take care of themselves," and so I shall continue to act; and when I am so well satisfied of the corruption of Masonry, as to become imbued with the spirit of Anti-masonry, I shall send you my renunciation instead of my defence. What Anti-masons may quote or say, I do not know, neither do I care.

7. "At a public meeting," &c., I did not say if brother Florida had a warrant he would not arrest Keith; for all present knew that he had the warrant from Sunday night until then, Tuesday afternoon, and that he was making no effective move to execute it—hence the assembling of that meeting. But this I did say, that I did not believe the Sheriff would arrest Keith if he had it in his power, because they were both Masons and Odd-fellows. When I made this charge against the Sheriff, I honestly believed it, and afterwards, as I stated in open Lodge and in the presence of our Most Worshipful Grand Master, I was more confirmed in that belief; of course I had no positive proof, other than that the Sheriff remaining in town in the midst of the excitement, and not so much as giving the warrant to any other officer, or exhibiting the least disposition to procure Keith's arrest, and I was further confirmed in this belief, because I was informed that on the Monday succeeding the murder of Miss Slade, several persons believing that Keith was concealed in his father's house, induced the Sheriff to go with them to search the house, and they reported that he merely followed the old lady through a few of the rooms, and could not be induced to search the cellar; and these persons say that from the Sheriff's agitated manner they believe that he knew Keith was concealed there; and the fact is now well established by Keith's own admission, that he was secreted there from Sunday night until Tuesday evening. I was more fully confirmed in this belief, because on the day that I issued the warrant with which Keith was apprehended, the Sheriff was the first person to whom I communicated, fully, the facts on which I had issued the warrant, which was on information that one of Keith's counsel had employed one John Allen to take Keith to the Illinois River, for which he had paid Allen a large sum of money, and that Allen had communicated these facts to Job Kennyon, who had informed against Allen; and I told the Sheriff that I had sent a number of persons in pursuit, and that they were not more than two hours behind in the start. Brother Florida seemed very much agitated, and kept repeating, "You are on the wrong track; Keith has not gone South, he has gone North, and you had better call back your men and send them North;" and from brother Florida's excited manner I was perfectly satisfied that he was cognizant of Keith's whereabouts, and that the officers and men were on the right track. They pursued the South course and arrested Keith and Allen, and found upon the person of Allen (a poor devil) some two hundred and thirty dollars which Keith claimed, and, I am informed, took from Allen. Now, as some of you may conclude that all this was insufficient to warrant a strong presumption of the improper conduct of members of my Lodge, I will add another reason why I could not look upon these transactions of Masons and Odd-fellows, who did all the conspicuous figuring that has resulted in the absolute defiance of the laws of the land, with much allowance, which is this. Soon after the murder of Miss Slade, I was informed by a member of the Lodge, that another of the members was urging the Masons to exert themselves to screen Keith, and offering as a reason and inducement; that it would strengthen the Institution and induce others to join, by showing to the world that Masons would stand by and protect each other. This was communicated by one of the members who is now most active and bitter against me. I then believe, and am now convinced, that this was thrown out to me by this member as a feeler, and if it took, preparatory to a systematic opposition to the course of public justice, on the part of misguided and wicked members of this Lodge, the names of many of whom you have now before you.

8. "He also improperly alluded to the obligation," &c. This charge is without the semblance of truth, and how the fourteen accusing brethren could certify it as a fact, is passing strange; for but one of them was present, to hear what I did say. And I certainly had no intention to, nor did I, allude improperly to the obligation of the Master's degree, nor to any of the secrets of Freemasonry. And I have no doubt the Grand Master will recollect that all that was made on this charge was the statement of brother Bassett that I told "the crowd that Masons were under obligations to do the very contrary of what the public were charging upon the Institution, and what I greatly feared was true in regard to a few individuals." This I admitted; and it being manifest that the jist of this charge was my using the word obligation, the Grand Master remarked that he did not consider that that amounted to anything, "for" said he, "the world knows we have oaths and obligations;" and I admitted that I said also, that, as I understood Masonic obligations, Masons were taught not only passive but active obedience to the laws under which they live. If I am wrong, you have now the power of showing me my error; but I assure you that I have so understood Masonry, I have so taught it, and I will never know and practice it otherwise.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y.,, and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

Postage on the Cynosure.

After Jan. 1st, 1875, the THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. The postage on the Cynosure is 20 cents a year.

If the subscription price of the Cynosure was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscriber for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Please improve the beautiful weather and these election times in canvassing for the Cynosure. We will be glad to send extra copies of the Cynosure, Cynosure circulars, and subscription papers free, for canvassing purposes to all who request them. Tell us how many you want.

The State meetings in Indiana, Pennsylvania and Illinois should be preced and followed by a vigorous canvass for the Cynosure if the most lasting possible benefits are derived from them. Will you not have the Cynosure "widely circulated" before the national meeting in Pittsburgh?

We ask all who have ordered the Cynosure continued promising to remit soon, more than three months ago, and have not yet paid what is due, to so send on their renewals, or at least write to us. We desire to get these old accounts settled. These sums will help cancel the Cynosure debt. Short credits make long friends.

Read the "Reform News" to your neighbor and ask him to help in the work.

SABBATH, NOVEMBER EIGHTH.—We hope all friends who observe the day of fasting and prayer, Sabbath, November 8th, will not only remember the lecturers and agents in their prayers but, so far as possible, by contributing for their support. We have just received a letter from Rev. A. Hard, of New York, the following extract from which we hope our friends will carefully read:

"Enclosed find a five dollar bill for our cause—God and humanity. I can ill spare it, having just spent $300 in getting my son away to his mission in India; but I cannot endure the thought that those dear brethren laboring in the field should suffer for want of funds. I think more should be expected and required of the people in the support of lecturers and agents. Simply their expenses is not the fair thing. They ought to come to the front, take hold of the work in earnest. Support fifty agents. Get a book or publishing house. Have a tract fund and do something like live. Will do my best with all books, papers, tracts, petitions, etc., etc, sent me. Glad the work goes but sorry more money, heart and soul is not put into it."

Will you not from this day put more "money, heart and soul" into this work?

C. A. BLANCHARD,
Cor. Sec'y. N. C. A.

ARE YOU COMING to the Illinois State meeting in Chicago, November 18th and 19th? All delegates are requested to write beforehand if possible, and have places arranged for their entertainment. But come whether arranged for or not, we think there will be hospitality found in Chicago for all. Have mass-meetings at home if you can and send delegates. Be sure to have YOUR COUNTY well represented. We feel sure that the convention will repay you for self-denial in order to come. Make up your mind as soon as possible, so that you can consult with friends about engaging a lecturer while at the convention. Bring Cynosure subscriptions and orders for books with you. Bring statistics about lodges and Masons in your localities. We especially request seceding Masons to be here promptly on the FIRST DAY to testify to the truth of the lecture, "How a Man is made a Mason"

The meetings are to be held in the very heart of the city. The hall engaged is commodious and pleasant. Be sure to come. Get here by 2 o'clock, P. M, Wednesday, Nov. 18th, without fail.

When you reach the city Wednesday morning, ask for the Y. M. C. A. rooms, 148 East Madison street.

Topics of the Time.

THE NEW HAVEN COUNCIL.—"Playing at General Assembly" is the Presbyterian twit at the triennial meeting of Congregational ministers. It is apt but only skin deep. The enemy of Christ and his church keeps men busy in more serious matters when he can control their actions. This paper has expressed what we are told is a "harsh judgment" on this meeting, but the General Association of New Jersey unanimously resolved, questioning "the wisdom of continuing such councils in attempting to meddle with matters for which they were not appointed;" and its delegate, Geo B. Bacon, son of Dr. Leonard Bacon, "distinctly and stoutly condemned" the existence and action of the Council.

TUESDAY'S WORK.—The telegraph will be busy for several days to come arranging the figures of the late election. The ballots of twenty-four States and three Territories will on that day fix upon eleven governors, twenty legislatures and decide the character of the next Congress, two hundred and eight of whose Representatives are now thanking their constituents for their support. Perhaps few elections have been held in the past fifty years when speculation on general results have been so useless. The absence of principles co-extensive with the party names is the most reliable feature, in spite of the effort of certain Republicans to exaggerate Southern troubles into a party issue. That party has won about has much glory in recent Southern fields as it can safely carry.

NON-AMALGAMATION—Southern troubles and the Civil Rights Bill discussion may prove costly matters for Illinois College, for they have compelled the Faculty to choose between a black skin and a white. Being an institution with no particular principles to subserve outside itself, the dark colors were washed out in this wise: the sons of a Democratic, non-amalgamating politician and two young colored men were students. Prejudice began to burn with the political excitement in the bosoms of the first named. The Faculty submitted to its dictation and hired the negroes to leave refunding their tuition and $30 beside. Students who propose going to the Jacksonville institution hereafter should be first of all prepared with a faultless outfit, for an eccentric style, a worn garment, or a maimed body may be as objectionable as a black skin. The Illinois Association of Congregational ministers were affronted last spring at the abuse of a colored brother by a hotel-keeper at Mendota. Have they any indignation left for this later case?

THIRD TERM.—Since the sensational New York Herald raised a year ago the cry of "Cæsarism," the country has been edified with elaborate though needless articles on the third nomination of Gen. Grant. The clap-trap of these sensation mongers was worthless in itself, but by reiteration and opposition it has really reached a place of political recognition, and seems to be countenanced by the silence of the person chiefly concerned. A few Southern politicans urge it from selfish motives and many at the North would not condemn the proposition until the Indiana and Ohio elections showed the leaders of the Republican party that their President was a burden upon their political shoulders. With the masses who have a clearer sense of justice, it has never been popular, and their demand for the opinion of Gov. Dix at a great meeting last week in Cooper Institute, New York, was just, though reluctantly answered. Gov. Dix would have retired, but the repeated and peremptory calls of "Third term, Governor," brought out this opinion: "Forty years ago, fellow-citizens, in one of the first speeches I ever made in public, I proposed an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, extending the President's term to six years, and making him inelligible for the next six. I have repeated this proposition over and over again in resolutions and in addresses at public meetings, and until such an amendment to the Constitution can be made I am, as I always have been, in favor of adhering to the rule which had its origin in the patriotic breast of Washington, which has been held sacred by his successors for more than three-quarters of a century, and which has acquired in practice a force almost as potential as if it had been engratted upon the constitutional compact. It has sunk deep into the hearts of the people, and I believe that any disposition to violate it would be received with tmarked disfavor."

Enchanted by Secrecy.

Young people who are remarkably fond of parading the fact that they have a secret. They will take delight in torturing, by withholding it, the one who is anxious to get into the secret. Such conduct is very silly of course. The idea of making a show of the fact that one has a secret to keep is ridiculous.

It is noticable that young men who have been ensnared and led captive into a secret society are almost always extremely zealous in advocating the cause of these societies as well as ostentatious in letting people know that they themselves belong to these important associations.

For while they are sufficiently magnified in their own opinion by the fact that they have been successful enough "to pass" and be admitted into the grand and sublime fraternity, they attach great importance to the fact that they were not blackballed and refused admittance. They feel certain that many others whom they know would not be able to pass as readily as they.

Enchanted by this item of experience in the concern they pass a year or two in blissful membership, defending sharply the society, and ready to do any little chore that may be imposed upon them by their superiors in degrees and office. They pay their dues with religious punctuality, thinking that they are the most charitable persons in the world.

But after while, unless they are very dull, they begin to aspire to nobler things. They want to rise in the scale. They want a "degree." They covet the honor that hangs around even the first degree. They take one degree in due time, submitting to whatever is necessary to reach it. This again satisfies their ambition for awhile. They wear their laurels well and think their heads strike the stars as they move among their fellow-members, and flaunt defiance to the outside world, as much as to say: "Wouldn't you like to have a degree?"

But ambition is never satisfied. It must sit upon the pinacle of fame and glory. It must reach the Ultima Thule of human possibility. Another degree is after awhile desired. The man of one degree looks upon himself, considers his importance, his standing, his good behavior. He has done nothing to injure the brotherhood. Moreover he has defended it. He has used all the arguments at his own command, and has attempted to use incoherent fragments of those he has heard employed by the orators of the fraternity. Distinguished divines in his hearing have soared high in defense and praise of the sacred and glorious rites of the fraternity. He has treasured up what bits he could and has overwhelmed his opponents with these fragments of burst shells, often putting them to inglorious retreat.

He has also been pretty severe upon these heretics who say aught against the order. He has frequently said something of an insinuating kind in the ear of a passing opposer of secrecy, making dark and insulting allusions to the "square" or some other well known instrument of the brotherhood. All these acts are very meritorious, and entitle him to no little attention and honor. His title to a new degree he can read with clearness.

He gets it after awhile. Now again he is appeased, and feels as important as a satisfied soul can.

Thus he goes on from degree to degree, till he becomes noted in secret circles as well as the outside world of toadyism as a man of twenty, thirty, or even seventy degrees.

Now for what does this schooling of aspiring after and securing high-sounding titles prepare a man? Is it good for teaching him humility, how to deny himself and to follow a meek and lowly Master? Does it fit him for places of trust among his fellow-citizens? Can he be used after he has thus been long puffed up and magnified, for the promotion of the interests of the people generally?

If he is not a spoiled and ruined sycophant, and a clannish, partial respecter of persons, he must be incapable of being ruined by such things.

We do not profess to know why there is so much corruption in high places, why Congress is occupied almost all the time in investigating cases of corruption, and why so many officers of government are found connected with frauds and rascality. But if the schooling that men get in the boasted secret orders of the day does not fit them for everything that the hater of music is fitted for, we do not know anything about the laws of cause and effect.—Telescope.

The Fellowship.

BY R. FAUROT.

"What communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?"

Being somewhat of a wanderer and having of late enjoyed peculiar opportunities for observation, I wish to give a few impressions, which I think come from great causes for alarm. Society appears to me in the condition of contending armies, which have not a clear idea of the nature or object of the war, and mainly governed by one impulse—"to beat." Nor do I confine this to politicians, who have by the recent conflict, set society back half a generation; the churches are no better off It seems to me I have seen fruits in the past six weeks that indicate a growth in the work of ruin to the cause of Christ that I had not seen for years, if indeed, they were visible; yet like the cancer, this rapid outward growth may but indicate how general and fatal the spread of the roots in the body.

But to the question of fellowship. Yesterday I saw a strange medley of brotherhoods and ceremonies. A church member ("a good man?") who was also an "Odd-fellow" and "Mason" was buried. The Masons were out in force with all their trappings. But the Odd-fellows, a little heavier in numbers and trappings, took post in front of them while the mourners were placed in front and a minister was used as a "stool-pigeon." Pardon the seeming levity in the figure, for in other respect he seemed as such; flapping his wings (for he was embarrassed) and sewed "with eyes" (for he made a sorry attempt at complimenting the "orders" which he would not have done had his eyes been open). Then after the weary "interlude" of prayer, sermon and weeping, the "auspices of the orders" (for such the burial show was said to be under) went on. The pastor was again called out of the "Gentile" crowd, to "nterlude" another little prayer to please the Christian mourners, when the last act in the scene transpired. The chaplain, who I was informed was until recently a saloon-keeper, with prayer-book in hand, translated from the lodge below to the lodge above "our dear brother," invoking special interposition to "preserve our order throughout the globe from self-immolation, and to establish it in the faith."

Again I ask, was this suitable fellowship. And can Christian ministers secure the Divine approbation, or preserve their own piety and purity, or the "savor" of our holy religion by such a course? But why should I be troubled with the question, since I read "Have no fellowship (brotherhood) with the unfruitful works of darkness" (or secret societies). I confess my heart is sick and appalled by this mingling of "brotherhoods," pious and impious, religious and sacriligious ceremonies. This lowering of the standard of the ministry and their courting the applause and patronage of such societies by such means, seems to me to auger ill. "Come out . . . my people and be ye separate, and I will receive you."

I hope and pray that light may in increase on all these matters.

The Fessler Masonic Rite.

The Grand Lodge of Berlin derived its existence from the Grand Lodge of England, and regularly worked under the York Constitution and in the York Rite until the year 1796; it was on the 2d of June of said year that Ignatius Aurelius Fessler joined the Mother Lodge, "Royal York a l'Amitie," in the city of Berlin, and he became its Master. He was formerly a Capuchin monk, and subsequently a doctor of theology. Having remarkable talents, he was requested to revise its ritual. which he did, and being one of the commission to draft the Book of Constitutions for the Grand Lodge, he, performing most of the labor, imbued the one and infused the other with his own and illiberal and bigoted religious views, proceeding so far as to insert an article excluding the Israelites from he fraternity in consequence of their faith. All this was approved by the Grand Lodge, and gave rise to what was called the "Fessler Rite." It is alleged that this order of things on the following year (1797) met the approbation of King Frederick William. Dissatisfaction arose and continued, but all bowed (some ungraciously) to the will and rule of the Deputy Grand Master, this learned professor of the civil law.

Some thirty years ago the intolerant spirit became too burdensome, and the exclusion of the Israelites by the Grand Lodge of Berlin excited a lively interest among the fraternity of Europe. The Earl of Zetland, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England, took an energetic and decided course, and demanded of the Grand Lodge of Berlin an unqualified recognition of the English Grand Lodge certificates, which was refused, and with promptness Masonic relations between the two bodies were suspended. In June, 1846, the Supreme Council of France, under special consideration, approved the course of Lord Zetland, and announced that the Duc Decazes, the Grand Master, had received a special letter of credence to confer with the Prince Royal of Prussia on the subject.

All this action was alluded to everywhere with commendation. The Prince, however, contended he was bound by the revised Constitution, and could not absolved from his oath, willingly forgetful of all duty to the present or ancient Constitution and usages of the craft; it became useless to reason against the convictions of a man's conscience, and it led to much embarrassment, which is felt even to this day, for Fesslerism is still practiced, although but by a small number of lodges in Germany; it has, however, long since been abandoned by the Grand Lodge of Royal York, in which it originated, for the York Rite, in which that body works.

As but little is known of the Fessler system, it may not be inappropriate to give a description of it, as it embraces a wide scope of obtruse learning on many of the most important subjects of antiquity, archæology, philosophy, mythology and religion. It consists of nine degrees, and may well be considered among the most historical and scientific of the forty odd classes of rites.

Of the first three degrees little may be said, as they assimilate to the first three grades of all rites as practiced in Europe, Fessler's great aim being to destroy, if possible, the system of the superior grades, but finding that impracticable, attempted to reduce them in number.

The 4th Degree, called Holy of Holies, is occupied with an historical inquiry into the origin of the order, and an examination of the separate claims to this honor, of the Crusaders, the builders of the Strasburg Cathedral, and of St. Paul's, the Rosecrucians and scholars of the 18th century, the adherents of Cromwell, and the Jesuits.

The 5th, termed Justification, is devoted to an examination of the historical hypothesis on the origin of the order, whether as set forth to the grade of Knight of St. Andrew of the Ancient Accepted Rite, or in the system of Clermont.

The 6th grade Fessler called Celebration, and in it he extends the examination to the hypothesis of the Rose Croix, of that of the Rite of Strict Observance, or that of the African builders, and the Asiatic Brothers.

The 7th grade was called True Light, still pursuing the examination to the hyposheis of the Sweedish Rite, that of Zinnendorf and of the English Royal Arch, and concludes with a general review of the ancient mysteries, and all other Masonic systems.

The Ritual of the 8th grade, Fatherland, consists of meditations on the mysteries of Christ, and on the esoteric dogmas taught by him to his confidential disciples, and on the fate of those dogmas from the time of his death to the appearance of the sect known as Gnostics.

And, finally, the 9th grade, termed Perfection, which some have thought, in error, was never concluded, consists of an elaborate review of the fate of all the pagan mysteries, and extends the research from the earliest times to the period of the establishment of the new constitution, and the classification under this system.

Fessler was not only learned, but possessed a brilliant imagination; his lectures were extremely erudite, fascinating, and full of dramatic effect, and his system of Masonry would to-day, if wielded by competent and earnest minds, prove so attractive as to rapidly run away with very many of our best talent.—Hebrew Leader.

The Atheism and Immorality of the French Revolution.

The question of the relations of morals and religion should be studied historically as well as theoretically. No one can afford, in studying this subject, to overlook the lesson of the French Revolution at the close of the last century. And as matters are now developing themselves in our own country, that sad chapter of history is one of the most important for Americans to study.

The story of the utter corruption of morals in French society at the time of the Revolution has been ably told by Carlyle, Bayne, De Pressense, and others. If any one wishes to look into the depths of that cess-pool of violence and uncleanness, he may read the letters of Mr. Craggs, the minister at Paris, at that time, of Queen Anne, to his friend Alex. Pope. Or let him read the graphic account which the learned De Maistre gives in his treatise on the "Moral condition of French Society in the years preceding the Revolution." Even this writer, after speaking with unwonted plainness, tells us that he refrains from polluting his pages with proofs of the astounding corruption and debasement, so fearfully general, that reigned in France at the moment of the Revolution. "Who can show me," he exclaims, "another country of the world where can be seen, in so short a space of time, the most illustrious of names figuring in the most scandalous suits at law; where rape, licentious violence, theft, forgery, prostitution, cause the astonished tribunals of justice to echo, and the shades of knights of old to tremble?"*

The connection of this sickening condition of social morals with the principles of infidelity and atheism is the point now to be emphasized. And here we meet with the striking fact that the infidel and atheistic principles which swept over France and all Europe during the latter part of the 18th century, were nourished and propagated by means of secret societies. In the year 1787 France contained 280 towns in which regular lodges of Freemasons were established, with a total membership of from 500,000 to 600,000. The society of the Illuminati, founded by the infamous Weishaupt, May 1, 1776, began to make its evil influence powerfully felt by the year 1780. Connecting with its impious and infidel doctrines a professed regard for the rights of man, it gained access to the lodges of Freemasons and other secret societies, and moulded them gradually into its own likeness. One of the most powerful of all the secret orders into which the doctrines of Illuminism worked their way, was that of the Jacobins, which Barruel, in his "Memoirs of Jacobinism," declares to have consisted, with its affiliated branches, of 300,000 adepts, supported by 2,000,000 of armed men. In these societies were all the leaders of the Revolution, associated with the basest of the people of the country. Thus was France overrun with organized infidelity and atheism, determined to take the government into their own hands, that there might be no restraint upon their licentiousness.

The atheism of the Convention which at length seized the reins of power, was but the exponent of the atheism of the leaders of society generally. The saddest scenes of that period were not the impious acts of an Assembly decreeing the abolition of the Christian era, and effacing the name of Christ from the calendar. This was shocking enough. But think of a deputation of schoolmasters presenting themselves before the Convention, accompanied by little children, one of whom, with infant voice, demanded that instead of having preaching in the name of the pretended God, (soi-disant Dieu,) they should be instructed in the principles of equality, of the rights of man, and of the Constitution.†

One of the formularies of the rites of Illuminism required the candidate for initiation to profess that the morality which he accepted was "not that morality which would throw men into a state of pusillanimity and despair by the threats of hell and the fear of devils." After this profession of unbelief, the candidate was robed with a white tunic bound about him with a scarlet belt of silk. During the Revolution a comedian appeared on the stage in a similar dress, openly bidding defiance to Almighty God. "No! thou dost not exist," he exclaimed, looking upward, and violently gesticulating. "If thou hast power over the thunderbolts, grasp them; aim them at the man who dares set thee at defiance in the face of thy altars! But no! I blaspheme thee, and I still live! No! thou dost not exist!"‡

The creed of the prevailing system of that dark day may be summed up in the "profession of faith"—to use his own terms—of a recent candidate in France for official position: "In politics, I am a socialist; in religion, an atheist; in philosophy, a materialist; —that is my profession of faith."‖

The legitimate fruits of such a system are degradation, corruption, violence and blood. The aspiration of the human soul for freedom, guided by infidelity and irreligion, is speedily transformed into the lust of the flesh and the spirit of despotism. Of every nation that accepts infidel radicalism it must sooner or later be said, as Mr. Bayne has said of France, "That nation first mocked at freedom by the mummeries of children, and then made its name a loathing over the world by the horror of bloody cruelty. Federation fetes, statues of liberty, endless overflowing of meaningless mellifluous oratory, and then foaming hatred and the long line of death-tumbrils—the dream that freedom was no-government, and the awakening to find that it was the government of madness; such was the history of the French Revolution. If we except even from it the imperishable truth that freedom is the inalienable inheritance and ultimate goal of men, we will also read in it this other lesson, that without religion a nation can never be free, but will either go mumming and fooling to plant liberty-trees and inaugurate plaster-of-Paris images, or it will awaken the furies of anarchy, and join with them in the dance of death. Never did revolution so completely fail as that of France; and never in this world was there a revolution so profoundly infidel." May the God of nations save our land from infidel radicalism and its inevitable results!—Christian Statesman.

Creeds and Cant.

In theology liberalism has become the popular cant. By many to be attached to old tenants and old forms of theology is regarded as but evidence of bigotry. So far as they have any religion themselves it is little else than a vague sentiment, and they cannot understand why others should have strong convictions and a staunch adherance to any system of religious truth. Their liberality is really the fruit of indifference. One system of faith is as good to them as another. In the last analysis they have no settled religious faith. It is easy for them to fraternize with men of all forms of faith. It is but natural that they should indulge in all manner of liberal cant.

This liberalism shows itself as distinctly in respect to practical religion. It has no patience with such views of Christian life as Bunyan gives in Pilgrim's Progress, or as Paul gives in his epistles. These are of the old austerities of religion from which the world has grown away. Sin and retribution, and especially any final and unending separation of men on account of sin, may have been believed in a past age, but can have no place in the advanced thought of this age. That man in his great power should need help from on high in his progress to perfection is too old to be believed now. That Christ and his atonement should be needed is no more in accord with the liberal theology of the times. And as for the ordinances of Christ in respect to prayer, praise or preaching, or a sacred day for their observance, they are entitled to respect only so far as the enlightened judgment of the age approves. They must all bear the scientific test.

We do not say that all who count themselves liberal have got thus far. But many who rank themselves as among evangelical Christians have got so far as to show more deference for "the advanced thought of the times" than for the plain teachings of the Bible. Some of them are ready to accommodate the Bible to the demands of such thought; if need be to give up belief in its plenary inspiration. Others are mainly troubled about creeds in which the doctrines of the Bible are set forth. It is by these last named the church is most likely to be troubled. All the others will soon go to their own place, the ranks of open infidelity. But the men who profess to adhere to the Bible, but seek a mere liberal or softened statement of its truths, as they think better suited to the tastes of the age, are not likely to leave the church undisturbed. If honest, as we have no doubt many of them are, they will feel bound to press their demands, and must be met fairly but firmly.—United Presbyterian.

Sunday Amusement.

A petition has been presented to the British House of Commons in favor of the opening of museums, libraries and art galleries on the afternoon of Sunday, setting forth that it would "greatly promote the moral and intellectual improvement of large classes." It is signed by 146 ministers of the church of England, "and other ministers of Christ," among whom are such names as Dean Stanley and Canon Kingsley. There are a number of considerations involved in this proposition deserving of thoughtful attention. The Christian Sabbath is certainly a day of rest, but not a day of secular amusement. To the advanced Christian, thoroughly aflame with vivid conceptions of God's goodness, and habituated to a frame of mind on an elevated plane, the book of nature is as suggestive of thoughts benefitting the day as any he could peruse within four walls. But is it so with the multitude? To the majority, we are afraid a Sunday ramble would be productive of anything but holy aspirations; and yet the face of nature exhibits God's handiwork, the walls of an art gallery only that of man. If to regale the eye upon the former cannot be commended to all as a suitable way of spending the days which should be our stepping-stones to heaven, it is much more doubtful if the sanction of ministers should be given to the frequenting of art galleries, which have almost invariably some elements not merely sensuous but sensual, the study of which is not very suitable for any day, and much less for the day especially set apart as the Lord's day. The whole question is fraught with difficulties, but of one thing we may be assured, namely, that the nation which observes the Sabbath best rises highest in education, enterprise, morality and influence; whilst all kinds of Sabbath desecrations that necessarily deprive many of its advantages, besides those who voluntarily turn it into a day of amusement or dissipation, have a very demoralizing tendency.—N. Y. Witness.

TRACKS.—Young men are often tempted to enter associations that corrupt the conscience and destroy the soul. Let them learn from the sagacity of the fox in the fable to mark the tracks and which way they go:

An old lion, with shaggy looks, invited a nice, sleek fox, whom he met, to visit his home. The fox was quite delighted with the attentions of the king of beasts, whose fame had spread through the forests, and he accepted the invitation. Arriving at the threshold of his den, the cunning fox hesitated for a moment and drew back, whereupon the lion urged him to go and make himself at home. Perhaps the lion thought that Mr. Fox was bashful in the presence of strangers, and for this reason hesitated to meet Mrs. L. and her family.

"No," said the fox, at length, "I see no tracks coming out."

That was the secret of his hesitation. His keen eye discovered proof that visitors to that abode never came out. The great lion appears honest and friendly, but the tracks at his door showed that he was a deceiver and murderer. So, not wishing to be served up in a savory dish for the lion's family, the wise fox took to his heels and ran away.

But is the question of secret societies one of vital interest? If we have not positive knowledge in regard to it, we are dependent upon testimony. Dr. Finney, of Oberlin, Ohio, perhaps second to no man in the field of letters, and who has probably been the means of bringing more souls to Christ in America than any other man, venerable in years, and devoted to God, declares that Masonry is inimical to the welfare of souls and the Christian religion. He speaks of what he knows. Thousands have testified the same by word and by leaving the lodge forever. Joseph Travis, Edward P. Hart, Septer Roberts, and others of our own church testify the same. The testimony of adhering Masons is of no value for they are sworn to conceal the truth, and consider the obligation binding. The question is not a dead one, but is before the world and cannot be ignored. It must be met. Ignorance in regard to it is a crime. The bare fact, that sober, godly men make these charges against the lodge is sufficient to make the question worthy of attention. The minister who ignores it proves himself "a hireling whose own sheep are not." To stand still and allow the wolf to enter the fold, is as culpable as to flee and let him in.—*J. G. Reform News.

—Pastor Martin, of Wheatland circuit, Mich., writes to the Wesleyan of interesting lectures and pointed sermons in that locality by Elder Rathbun.

—Bro. Hinman brings to light some pertinent facts on lodge work, gathered during his industrious tour.

—The Dupage County (Ill.) Association, which meets at Downer's Grove on the 11th, will be sure of liberal entertainment. Elder Freeman has been looking up transient homes for two or three score delegates. H. H. Hinman, the State Agent, is expected to be present.

—In another county of the same State the result was quite cheering. See C. G. Fait's letter.

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard has appointments for seven lectures in the vicinity of Pittsburgh and on the route to Chicago, which he expects to fill this week and next.

—A private letter from Portland, Ind., states that at the late election the Anti-mason ic ticket developed the strength of the lodge opposition though drawn upon by the other contending parties. The highest number of votes cast was 87 or Commissioner. Well done.

—The Niagara county Association holds its quarterly meeting at Pendleton, N. Y., Nov. 10th and 11th. J. L. Barlow will speak.

ALBION, Edwards Co., Ill., Oct. 20, 1874.

DEAR BRO. K:—'One soweth and another reapeth." Bro. Kiggins and afterwards Bro. McCormick visited this county and did a good work for Christ, and now I am here by invitation of the brethren to labor in this cause. I left home on the 14th and at 11 A. M. on the 15th reached Olney on the O. & M. R. R., where I met our earnest and steadfast brother, F. H. Peters, who took me 17 miles south to Sumerville where I spoke in the U. B. church. The night was dark and rainy, but there was a full house and excellent attention. On the 16th I spoke in the Free Baptist church at Bone Gap. The Sons of Temperance, the grangers and the Masons here made common cause in their opposition, and stoutly resisted the truth, but some tracts and papers were distributed and some books were sold. On the 17th I lectured again at Sumerville to a full house. On the 18th preached here in the morning and lectured in the evening on Africa, its institutions and especially its secret societies. On Monday, the 19th, Bro. Peters took me to Albion, the county seat of Edwards county. The circuit court was in session and many people were in the village. At the noon recess I listened to a two hours' speech from Gen. Wm. Anderson, the farmer's candidate for Congress in the 19th district. He made out a strong case against Judge Marshall, who now represents the district, but indicated no line of policy to be pursued, except that he favored an inflation of the currency

Among the cases tried at this court, there are two which have arrested the attention of the people. One, a Mason, was indicted for gambling The evidence was plain, but on the plea of ignorance of the law, as I am informed, he was acquitted. Another, a Mason, was indicted for forgery. It was clearly proved before the Grand Jury that a man who cannot read, had been induced to endorse a note of $500, supposing it was $100, and that this note had been changed several times and except of those notes have been negotiated. On one of these notes, suit was brought against the principal and endorser, but before it came to trial all the notes were bought up at fifty cents on the dollar, and either secreted or destroyed. On the trial for forgery the original note could not be procured and so the prisoner was acquitted, but all the people felt that he was morally guilty, and that it was Masonry that had saved him from his just deserts.

I spoke in the court-house in the evening and was honored with the attention of three learned judges and an intelligent audience. I am to speak twice more in the county and then go northward. Yours for Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

The Right kind of Sermons.—Bring them into Court.

WELLINGTON, Ill. Oct. 26, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Rev. Mr Hammond, a U. P. Presbyterian minister at the village of Rankin, near here, gave recently a thorough antisermon. Masonry, Odd-fellowship and the grange were roughly used. His arguments, reasoning and exposition were fully up to the Cynosure standard. If all ministers—yes, if one fourth of those who claim to preach the Gospel would meet the lodge question as squarely as preacher Hammond did on this occasion the lodge in every shape it assumes would soon be plucked of all its fine feathers.

Rev. Mr. ——, Methodist minister, at Milford, recently officiated in this neighborhood at a Masonic funeral. This minister gloried in Masonry in the pulpit of Amity M. E. Church where C. A. Blanchard showed "how a man was made a Mason." In his prayer he asked that the craft might "meet on the level and part on the square!' In the pulpit he turned "square" and asked the craft and said he hoped they would all prove themselves to be Masons not in name only but in fact, which we suppose means that they should live up to their rules, obligations and oaths, and prosecute seceders and possibly cut their throats "across!' This minister, I am told, is chaplain of the Milford lodge. Certainly he must feel badly to see some of his poorer members when initiated, denuded, hoodwinked and cable-towed and swindled out of $25 for the "degrees," when I have again and again offered to sell the same "degrees" for ten cents and warrant them with bond and security for $100 to be as good as theirs, and the purchasers to keep their "duds" on at that, and not part with their manhood either. One of the members of the Milford lodge said I could not prove it by him if I was sued on such a bond. I replied, "My dear sir, that illustrates the very point that we charge against you, and that is you lodge men as Masons are disloyal."

Let us get up a test case; take it into the courts, all bear a part of the expenses. We have a right to sell Morgan's Expose and warrant it under a bond of $1,000 as I have repeatedly offered to do We can get an Anti-mason to sue us to her Anti, and use Masons for witnesses; and if they won't work in the legal harness but kick up like a mule, we can imprison them and prove up our case still by seceders who are willing witnesses.

Respectfully yours,
J. S. HICKMAN.

Elder Barlow at Woodhull, Steuben County, N. Y.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR SIR: J. L. Barlow came to our place Saturday evening, Oct. 17th, and on Sunday preached in the Baptist house to an attentive audience from the text, "What is man that thou art mindful of him or the son of man that thou visitest him;" after which he announced lectures for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings on the subject of Freemasonry: Monday evening, subject, the Religion of Freemasonry by its own authors, and Tuesday evening on its oaths and obligations; Wednesday evening, Origin, History and claims of Freemasonry. We had a full house, among them a few of the craft. who were invited to reply to anything that had been said. Not one arose, but all kept their jewels in harmony with their obligations.

Those only who have heard J. L. Barlow know fully how to appreciate his worth as a lecturer on the subject of Freemasonry. I do call on all my Anti-masonic friends in all the towns of Steuben county to rally around the Anti-masonic flag and defy the minions of the lodge and try to unlock and open the dark dens of secretism that the people may look in and see the imagery and abominations there carried on, and this you can do by sending for J. L. Barlow, of Syracuse, who is in the lecture field and ready to do all he can in this direction. We ought to have a county organization. Let every one go to work and send for some good lecturer and above all send for the Christian Cynosure and get subscribers, for the light of heaven shines on every page of it. I have taken it ever since it was published, besides getting subscribers for it. I expect to be a worker in this cause as long as the enemy is in the field, and have distributed 1 500 tracts, 1.000 of them E. Honeywell's, of Albany. May the seed sown by J. L. Barlow spring up and bring forth fruit an hundred fold! God bless brother Barlow! Elder J. R. Baird must call on me when he comes this way and renew acquaintance.

PHILO MILLARD.

From Tompkins County, N. Y.

It is a Masonic trick when the subject of Masonry is being agitated and men's eyes are being opened, to deride the labors of those engaged in the work. . . .

But a few evenings since as I entered a store in this place I was met by a Mason (no longer able to conceal the anger of his heart by a smile) who had become enraged at the late effort of Mr. Barlow with a few friends of the cause to expose the character of the soul-damning institutions of secrecy, and with oaths and curses too foul and blasphemous to repeat, he pour'd upon me the venom of his heart as only a

Mason knows how to do. I confess it was a little shocking at first, being but a beginner in the cau e, but after the example of Him "who when he was reviled, reviled not again," and remembering also the precept, "cast not your pearls," etc., I left him immediately, praying that the scales might fall from his eyes and be saved from the foul grasp of secrecy.

The fact is we have been moving on the ranks of Masonry and the craft has begun its persecution upon the followers of Jesus. Last month the Groton Christian Association was organized and Wednesday the 14th of this month held its first annual session in the Baptist church, in this place. Rev. J. L. Barlow was present and gave two lectures during the session which were well received and listened to with interest and attention. Some strong resolutions was passed and with a zest that showed a determination and a willing to work, though in the minority and in an unpopular cause. A collection was also taken with which to procure Anti-masonic tracts and books for gratuitous distribution. On the whole the meeting was a most harmonious one and earnest prayers were put up to God for success. Through this organization we hope to accomplish much for the cause of truth by the blessing of God who giveth us the victory. BEGINNER.

A Good Work in Oswego County, N. Y.

About four weeks ago, I had the pleasure of being at the quarterly meeting on Boylston charge, Syracuse Conference, and listened to several good discourses by Rev. E. Barnetson, who conducted the services of the occasion; and who also gave two lectures on secretism at that place, and two at the village of Sandy Creek, on the same subject. I was present at three of the lectures, and can say in truth, he exceeded my expectation; his arrangement of the subject, and its relation to, and influence on the moral, social, civil and religious interests of the country, and the churches of the land, were very strikingly set forth. I am quite sure that the lectures were a truthful expose of the evils of the secret fraternities; for some of the clans were out, to dispute, quibble, question, and be disposed of, as they had probably not anticipated. At Sandy Creek, there was no reply or questioning; but the Rev. pastor of the Congregational church in that village, who promised brother Barnetson to attend his lectures, and who was once a Wesleyan clergyman, I am told, came into the entrance, or ante-room, (the lecture was in Good Templar's Hall,) and with several others, who occupied that noted place of a preparation to be inducted into the mysteries of secretism, then and there, unseen by the speaker took the lead in making grimaces, and manœuvering in "Jim Crow" style to the great amusement of his cronies. I thank God, he is not a Wesleyan minister now; but has gone down to the "level," and stands upon the "square" of speculative Freemasonry.

At Boylston, some of the members of the grange were present, and though their institution was only incidently mentioned, very great "on-pleasantness" was manifested by one who confessed to belonging to the order, and "asked no man's pardon;" but very strangely he seemed intent on defending the institution of Freemasonry, though he said, he was not, and did not expect to be a Mason. But during the second lecture at Boylston, he was in sweet communion and full fellowship apparently, with the most noted Mason of the town; and at the close of the lecture, he seemed to be put forward by said Mason to echo his words and thoughts; but all their efforts to deny or question the speaker's position, produced not a single victory in a single instance.

There were large audiences at both lectures in Boylston; the church being filled to its utmost capacity. with an attentive and appreciative audience; and I am quite sure that it will be productive of much good.—Correspondence Am. Wesleyan

The Late Election in Indiana.

LIGONIER, Ind., Oct. 24, 1873.

The race between the old parties for the county offices of Noble county, (Ind.) has been considered very uncertain for several months. Each party therefore made considerable effort during the fall canvass. Great effort was made by Republicans to induce Anti-masons who are also Republicans to believe the "Anti" ticket was gotten up especially to defeat the Republican party, stating that the anti-secrecy party is composed almost entirely of Republicans. On the other hand the Democrats made an effort to convince their Democratic friends who are Anti-masons that the "Anti" or American ticket was an intrigue to defeat their ticket. By the combined efforts of Republicans, Democrats, Masons, Odd-fellows and grangers to shame and deter Anti-masons from voting their principles, the reform vote was not so large as was expected. If every man who to day would rejoice in the triumph of our reform movement had voted his principles the results would have been different. But it is very hard for most men to break rank from their old party drill; especially is this difficult when they are to ally themselves to an unpopular party; a party that they know is right, but persecuted more than they feel able or willing to bear. For the reasons given above many who came to the polls with the expectation of voting the reform ticket cast their votes in favor of the institutions they acknowledge to be wrong. But they were made believe that if they voted the reform ticket they would be throwing their votes away. How strange the delusion, that a man is throwing his vote away because he is not voting for the winning party!

Men are throwing away their votes, and not only their votes but their principles, by voting to sustain measures they know to be wrong simply to go with a popular and predominant party. If voting for men who fail to be elected is throwing away votes then the Republicans threw away many times more votes; and for the treasury: the Republicans polled a heavy vote, but elected only two county officers out of ten. While the reform or American party voted for ten county officers of which five are the chosen servants of the people. The anti-secrecy vote after all amounted to more than the enemies of our cause said it would, or desired that it should. The prophets of the secret empire prophesied two years ago when we had but seven "Anti" votes in the county that our cause would be dead in two years. But the Lord has not suffered his cause thus to die. We hope it will look brighter two years hence.

Michigan Free Methodist Conference.—Strong Resolutions.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As you have already read elsewhere, I am now a a member of the Michigan conference, Free Methodist church. The Conference committee on secret societies asked me to write a report for them. While writing the subjoined report, I was appointed a member of the committee. The report was written for the committee. As it was written in haste and in the absence of all, I supposed it would be variously improved. However, it was adopted without alteration. By request of the conference, I send you a copy. A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

REPORT ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

Your committee beg leave to report as follows:

No society or organization intentionally or actually unfriendly to the right and interests of the Christian community, has a just claim to support or existence; and no true Christian or good citizen can innocently disregard or tolerate such institutions. Freemasonry is the parent of all the minor secret combinations, and these are conducted in the interest of that. Masonry is anti-republican and treasonable. The government of the lodge is despotic and its authority is absolute. Masonry seeks to become cosmopolitan. Its secrets are utterly valueless and its ceremonies trifling, repulsive and blasphemous.

Yet, to keep all Masonic secrets and conceal its arts and so-called mysteries, its votaries are bound by extra-judicial, horrible oaths, by terrible barbarous and fiendish death penalties, and the influence of the most demoralizing associations. The claims of Masonry being paramount, as often they are, a lodge man cannot be a loyal citizen, an impartial juror, or a truthful witness. While under the influence of secretism, society cannot be in a healthy condition and the community cannot be safe.

Every friend of public order and morality, every believer in the holy Bible and every member of the church should devote himself to energetic and unceasing hostility to secretism—one of the blackest and most threatening abominations of the age. Masonry claims to be ancient, yet as Grand Lodge Masonry or speculative Freemasonry, it had no existence earlier than 1717. It claims to be charitable and benevolent, but is exclusive and selfish in the extreme. It professes to be a religion, nay, the religion; yet it uses the holy Bible only to deceive. It has a system of worship from which it excludes even the name of Jesus Christ. It calls heaven a "Grand Lodge" and promises all true Masons a home therein; but the forgiveness of sins and the atonement are not known in Masonry. Masonry teaches that by the use of the "common gavel" a man is fitted for a place in the temple not made with hands: or, he goes to eternity "washed in his own blood." It is too late to doubt that the lodge is the very hot bed of atheism and treason. In the light of Scripture and fact we feel authorized to say that no man can at one and the same time be an intelligent adhering Mason and a Christian. The teachings of Masonry are professedly moral. But no man is at liberty to conceal from others what he receives as moral teaching. Hence, if Masonry be good, all Masons should "freely give" what they have received—that is, they should divulge. If it be bad, they should abandon and denounce it as an expensive, hollow and fraudulent sham. Therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we as ministers and members of the Free Methodist church, will have no fellowship with this unfruitful work of darkness, but will unequivocally and in every reasonable way continue to reprove it.

2 That we are heartily in sympathy with the workers and work of the "National Christian Association opposed to secret societies."

3 That, so far as we may, we will use our influence to extend the circulation of the Christian Cynosure and all similar publications.

4. That we will discountenance all secret reform movements, believing that, by popularizing secretism, they do far more harm than all the good they can possibly do.

5 That, while we deprecate the blighting and withering influence of the church and nation of these abominable inventions of avaricious, ambitious and ungodly men, we rejoice that many persons have, by openly renouncing and fully divulging, decided to regain their manhood and save their souls.

6. That, by the help of God, we will not cease our prayerful and unqualified opposition to secret societies till we witness their complete overthrow.

The Rock River U. B. Conference on the Day of Fasting.

POLO, Ill., Oct. 23, 1874.

BRO K:—The request forwarded from Chicago was duly presented by me to the Rock River Conference, United Brethren in Christ, and the following action was taken:

"WHEREAS, The Executive Committee of the National Christian Association have designated the eighth of November as a day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of secret societies; therefore,

Resolved, That we appoint a special meeting at some prominent point on each field of labor and carry out the design of the committee."

We elected one of our number to attend the Anniversary at Pittsburgh.

It is my opinion that late in the spring will be a much better time for holding the Anniversary than in the winter. Yours very truly,

P. HURLESS.

What I Don't Like to See.

WEST UNITY, Ohio.

I don't like to see parents and children stay away from Sabbath-school because the weather is hot. I don't like to see people stay away from church on the Sabbath day because (as they say) they labored hard the past week. I don't like to see members of the church go to sleep during preaching. I don't like to see a man profess to be in sympathy with the reform movements of the present day, and at the same time refuse to subscribe, pay for and read such periodicals as are published weekly in the interest of the same, when abundantly able to so do. I don't like to see a man profess opposition to sworn secrecy and then give the lie to his profession at the ballot-box. Jesus said, "He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." I don't like to see a man professing to be a minister of the Gospel of Christ stand up in the pulpit (having on a little sheep-skin apron) vindicating secretism by saying that he could now, and since he became a member of the order, stretch out his hands and assist in relieving the suffering; and by the drift of his discourse say there is more charity exercised by the lodge than there is by the church, as was the case not long since in this place at a Masonic funeral. Now we know that objects of charity cannot become members of the order of Masonry, and are cared for by the church and common humanity more than by secret clans. The boasted liberality of Masons extends only to the brotherhood who have done what was demanded of them in paying into the Masonic treasury. Again, the Saviour said, "If ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye; for sinners also lend to sinners to receive as much." As it regards the grangers in this county, one after another they are slowly but quietly withdrawing from the order; and when inquired of, like Peter of old, they say, I am not of them. The Lord hasten the time when secretism will be numbered with the things of the past.

E. MILLER.

The "Good Man" Argument.

Bro. C. G. Fait, writing of a young Freemason who defended the lodge on the ground that his father was a Mason and as good a man as ever lived, and if the institution was wrong he would have nothing to do with it, says: I think the grand trouble with this man's father is this, that his estimation of right and wrong is at fault. He may have been a worshiper of idols, or a leading Mormon, or spiritualist, or he may like the Jew, think himself a favored man of God and will not incur Divine displeasure by taking a solemn oath to take the life of an innocent man to protect his craft, as did those forty who took a oath that they would neither eat nor drink until they had killed Paul.

I suppose the children of these would-be murderers of the Apostle Paul were just as certain that their fathers would not belong to a bad society of men, or commit a bad act, as this young man. The trouble is this with both parties: they have a standard of right and wrong not warranted by the Word of God nor even the laws of a good government. To say or think an institution good because good men uphold it or are in it, is wrong. This mode of reasoning will land us in a ditch from which we cannot extricate ourselves. Every intelligent man knows that many good men believed slavery a divine institution. But this is no argument to prove slavery right. In the early history of our country, our ministers both by example and by precept taught the people that a little tippling at the bottle was good. Partly by such early training of such good men we are fast becoming a nation of tipplers and drunkards instead of a Christian nation as we profess. Because our fathers or our grandfathers used a little whisky or tobacco to enable them to endure heat, or cold, or hardship, and also for their social stimulus, are we, because our ancestors upheld these things and were good men, to conclude that they were right in their views? Does not the history of the past, as well as the present, prove to us that our progenitors, although good, practiced some egregious errors? Certainly it does. And I pray the Lord to open the eyes of his people that they may see the fallacy of this mode of reasoning and cease to be led even by the professed guardians of the church of Christ into the secret dens of Satan.

OUR MAIL.

Benj. Ulsh, Silver Lake, Ind., who has sent in nearly a hundred subscriptions this year (though many of them were only for three or six months) sends three more, and writes:

"I have sold fifty-seven books since receiving the last lot. . . I have the promise of five more subscriptions soon."

If one or two hundred of our subscribers would work as earnestly and successfully as Mr. Ulsh has done for the enlarged circulation of the Cynosure, and the rest of the subscribers would do the best they could to increase its circulation, the paper would soon be out of debt.

John Brownlee, Little York, Ill., writes:

"I like the Cynosure and hope it will succeed. . . Since writing the above I have secured two new subscribers."

If all our friends annually follow this example, their hopes will be realized.

J. M. Darby, Xenia, Ind., writes:

"I have been sick for some time but am getting better. I have distributed those tracts and some books, loaning others. I still hope to be able to get some more subscribers for the Cynosure. Enclosed again find two dollars for one-half dozen of 'Finney on Masonry' to help on in this region of darkness, to expose those pagan dens."

Rev. W. M. Love, Baker, Mo., writes:

"The seed that has been sown here is growing, and the cause here really needs some one to give it attention, who can devote all or most of his time to the work. I had no idea until of late the amount of Anti-masonic leaven we have in this section of Missouri. What is needed is some one to thoroughly organize it and put it to work and soon the largest part of the lump of society would be leavened."

Jared Hulbert, Cicero, O., writes:

"I have taken the paper a number of years and like it well."

John Wright, Park's Corners, Ill., writes:

"I would not do without the paper. I wish I could get some subscribers but my health is so poor that I am not able to go any distance and see but very few people. . . . I hope the time is close by when the people will be stirred up on the subject."

A lady in Copenhagen, N. Y., writes:

"Rev. Blanchard, Dear Sir: I have heard something of a paper called the Cynosure or the Christian Cynosure or something like that, and I have an idea that it is published at Chicago; but I have no paper to guide me to the right address, and I am a little in doubt, but I want that paper. If this reaches the publisher please send me the paper and I will send the money immediately."

There are fifteen Cynosure subscribers in Lewis county and yet this lady had trouble in finding where to send her subscription for the paper. We hope this will stimulate our subscribers to make it a point that no one in their counties shall be in doubt about the name of the paper or the place where it is published. If fathers and mothers cannot attend to it let the grown up sons and daughters take the matter in hand and see that every family in the county is invited to take the paper. In so doing you will not only elevate others but your own faculties will become keener and more valuable.

J. L. Benton, West Chazy, N. Y., writes:

(Sending $3.00 for the Cynosure and $2.00 for lectures) . . "All from Rev. Lyman Prindle . . of the W. M. Connection superanuated on account of the loss of his hearing. He says he is unfit for service now, but wishes to aid and encourage those who are in the field. Although he connot hear, he is yet a lion in the defense of the pure principles of moral reform. I should as soon think of lifting the pillars of Hercules as of moving him from his avowed convictions of duty in opposing the harlotry of the lodge."

John Fetterhoff, Chambersburg, Pa., writes:

"I am now in the seventy-seventh year of my age and have not known any permanent good results from secret organizations; but much evil. I have never heard of the conversion of a soul from sin and Satan to God by it, but thousands have been kept from attending public worship and from prayer and class-meetings and preferred to pull at the yoke with unbelievers, which is forbidden in God's Word. . . Therefore I wish that the Christian Cynosure could be found in every house and read by all, so that secrecy would end with the present generation. To this end I shall work the few remaining days I may yet have. . . . From an old itinerant."

James Kilbourn, Racine, Wis., writes:

"Your rule to stop the paper when the subscription expires is a right good one. Please find enclosed," . . etc.

We think none of our readers will differ in opinion from Mr. Kilbourn if they think the subject over.

Joshua Simpson, Spring Green, Wis., writes:

"I am doing what I can for you and the cause of reform. I am old and not able to do much, but I have set the ball rolling and I hope to send you some more subscribers when I get time to canvass a little."

Rev. Nathan Callender, Green Grove, Pa., writes:

"Don't fail to correct the date of our Wilkesbarre meeting from the 3d and 4th, to the 4th and 5th, of November next. Rev. J. L. Barlow is to be one of the speakers."

N. R. Wood, Spring Arbor, Mich., writes:

"You know that our people (Free Methodist) are a unit in regard to secret societies, yet I am fearful that few of us comprehend the deep, damnable results upon the church of Christ of the oath-bound societies that exist in our land. As one who has been called of God to war against all unrighteousness, I clearly see that Masonry is an extremely fruitful source of unrighteousness. I pray that your hands may be staid up, and your voice lifted up against this Dagon worship unil it meets with the same treatment that the above named god did, before the ark of our God."

Rev. J. P. Richards, Bowensburg, Ill., writes of the Cynosure:

"We have been agreeable companions ever since the first number of the Cynosure were published, and I propose to journey with it another year, and until the career of one or the other of us is closed, or until Freemasonry and all its band are sent where the 'Beast and the false prophet are.'"

Erich Knudson, West Liberty, Iowa, writes:

"I am about to start out on a mission of love and will try to see if I can solicit more to take it while away. . . I can let my neighbor take the papers out of the office, read and circulate while away. I feel interested in the cause."

H. Johnson, Delavan, Wis., writes:

"I cannot do without the paper. I think its object is a noble one and with God's blessing it must and I have faith that it will succeed."

Moses Pettengill, Peoria, Ill., President of the State Association, writes that he hopes to attend the State meeting in Chicago, Nov. 18th and 19th, and will endeavor to bring others with him.

Pres. S. B. Allen, Westfield, Ill., writes:

"My own going (to the State Convention) is not positively assured; but I shall make due effort."

We hope he will not be prevented; and think with "due effort" he will succeed in attending.

C. M. Livesay, Nashville, Ill., writes:

"I am determined to keep urging friends to subscribe for your paper, for I am fully convinced that it is the great lever of this movement whereby the masses are to be awakened and brought in sympathy with our cause, which among all others is the all-important one to our government at present."

Rev. H. H. Hinman, writes:

"I expect to be in Chicago on the 18th."

C. Widler, Binghampton, N. Y., writes:

"I love the paper and the cause it advocates."

Henry Kumler, Dayton, O., writes:

"I myself cannot do without the Cynosure. There is no paper which I read so thoroughly as the Cynosure. If I could I would give it influence over all men and all nations. I pray for its success."

A Thompson, Mid Prairie, Iowa, writes:

"We like it (the Cynosure) very much. May God bless your labors."

John Shuh, Larwell, Ind., writes:

"I desire very much to see the success of the anti-secrey reform. My neighborhood thinks more of secret combinations than of the church of Christ. I have often offered my Cynosure to them to read; but they care nothing about it. I would like to see and hear one of your lecturers in my neighborhood. Our school-house would be open for them and I would do the best I could for them."

Will the State lecturer see if he can answer this call?

Linns Chittenden, Crystal Lake, Ill., writes:

"The Rock River Conference has sent us another Masonic watch-dog in the person of an M. E. minister after repeated remonstrances by influential members. We expect to attend the convention to be held in Chicago on the 18th of November."

LESSON xlvi.—NOV. 15, 1874.—HYPOCRISY AND PIETY.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK xii. 38-44.

Commit 38-44; Primary verses, 43, 44.

38 And he said unto them in his doctrine, Beware of the scribes, which love to go in long clothing, and love salutations in the market places,

39 And the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts;

40 Which devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: these shall receive greater damnation.

41 And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury: and many that were rich cast in much.

42 And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing.

43 And he called unto him his disciples, and said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury.

44 For all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"—MICAH vi. 8.

TOPIC.—A report of the contributions.

TOPICAL ANALYSIS.

Long Robes and Chief Seats, verses 38-40.
Jesus Watching the Treasury, " 41, 42
Counting the Collection, verse 43.
The Golden Test, " 44.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

What is the first topic? To whom was Jesus speaking? (Luke xx. 45.) Whom had Jesus denounced just before? (Matt. xxii. 1-3.) What are the six things Jesus charged them with? (verses 38-40.) The long robes they wore in the street that they might be known. The salutations pointed them out as learned; the chief seats made them prominent; the highest rooms gave them the best places. The money of the poor fed them. They thought their prayers would hide their sins. What command is given in Ex. xxii. 22? What does God say in Isa. i. 17, 22? What did Jesus say of the punishment? (verse 40.) What is his command Matt. xxiii. 8, 9, 10? What does he also say in the next two verses?

What is the second topic? Where did Jesus sit? (verse 41.) This was in that part of the temple called "the court of the women." What was Jesus doing? (verse 41.) What are the contributions called in Luke xxi. 4? What week was this? Who would be in Jerusalem? It was the annual collection. Who came to the treasury? (verse 41.) What did they cast in? (verse 41.) Who else came? (verse 42.) How much did she throw in? (verse 42.) This was equal to two-fifths of a cent.

What is the third topic? What did Jesus do? (verse 43.) What did he say? (verse 43.) How did he know how much each had given? He must have weighed each gift, and known how much each had to give. Did he find fault with large contributions? How does Jesus say we shall measure our gifts? (Matt x. 9.) What was the apostles' rule? (2 Cor. ix. 6, 7; 1 Cor. xvi. 2.)

What is the fourth topic? How did the rich give? (verse 44.) How did the widow give? (verse 44.) How did she give more than they? Did she Lord praise her gift because it was small? Is the gift prized because we are poor, or rich, or for some other reason? Ought the widow to have given anything? Why does God expect the poor to give? Do you give? Do your gifts cost you anything?

LESSONS. Jesus condems hypocrisy; he desires no form of prayer if the heart be wanting. Jesus watches the Treasury. He sees the rich and the poor. We must give as under his eye. Jesus weighs our gifts. By the motives of our hearts, and our ability. The rich must give largely; the poor must give mites.—National Sunday-School Teacher.

Vanity is a lie, but pride is more than merely that; it is not only a false pretense, but is also an unjust claim upon others. The person not only pretends to be more or better than he is, but seems to demand that others shall treat him with more consideration than belongs to him. It is born of inordinate selfishness and dishonesty. Love, if it existed in the heart, would cast it out. It is a singular fact that the more conscious within himself a person becomes of having lost integrity of character, and so the claims to others' esteem, so much the more becomes the ill sensitiveness and insanity of his pride. He can enjoy no contented sense of self-respect, unless he is "put forward"—unless he can see others below him! Of course, this is an utterly selfish and unloving spirit. But it is just like those who "say and do not."

—Illustrated Bible Studies.

SCRIBES, PHARISEES—HYPOCRITES.—So far as they represented a legitimate external authority he bade his hearers to respect them, but he warned them not to imitate their falsity, their opposition, their ostentation, their love of prominence, their fondness for titles, their insinuating avarice, their self-exalting pride. He bade them beware of the broadened phylacteries and exaggerated tassles of the long robes that covered the murderous hearts, and the long prayers that diverted attention from the covetous designs. And then, solemnly and terribly, he uttered his eightfold "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites," scathing them in utterance after utterance with a flame which at once revealed and scorched. Woe unto them, for the ignorant erudition which closed the gates of heaven, and the injurious jealousy which would suffer no others to enter in! Woe unto them for their oppressive hypocrisy and greedy cant! Woe for the proselytizing fanaticism which did but produce a more perilous corruption! Woe for the blind, hair-splitting folly which so confused the sanctity of oaths as to tempt their followers into gross profanity! Woe for the petty, paltry sham-scrupulosity which paid tithes of potherbs, and thought nothing of justice, mercy, and faith—which strained out animalculæ from the goblet, and swallowed camels into the heart! Woe for the external cleanliness of cup and platter contrasted with the gluttony and drunkenness to which they ministered! Woe to the tombs that stimulated the sancity of temples—to the glistening outward plaster of hypocrisy which did but render more ghastly by contrast the reeking pollutions of the sepulcher within! Woe for the mock repentance which condemned their fathers for the murderous spirit of those fathers—nay, filled up and exceeded the measure of their guilt by a yet deadlier and more dreadful sacrifice! Aye, on that generation would come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zacharias, whom they slew between the porch and the altar. The purple cloud of retribution had long been gathering its elements of fury; upon their heads should it burst in flame!—Farrar.

Political Masonry.

[From the Anti-masonic Review, 1831.]

Anti-masonry is said to be political: O, horrible. It is confidently affirmed that freemen refuse to vote at the polls for Freemasons! Citizens of this Republic are supposed to reject from their ballots the names of any candidates they please, even of lodge-men and bond-masons; and this, too, without asking leave of their rulers. What are we coming to! We shall soon hear that travelers ride as they please, in the Union line, or in the Citizen's Line, without advice of a lawyer; and that men renounce and forsake the use of ardent spirits without consulting the college of physicians.

Political Freemasonry is well enough, because that is a secret, and the shame of the thing is covered; but, with politics written upon its front, Anti-masonry has no blush. Freemasonry ought to be political, for it is often sworn to be; and no man could trust it, if it fails to keep its own solemn covenants. Shall it bind men with an oath under penalty of a horrid death, to vote for a brother Mason who is a candidate at the elections before all others of equal qualifications, and yet neglect that duty? Shall the thousand Masons in office have all the benefit of this obligation, and of their offices, and their brethren of the very next year be forsaken? This would be faithlessness in the extreme. Members of the fraternity have large debts of gratitude to pay one another yet, and to discharge these debts like honorable men, they must freely use the ballot-box, appoint to subaltern offices the men who have elected them, and reward each other out of the public chest, steadily preferring one another, as they are bound to do. Freemasonry, is compelled to be political, by the obligation of an oath, and a just sense of gratitude for many unmerited favors received, but as this is a secret, no citizen is hurt by it. The revenue collected from the customs supports government, and the people do not feel the burden; the offices gathered by Freemasons at the polls, and by fraternal appointment, support gigantic Freemasonry, and the people are not any poorer for it. They must support somebody for office, and the Masons, when well treated, cost no more than other men. But political Anti-masonry is without excuse. It has no secrecy to cover it, no oath to justify it, no debts of gratitude to settle by it. It comes like a direct tax upon luxuries, and all those who keep Masonic jewels and medals and treasures, are made to pay for them without mercy. Political Freemasonry has quietly chosen a secret place, and diligently builded her nest, and lined it with softest down; and now comes cruel Anti-masonry directly aiming to tumble out the open-mouthed young, and to break up the sweet nest. Oh! what a monster!

For the destruction of Freemasonry, popes have issued their bulls; the associate Synod of Scotland have denounced it, the Methodist Episcopal Conference of New-England have proscribed it, associations and consociations of independent churches have excommunicated it, and many private churches have expelled it; but this does not touch the life of Freemasonry; it hardly shows signs of pain under these various blows. But take from the order its political privileges, and, in this country, it is dead of a consumption. Strip it of one cloak of secrecy, and it will draw another on; bring its members to forsake it, and it will decoy others in; but rob it of its political ascendency, and you rob it of life. Its charity famishes, its magnificence shivers, its pride falls, and its glory fades forever.

The oath, the interest, and the habit of Freemasonry require it to be political, and the life and prosperity of the order depend entirely upon its electioneering power and consequence. And where is the harm, fellow-citizens, of openly meeting at the polls, that which secretly comes there? Does not every man know that eminent statesmen can have nothing to do with Freemasonry, except as an engine of political power? Where is the sin of using our liberty to preserve our civil rights, and our equal privileges? We may not speak against Freemasonry in mixed company, for then we wound some one of our friends. We may not bring it before the church, for then our Lord's body is pained and broken. We may not discuss its character in the usual newspapers of the day, for the fraternity are strong enough to forbid it. And what shall we do, if we may not quietly vote against it at the polls?

What other course have we left? We issue pamphlets, but they are belied by Freemasonry, and soon forgotten. We publish volumes, but they are left with Barruel and Robison and Payson, to moulder in the dust, while the order flourish their trumpets and aprons in every street. We publish newspapers: and those newspapers live or die according as the communitv in which they are published, make this opposition to Freemasonry political, or not. One year ago the people of Washington and Oneida counties, New York, scarcely took a political part in the controversy with Freemasonry; and only a scattering Anti-masonic paper could find its way among them. They have since taken up the subject politically, and now they sustain each a paper of more than one thousand two hundred subscribers. On the other hand, in the great city of New York, where we hope there are five thousand votes agains Freemasonry; Anti-masonry has lost a newspaper, after it had run many months, because no statesman here dare look the mystery in the face at the polls. Our leading men have feared that Anti-masonry would not bear them up, and have taken no more interest, than to wish the cause well, and to commend the labor of its advocates. But let the question come, as it must come here, in the ballot-box, and you shall see that not one new paper, only, but many of those now issued in the city of New York, will lift the veil of ignorance from the mind of our citizens, and tell plainly what Freemasonry has done and is doing to corrupt mankind, and to destroy our liberties.

Pennsylvania affords a case in point. Anti-masonry was only heard in that State from a few points of the public press, until recently. Now the cry of Ritner and the people against Wolf and the Mason is rung from mountain to river, and from the tides of the Delaware to the canals of Pittsburg and Erie. The mighty difference lies in Pennsylvania's having on the 25th of June last, taken up the question politically.

—The women of India don't seem to think life—their sort of life—worth much, and often not worth the having. The Bengal returns show that last year 1,112 women committed suicide. This is partly ascribed to the fact that there are women to be found in all parts of the country, who saved their lives during the famine at the expense of their casts, by taking food at the relief centers. These unhappy creatures are kept now by one man and now by another, and when all else fails, they commit suicide. Many young widows, also, who are not allowed to remarry, have resource to the same means of putting an end to their cheerless life. The insufficiency of the motive in any case shows how readily the natives are to commit suicide. As are the mothers, so are the children. No less than twenty-three suicides of children (!) are announced officially in Bengal.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, 28TH ANNIVERSARY—PRES. MAGOUN'S DISCOURSE—ANNUAL INCOME—DEBT—NEW SECRETARY FOR CHICAGO—NEW PRESIDENT—ACTION ON SECRET SOCIETIES, DR. QUINT, ETC.

CLINTON, Ia., Oct. 30, 1874.

This truly American organization met here in the beautiful city of Clinton day before yesterday. President Magoun, of Iowa College, preached a keen dialectic sermon on the Unity of the human race, and their title to the earth as a dwelling-place in which "to seek God," as the logical ground of missions. Secretaries Whipple and Strieby are present and read the annual reports.

The Association has received from all sources $325,558.26 during the past year. It has seven chartered colleges; seventeen high schools; 273 missionaries and 10,490 pupils under its care in the Southern States and among the Chinese and Judians. Owing to the fact that many local associations hold their meetings at the same time with this, the attendance was not large. But the proceedings were interesting and the reports exceedingly able. These annual reports contain a vast amount of current history, and ministers could not do better than to encourage the reading of these in the social meetings of their churches.

Dr. Kirk, President of the Society, being dead, ex-Senator and ex-Governor Buckingham, of Connecticut, was chosen to fill his place. Rev. James Powell was chosen Secretary for Chicago. He is represented as thoroughly devoted to the Association and its work, and well adapted to it. We cannot learn that Rev. Mr. Powell ever joined a lodge of Masons. The contrary is presumed. If he is an adhering member of the lodge, the Western churches will not support him. If not, and he is what he is represented to be, he will find a warm welcome and an important field in Chicago and States adjacent to the lakes.

By the way, I have learned again that Dr. A. H. Quint seeks to impose on leading friends of this National Association as he did on the people of Oberlin. He tells them that 'though he is a Mason, he knows of none of his young men who have joined the lodge,' and, by hints and innuendoes, leads men like Dr. Roy to believe that, while he adheres to the lodge, holds high Masonic offices, and the like, he exerts his personal influence to keep the young men of his church from joining a lodge of which he is or lately was "Grand Chaplain." If so, he acts falsely to his lodge or his church, and, in either case, must be a deceiver and hypocrite.

It is to be regretted that the American Missionary Association is in debt some ($80,000) eighty thousand dollars. This debt ought to be, and must be paid. It is liberal, unsectarian in spirit, and the most truly American of all the large bodies. No other National body has spoken clearly and calmly, as has this great Association against the secret orders which are cursing the churches and undermining the religion of this country and the world. Several years since, at Mt. Vernon, Ohio, this Association passed resolutions advising the members of its freedmen's churches not to join the secret orders. To-day, it unanimously, or nearly so,—

"Resolved. That we renew that advice with special reference to the secret college fraternities, and hope that all our institutions of learning will carefully exclude these "brotherhoods" as hostile to the best interests of learning and religion."

Meantime I have three letters one from a teacher, another from a minister and editor; and another from a college professor in the South, from which the following are extracts: "The relation of secretism to the white churches in the villages is very nearly that of a master to his slave." "My observation is that the lodge dictates to the pulpit in all the village churches of the South."

Another writes: "The American Missionary Association passed a resolution at Mt. Vernon, O., advising members of colored churches not to join secret societies. That resolution was repeated at Chatanooga, Tenn., at the first meeting of the Congregational ministers there." "Congregationalism holds an enviable position in this respect in the South." Again he says, "A Freemason can steal, lie, get drunk, shoot, stab, swear, and almost anything else and escape the law. Nay more; be a member in good standing in the churches." "The natural outgrowth of such things are still baser parasites of the State, such as 'Ku-Klux' and 'White Leagues,' which last I suppose to be the old Ku-Klux snake with a new skin."

As such important papers as the New York Times, and others of like stamp, are becoming more and more outspoken and pronounced in their condemnation of the secret orders as anti-American and fundamentally mischievous, if the American Missionary Association would recognize and accept (as we trust it may) the actual antagonism between lodge-worship and Christianity, it might diminish its receipts for a time; but it would lead the van in the moving host of God, and become the patroness of American principles and glory of the American name. Meantime, as it stands right on the record now, let us rally to its banner and sustain it by all means in our power. I consider the action of this Association a glorious sign of the times.

The people of Clinton have done themselves and city honor in their handsome entertainment of this body. My host, Hon, C. S. Taylor and his amiable wife amongst the chief. J. B.

—Some of our subscribers may not be aware of the fact that their subscriptions expire in November. How to find out and meet such an emergency is the question.

—Rev. A. Crooks of the Wesleyan, whose severe sickness was noticed lately, we rejoice to say is recovering, and is now probably at his home at Syracuse.

NEXT MEETINGS.

In every meeting of the Anti-masonic organizations we think it of great importance before adjourning, to fix the time and place of the next meeting. The Chicago ladies are already thinking about entertaining the delegates of the A. B. C. F. M. which will meet here almost a year hence, simply because the time and place were fixed upon before their convention at Rutland, Vt., adjourned. Think about the question before the meeting begins; settle it (leaving room to change for good reasons) before the meeting closes. The Du Page County Society will soon meet; where and when will it hold its next convention? The Pennsylvania friends have set a good example in this matter and we doubt not before the Wilkesbarre convention adjourns the time and place for the next meeting will be fixed. The Illinois State Convention meets in Chicago, November 18th and 19th; when and where shall it meet next? Some propose coming back to Chicago while the Exposition is open next year, as railroad fares may be less. Others want a more central location. Besides, the city is very full of visitors at such times, and it may be difficult to find hospitality for delegates. Let the delegates who come to this meeting consider the question before leaving home and come prepared to give an opinion. So let those who attend the National Convention next spring think the matter over. The great Centennial exhibition in Philadelphia opens in April, 1876, and continues to the next October. Shall the National Convention go to Philadelphia and there hold its next council?

Railroads will doubtless reduce their fares and people will have two reasons instead of one for attending the meeting. We have mentioned only a few of the meetings Anti-masonic gatherings which will be held this fall and winter; but at all of them, if it is among the things possible, before adjournment agree on the time and place for the next meeting.

The Union League is to hold a national council in Cincinnati on the fifteenth of January next. The leaders in the movement wish to establish Union Leagues in the South through which to oppose the White Leagues and Ku-Klux. They also propose organizing and reorganizing these leagues all through the North.

We hope this will make the readers of this paper and all who follow Him who in secret said nothing, press the canvass for the Cynosure. Press the cause of anti-secrecy, that the people may not be freshly swindled out of their money and their honesty (which naturally seeks the light) by this, another organization. Press the work of organizing open societies which will oppose all evil in church and state, and make the social meetings of your churches such organizations. They certainly should be pure and zealous in every good word and work. "Eternal vigilance." "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation."

NOTES.

—Always read the Publisher's Department on the 16th page. It always contains information, hints, etc. of value to all our readers.

—An ex-granger gives an array of figures that will astonish economical farmers. Taking the basis of 12,000 granges given at the St. Louis meeting last February by the Grand Master, he proceeds: "Estimating 50 members to each grange, we have 600,000 grangers. About one-half of this number (300,000) joined as charter-members; about three-fourths, 225,000 (men), $3.00 each, $675,000, the other one-fourth, 75,000 (women), at 50 cents each, $37,400. The other 300,000 members, joining after the grange is organized, must pay higher rates, notwithstanding the motto, 'Equal rights to all, special privileges to none;' so that we have 225,000 men, at $5,00 each, $1,125,000; 75,000 women, at $2.00 each, $150,000. The next item is monthly dues, 10 cents per month, or $1.25 for one year for each granger; for 600,000 grangers, $720,000. Total, $2,707,500."

—Next week we shall begin a series of articles on "Christmas" to continue several weeks. The first number will be from an old and experienced minister of Georgia, connected with the Methodist Episcopal church, to be followed with others gathered from religious journals or original. This topic is one of vast importance to Christian churches as it reaches the home training and religious instruction of the children.

—The "Warwick of American politics," Thurlow Weed, is yet engaged in writing out the reminisences of his life. He is now past his 77th year and this will be among the last labors of life. It will be of peculiar interest to Anti-masons from Mr. Weed's connection with the early reform. He was one of the editors of the "Rochester Anti-masonic Enquirer," and was twice elected to the New York State Assembly on the anti-lodge issue.

—The Long Branch (N. J.) News gleans from the report of the Secretary of the Good Templar Grand Lodge of that State the fact that 21 lodges have been instituted during the past year; thirteen lodges have surrendered their charters, and seventeen forfeited their charters. Last session there were one hundred and fifty-one lodges, and now only one hundred and forty-four are reported, showing a decrease of seven lodges. The reports of the Secretary and Treasurer shows the Grand Lodge to be over $1,900 in debt. This is bad for the lodge, but it does not hurt the temperance cause a whit.

—As our readers know the late rationalistic declaration of the Christian Union are not the first. In July of last year the Interior published the following: The Christian Union in a recent editorial told its readers that Paul's inspiration differed in degree, but not in kind from that of any Christian; that the New Testament is not a final revelation; that to turn back to Paul's epistles for directions in reference to present questions, is wrong. In a word, it avowed distinctly the doctrine that the Bible is not God's Word, not the rule of faith and practice. But the Christian Union, under the prestige of Henry Ward Beecher's name goes into thousands of Christian families, and parents who would not let their children sleep in an ill-ventilated room, are bribed by the offer of a cheap chromo into the purchase of a paper which is doing its best to destroy confidence in the Word of God.

—The month of October was a marked one with western lodges. On every side bodies calling themselves "grand" were parading the streets to attract public notice, and then shutting themselves in their halls to transact business hidden from general knowledge. The Grand Lodge of Illinois Masons met in this city about the middle of the month. A few days later the Grand Commandery of Odd-fellows was here. On the 21st, the Grand Royal Arch Chapter met in Indianapolis, reporting funds raised during the year, $197,830; one new chapter at Elkhart, ninety chapters in the State with 4,650 members; new members raised, 932. A long discussion ended with the decision that a maimed man cannot be made a Mason. Same day and place the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters met. Same day the Ohio Grand Lodge of Masons was holding in Columbus. Same day the Odd-fellow Grand Lodge of Nebraska met at Lincoln with 100 members. This body visited the penitentiary. Whether with intent to exchange grips and signs of distress is not stated. The Grand Encampment met at the same time and place. The Iowa Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows met on the same day at Des Moines. Same day O. F. Grand Lodge of Arkansas at Little Rock. Same day the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Indiana was in session at Indianapolis, and the Great Council of Improved Order of Red Men closed at Bourbon, Ind., October 23d, the Grand Commandery of Iowa met at Dubuque. The installation of officers was held in public in the Methodist Episcopal church. On the 22d the State Grange of Missouri met at Kansas City and re-elected T. R. Allen Grand Master.

THANKSGIVING DAY.—President Grant has issued the following proclamation:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA: A PROCLAMATION.

We are reminded by the changing seasons that it is time to pause in our daily vocations, and offer thanks to Almighty God for the mercies and abundance of the year which is drawing to a close. The blessings of free government continue to be vouchsafed to us; the earth has responded to the labor of the husbandman; the land has been free from pestilence; internal order is being maintained, and peace with other powers has prevailed. It is fitting that at stated periods we should cease from our accustomed pursuits and from the turmoil of our daily lives, and unite in thankfulness for the blessings of the past and in the cultivation of kindly feelings towards each other; therefore, recognizing these considerations, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do recommend all citizens to assemble in their respective places of worship on Thursday the twenty-sixth day of November next, and express their thanks for the mercy and favor of the Almighty God, and laying aside all political contentions, and all secular occupations to observe such a day as a day of rest, thanksgiving and praise. In witness whereof I have herewith set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington this, the twenty-seventh day of October, in the year 1874, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-eighth.

U. S. GRANT.

A Mason's Hint on the Age of the Order.

[From the Masonic Jewel.]

BRO. WHEELER—Long before I saw Findel's history, or heard of the names of Hughan, Buchan and Lyon, I became satisfied that our degrees originated after 1717, and strongly hinted my belief in 1866-7 in the Masonic Monthly, Boston, and in the National Freeman, and in the Masonic Eclectic, in New York. These facts I derived from Oliver's works. Dr. Oliver was an inveterate Masonic writer, and more properly, he was a writer of fiction with a little of Masonry mixed up with it; and although he tried hard to make us believe that Masonry was a kind of supplemental revelation to Christianity, and that the Saints John ought to be restored to the English ritual, yet he appears either to have been a little too conscientious to ignore all the facts that came under his observation, or he was naturally too garrulous to keep to himself all he knew. Any how, he made many admissions, and now and then boldly divulged some facts, so as to induce me to study his works carefully. Among other books, I read his "Origin of the Royal Arch," showing that that degree was manufactured by Chevalier Ramsay, in 1739; that he first offered it to the Grand Lodge of England, who treated it with contempt; that subsequently he disposed of it to the Ancients, and Dermott then boasted that his Masonry possessed "the fourth, last, and highest degree." Such being the case, then, Templarism, Scotch Riteism, and what not, must have been manufactured after 1739. The next question occurred to my mind, If all these degrees could be imposed upon a credulous community, why may not the first three degrees be also new? This induced me to collect some of Oliver's admissions, which gave me a key to the origin of our ritual, and which I have since then pursued, and am now satisfied that I can confirm all the admissions of Dr. Oliver, and can also point out many facts which Oliver did not make known.

About four years ago a Rev. P. G. M. of Illinois was pleased to enlighten his Grand Lodge with a lecture on the antiquity and Christianity of Freemasonry, which was designed to throw all the credulous into ecstacies of joy. Of course the reverend brother proved everything from the ritual and trestle-board, and all of which, in his estimation, came down to us from the time of the Lord knows when. This famous address I reviewed in the Mystic Star, and shall here transcribe a portion given in the form of a dialogue between Oliver and N. The answers of Dr. Oliver are verbatim extracts from his "Mirror of a Johannite Mason" and his "Symbol of Glory," and each answer will be accompanied with the title and page of the book.

N.—They say that ever since the time of the apostles, Masonic lodges were dedicated to the Saints John. Now tell me, my dear Dr. Oliver, is it really so?

O.—Whether the names of the Saints John were used at all times, from the beginning of the Christian era, I will not venture positively to assert. (Mirror of a Johannite Mason, p. 47.)

N.—Have you ever found the names of the Saints John mentioned in any of the old Masonic records?

O.—No indications of it are found either in the MSS. of the British Museum, in the ancient paper purporting to be the hand-writing of Henry VI, or any other document that has come under our notice. (Ibid, 75.)

N.—At what period were the Saints John first introduced into our lectures, and how?

O.—The earlier lectures that were used under the sanction of our Grand Lodge. The Saints John were alluded to in the following manner: Q. From whence came you? A. From the Lodge of the Holy Saints John. (Ibid, 26.) . . .

N.—Can you tell us when those lectures were introduced?

O.—They were arranged in a catechetical form by Desagulier and Anderson as early as 1720, and this form was adopted because it was considered to be more useful in assisting the memory. (Ibid, 57.)

N.—How many times since 1720 have the lectures been altered in England?

O.—Between 1717 and 1817 we had six different arrangements of the lectures. (Ibid, 103.) In 1732 Martin Clare revised the lectures, and made the addition of a few moral references and admonitions from the Old and New Testament, a simple allusion to the senses, and the theological ladder with stairs and rounds innumerable. (Ibid, 58.)

N.—Pray tell us what improvements did Dunckerley make in the work?

O.—I am persuaded that Dunckerley's lectures were identical with those of Martin Clare. In this ritual the Saints John were introduced into the style of the O. B. (Johannite Mason, 27.) He also introduced many types of Christ, and endued the ladder with three principle steps (Symbol of Glory, 59), and explained the blazing star to represent the star which guided the wise men in the East. (Ibid, 18.)

N.—Besides improving the "ladder," the "blazing star," and the introduction of the Saints John into the O. B., did not the same Dunckerley manufacture also the symbol of "the parallel lines?"

O.—The original hint at a circle and parallel lines has been ascribed to him. (Ibid, 59.)

N.—Dr. Oliver, you are rather too evasive on the subject. Tell me, plainly, what you know about it, without equivocation.

O.—I am inclined to think it was inserted by Bro. Dunckerley as a finish to the symbolism of the Masonic ladder. Martin Clare had the circle and point, but not the perpendicular parallel lines, which were a subsequent addition. (Ibid, 136.)

I hope that the above quotations will suffice to convince my readers that the lectures, etc., first came into vogue after 1717, and by successive tinkering it has been enlarged to its present dimensions. There is really nothing ancient about it, and it is therefore time to stop our noodles from canting Bro. Lyon demonstrates that previous to 1723, or thereabouts, the third degree, or Masonic degrees, were unknown to the Masons in Scotland, and goes on to say: "The late Dr. Oliver says: 'The name of the individual who attached the aporhism of H. A. B. to Freemasonry has never been clearly ascertained; although it may be fairly presumed that brothers Desagulier and Anderson were prominent parties to it, as the legend was evidently borrowed from certain idle tales taken out of the Jewish Targums which were published in London A. D. 1715, from a MS. in the University library at Cambridge; and these two brothers were publicly accused by their seceding contemporaries of manufacturing the degree, which they never denied. . . . The legend of the third degree was about ancient landmarks. And now I will give you a quotation from Dr. Oliver's "Freemason's Treasury." It is the last book he published. We have not got a copy of it in Boston, and even Bro. Leon Hyneman, an inveterate Masonic book collector, assured me that he had never met with the book. Bro. Macoy, however, showed me the book at New York, but I copy this from Bro. David Murray Lyon's "History of the Edenburg Lodge, Mary's Chapel, No. 1," pages 213 and 214. intended by its fabricators to be nothing more than an allegory; although, when given as a naked and unexplained fact, and recited with all the solemniny of truth, ninety-nine out of every hundred candidates believe it implicitly.'"

I think I have furnished sufficient to justify my assertion that our ceremonies and degrees are new. And I can also prove that all the stuff from Mackey & Co. about Austin the monk, the York assembly of 926, the story of fifty or more pre-1717 Grand Masters, and what not, is all bosh. But more. I have demonstrated through the Freemason (London), that not only the Masonic story of St. Alban is untrue, but the whole story of martyrdom of St. Alban is totally unfounded. Such personage never lived or died in England or elsewhere. And I have also proved that the cock and bull story of the Evangelist becoming Grand Master when upwards of ninety years of age, was unknown before the beginning of this century. This demonstration was published both in the New York Dispatch and in London, and I fearlessly challenge your Mackeys, Piersons and other luminaries to disprove my conclusions. The fact is, a number of canting bigots have at different times palmed off Christian legends and Christian symbols on the Masonic fraternity, and a pack of know-nothings, combined with unprincipled zealots, now pretend that they are ancient land marks. In England, where all these facts were known, the honest brethren, with the Rev. Dr. Hemming at their head, discarded all that rubbish from the ritual in 1813. But here, it seems, we have no such fearless clergymen in the fraternity. . . . —JACOB FORTON.

The Home Circle.

Life or Death.

Doth Life survive the touch of Death?
Death's hand alone the secret holds,
Which, as to each one he unfolds,
We press to know with bated breath.

A whisper there, a whisper here,
Confirms the hope to which we cling;
But still we grasp at anything,
And sometimes hope and sometimes fear.

Some whisper that the dead we knew
Hover aronnd us while we pray,
Anxious to speak. We cannot say:
We only wish it to be true.

I know a stoic who has thought,
As healthy blood flows thorough his veins,
And joy his present life sustains,
And all this good has come unsought,

For more he cannot rightly pray;
Life may extend, or life may cease;
He bides the issue, sure of peace,
Sure of the best in God's own way.

Perfection waits the race of man;
If, working out this great design,
God cuts us off, we must resign
To be the refuse of his plan.

But I, for one, feel no such peace;
I dare to think I have in me
That which had better never be,
If lost before it can increase.

And, oh! the ruined piles of mind,
Daily discovered everywhere.
Built but to crumble in despair?—
I dare not think Him so unkind.

The rudest workman would not fling
The fragments of his work away
If ev'ry useless bit of clay
He trod on were a sentient thing,

And does the Wisest Worker take
Quick human hearts instead of stone,
And hew and carve them one by one,
Nor heed the pangs with which they break?

And more: if but creation's waste,
Would He have given us sense to yearn
For the perfection none can earn,
And hope the fuller life to taste?

I think, if we must cease to be.
It is a cruelty refined
To make the instincts of our mind
Stretch out towards eternity.

Wherefore I welcome Nature's cry,
As earnest of a life again,
Where thought shall never be in vain,
And doubt before the light shall fly.

Overcoming Evil.

"Overcoming evil with evil." Oh what a motto is this for a young man who has been religiously brought up somewhere in the country, and who, on coming to London to begin the business of life, enters one of those vast establishments which are to be found not a hundred yards from this cathedral. He finds himself necessarily—it is an inevitable condition of our society, it cannot be set down to the fault of any individual or class of individuals, now—he finds himself in an atmosphere of strangely intermingled elements, but it is upon the whole very unlike that which he left at home. He is invited, as the phrase runs, to see life; he is rated gently or coarsely on the score of his country prejudices. He is told that those who really know what is to be said about these things think very cheaply indeed about the church and the Bible, and laugh at the notion that prayer has any sort of power with God. And at first he shrinks back at hearing these things with an instinctive distress. But in time his ear becomes accustomed to them; and then he becomes more or less intimate with a particular section of his associates, and he is pressed more and more earnestly to be, as they term it, a man, and to break with the prejudices of his boyhood—to do as he likes, that is to probably to blaspheme the person and the work of his Redeemer. Ah, it is hard to resist, for he has been going down the hill for some time past, the course of his descent has already given him an onward impetus; it is a struggle for life. But there is one ready to hear him, ready to aid him, if he will only seek for aid, in the heavy task of overcoming the evil within himself first, and then the evil in society around him "with good." Simple decisions—will carry the day. Evil may talk loudly, it may bluster, but at heart it is alway a coward, and it skulks away at the show of a strong resistance. It may be hard work—that it is at first—but in the end purity, straightforwardness, charity, and love will win the battle. Opposition will die gradually into silence, silence into respect, and respect into sympathy if not into imitation. "Thou art more glorious and excellent than the mountains of prey." "At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a dead sleep"—"at thy rebuke," in the mouth of the weakest of thy servants.

"Overcome evil with evil." What a precept this to be taken to heart by any one of us who lives with a person of irritable temper—a husband, a wife, a parent. Hours, days, weeks, months, years pass by, and there is no change in them, but one continuous friction—nothing but a persevering bickering which fixes on any and every circumstance and keeps up a sense of uninterrupted, almost regulated, soreness. This is not uncommon. Many Christians who keep great passions under restraint seem to compensate themselves by indulging in all kinds of faults of temper; and thus they become a very great trial indeed to those who live with them. These last may exclaim with the Psalmist, "Woe is me that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar. My soul hath long dwelt with them that are enemies unto peace. I labor for peace, but when I speak to them thereof, they make them ready for battle."

Ah, there is something better than that exclamation. It is, overcome these minor forms of domestic evil with good. It is to conquer this irritability by an unfailing Christlike sweetness. Difficult, this, no doubt, brethren, for such as you or I—impossible to nature, but possible enough, thank God, through his wonder-working grace.—Liddon.

Hebron.

The day was far spent as we approached the home of the patriarchs. The sun was fast sinking into the blue waters of the Mediterranean, and the hills around Hebron were casting their lengthened shadows over the vineyards of Eshcol. For some distance before entering the city, we were in the midst of extensive and beautiful vineyards, which cover the country in every direction. The ground being very stony, material for fences is abundant. Hence, we had stone walls, five or six feet high, on each side of the road.

The arrival of our party at Hebron attracted a large crowd. Until recently, this has been the most fanatical place in Palestine. Almost every visitor was formerly insulted, and, in some cases, maltreated. Hence, the advent of strangers causes some considerable excitement, and they are closely watched. As there is no hotel in this city, we sat on our horses at the public entrance, and waited until our dragoman found private entertainment. He was acquainted in Hebron, and, therefore, had no difficulty in obtaining lodging. We dismounted from our tired horses, and led them single file along the narrow, gloomy, filthy streets; and, after a circuitous journey over stony pavements, reached our destination, at the house of a Polish Jew. Our small company crowded the dwelling, but the family kindly vacated their rooms for us. We had brought our provisison with us; but being fatigued, we desired some strong coffee. The dragoman offered the host any amount of backshish for the invigorating article, but it was Friday night, and the Jewish Sabbath had begun. No fire could be kindled, and we were compelled to take a cold lunch, and reflect upon the rigor of Jewish law.

The room we occupied was in the second story; the ceiling was arched, and on the sides of the apartment was a raised platform, which served us as a couch. Before retiring to rest, though weary, I went up on the house-top, to meditate and recall the prominent events in the history of this city, perhaps the oldest in the world. Hebron comes from Kirjath-Arba (city of Arba,) from Arba, who was father of Anak, and progenitor of the giants called Anakims. At a later period it received the name of Mamre, in honor of Mamre, the Amorite, and the friend and ally of Abraham. It now bears the Arabic name of El Khulel, "The Friend of God," evidently referring to the "Father of the Faithful." After his separation from Lot, Abraham came to Hebron and built an altar unto the Lord. Here he received the intelligence of the capture of his nephew, and from this place went forth with his servants as far as Dan, and retook his relative. It was in this same vale that he sat at his tent door, when the three heavenly messengers came to him with the startling news, and from yonder hill, east of the city, on that memorable morning, he saw the ascending smoke from the destroyed cities of the plain. Here is the scene of the sad story of Hagar and Ishmael, and, in later years, of the birth of Isaac. Here Sarah died and was buried, and, in the course of time, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Leah, and Rebecca were laid by her side.

Hebron is beautifully situated in the Vally of Eshcol, extending north and south, and spreading out over the neighboring hills. It has no walls, but there are gates at the chief entrances, which are closed at night. A Turkish garrison is maintained here, as well as in all the other prominent towns of Palestine. Among the curiosities of the place are two large pools, or reservoirs of water, evidently of great antiquity. In the southern part of the city is the pool of David, a square tank very firmly built with large hewn stones. The sides are each one hundred and thirty feet, and its depth fifty feet. It affords an abundant supply of water, a large stream constantly flowing into it. This is supposed to be the pool over which David hung the murderers of Ishboshesh. In the northern section of the city, there is another reservoir, eighty-five feet long, fifty-five broad, and eighteen deep.

But the great point of interest to the Christian is the cave of Machpelah. The field containing the cave is located on the higher slope of the eastern hill, and is now enclosed by a massive stone wall fifty feet high, two hundred long, and one hundred and fifty wide. Within this inclosure stands a mosque, once a Byzantine church; beneath it is the cave of Machpelah, containing the patriachal dead. Our dragoman being acquainted with the Arab sheik who frequently conducts tourists across the desert to Mount Sinai, was fortunate enough to have him go with us to Abraham's tomb. Until the year 1862, no Christian or Jew could enter the sacred inclosure, but the Prince of Wales and his distinguished party, having obtained permission from the Sultan, visited every part of it. It is said that the poor, ignorant Moslems, though compelled to submit, manifested their disapproval by groans and tears. This innovation has prepared the way for the removal of all restraint; and soon, by the payment of a small fee, any one will be permitted to enter.—Ladies' Repository.

Jonah's Voyage.

Rev. J. S. Swan, has frequently made very telling use of poor Jonah, the errant prophet. In Mr. Swan's "Life and Labors," just published under the editorship of Rev. F. Denison, Dr. Neale, of Boston, communicates the following, as he had it from the late Dr. Ide, of Springfield, who was present on the occasion. Said Dr. Ide: "Elder Swan was holding forth in his grandest strain, on the duty of obeying God. Said the Elder: 'We must follow close in the line of the Spirit, and never seek our own ease, when the Lord has work for us to do. There was Jonah, a Baptist preacher; God told him to go to Nineveh and hold a protracted meeting; but, like some other ministers, Jonah doubted whether there could be a revival in the summer time; and so my gentleman goes off on a voyage to Europe. But he did not get off as easily as he expected. A terrible storm arose, and threatened to send the recreant prophet and all on board to the bottom of the deep. The sailors, heathen as they were, held a prayer-meeting. Jonah ought to have improved the opportunity, and talked to them about God of heaven. But no; he was taking his ease, fast asleep, down in the side of the ship. And then what a rebuke they gave him: 'Arise, and call upon thy God, that we perish not.' At the suggestion of the shipmaster, the men cast lots to find out whose deity was offended; and the lot fell upon Jonah. The poor fellow then came to himself and made a full confession, and felt that it was right that he should be thrown overboard. The seamen were unwilling to do it; but as the storm continued, they threw him into the sea. The Lord, however, had an eye on him. He had some work for him to do yet. He prepared a great fish—whale or shark, or something of that kind—which, following in the track of the ship, seized Jonah and swallowed him down alive. But, I tell you the shark got mistaken that time; he had got a load on his stomach such as he never had before. A back-slider is nauseous anywhere—sickening to both man and beast. The great fish splashed, foamed and pitched up and down, here and there, and everywhere, to get rid of his burden. At length, growing more and more sick, as well he might, he made for the shore, and he vomited the nauseous dose out of his mouth. Jonah, finding himself on the dry land once more, was ready to streak it for Nineveh, and he held a protracted meeting there, and in the summer time too."

The above, Mr. Ide said, was delivered with such imperturbable gravity, that the people listened to it in perfect seriousness. "Indeed," he said, "I did not think of laughing myself, till I got out of doors; but I have since scarcely been able, day or night, to get that image out of my mind—Jonah streaking it for Nineveh.—Bap. Weekly.

Where the Revival Begins.

"The revival must begin in the prayer-meeting."

No, sir, You are mistaken. It must begin far back of that. The prayer-meeting is a meeting for prayer. It is a vain thing, except as it is a meeting for praying men and women. The revival must begin in their hearts and lives.

Our prayer-meeting suffers a drought. Few attend it. All its verdure is turned to a sere and yellow leaf. And we appeal to the idle church. Go to work, we cry, and fill up the prayer-meeting. For when the church is active the prayer-meeting is full. Ay! ay! But it is the full prayer-meeting that makes the working church; not the working church that makes the full prayer-meeting. The mill depends on the pond, not the pond on the mill.

Then the drought-dried Christians come to the drought-dried prayer-meeting. The revival begins at the prayer-meeting; they cry, "O prayer-meeting, fill us up." But if the prayer-meeting could reply, it would say, "Nay, foolish Christians, you must feed me. I cannot feed you. Look up to heaven above. Get straight from God the rain of grace that will make your heart to overflow with grace and love, and in the prayer-meeting there will be no lack of prayer and faith." For when the hearts of individuals are full, the prayer-meeting, which is the heart of the church, will be full; and when the heart of the church is full, the work of the church will go on with busy and fruitful industry.

The revival does not begin in the prayer-meeting. It begins in the closet. Reader, cannot one begin to-day in yours?—Christian Weekly.

Courtesies of Life.

Much complaint is made by women that men are less regardful of their comfort than formerly. This is indeed so in many cases, especially in street cars, and it carries its reason with it. A writer says he can count on his fingers all the "thank you's" he ever got by rendering little kindnesses to well dressed women. They sail past without the slightest acknowledgment, as if they had all been bred milliners.

The same writer says that one day last winter he met three misses, pupils of an academy, on the side-walk of a village, where the snow lay piled up two feet deep on the outer part of the walk, necessitating the passer by to plunge in up to his knees, if so disposed. The fair young creatures, furred up to the throat, came tripping along in solid file, till they got within a couple of paces or so, when, seeing no manifestation on their part to give way he halted them in a fatherly manner, and said, "Do you suppose that a man of my years ought to jump into the snow to let you pass, when one of you dropping behind the other, would enable us to pass on the dry walk?" "You are not a gentleman, sir," said the most unwomanly of the trio.

The consummation of madness is, to do what, at the time of doing it, we intend to be afterwards sorry for; the deliberate and intentional making of work for repentance.—Nevins.

Forgiveness.

The mantle of charity ought to be thrown around the faults of our fellow beings. "Thy sins be forgiven thee," should be the answer for us to give to those who have sinned against us, and wish to be taken back to our bosoms and be as they once were, pure and sinless. Forgive and forget; memory will not let us forget, but it is in the power of exalted human benevolence. Saddening scenes will often press themselves upon our attention, even when we do the best to prevent them. So scenes of inharmony between ourselves and our human relations will arise in the soul, notwithstanding the presence and influence of the principle of Christian charity which should inspire every human soul with its effulgence. Yet memory, however, faithful to the trust, will not prevent us from being lenient towards the faults and folies of others, and even to forgive their departure from a true life.

Self to be Crucified.

'I am more afraid of my own heart' said Luther, 'than of the Pope and all his cardinals. I have within me the great pope, self.'

'If any will come after me,' said Christ, 'let him deny himself.' The axe must be laid to the root of the tree. Self-interest, self-pleading—in other words our will—must be renounced and exchanged for Christ-pleasing and Christ's will. 'Of all possession,' writes Mad. Guyon, "that of ourselves is the most dangerous.' Let us commit the keeping of ourselves to him, as unto a faithful Creator. For he must reign till he hath put all things under him.'

Children's Corner.

A Child's Hymn.

Now the day of work is done,
Now the quiet night's begun,
And I lay my tired head
Safe within my little bed,
Saviour, hear me;
Be thou near me;
Till the hours of dark have fled.

I can see from where I lie,
Glitt'ring in the dark blue sky,
Here and there a little star
Shining out so clear and high.
Saviour hear me;
Be thou near me;
Keep me safe beneath thine eye.

If I've grieved thee through this day,
Let my sin be washed away;
Make me meek and pure and kind,
Give me thy most holy mind.
Saviour hear me;
Be thou near me;
Let me now thy mercy find.

Thou art loving me above,
And I love thee for thy love;
Thou didst leave thy throne on high,
And for me came down to die.
Thou wilt hear me,
And be near me,
I am safe while thou art nigh.

Mother's Advice.

Allen was sent to the city when quite a lad. The new scenes and objects which met his eye, so unlike the quiet and unchanging life of his native village, filled him with interest and excitement. He never felt tired of looking and walking about in the time spared from his employment. Among other places of which he had heard much, was the theater. Some of his associates went, and there was no end to the wonderful stories they told of what they saw and heard. Allen felt a rising desire to go, too. He manfully resisted it, however.

"Come," said one of his companions, "go with us to-night."

"No," answered Allen, "not-to-night."

"So you always say—not to-night—come, decide to go at once."

"Not to-night," still answered Allen, walking away.

"You shall have a ticket if you'll only come," still urged his companion.

Allen shook his head.

"No, no," said he; "no, no, keep it yourself; I cannot take it."

"How obstinate!" rejoined the other; "why, what can be your reason?"

Allen hesitated for a moment.

"My mother told me not to go to the theater; therefore, I cannot go," he at length firmly replied.

His companion ceased to urge him longer; he beheld in Allen's face a settled purpose to obey, and he left him without saying a word more.

That was one of his mother's last injunctions: "My son, do not go to the theater."

Under such circumstances, some lads might have said: "Why, I see no harm in the theater, why should I not go? I see no reason why I cannot go. My mother, I fancy, did not know as much as she thought she did—she, away off home, cannot tell what is what; besides, other young men of my age go."

I say some lads might have reasoned thus, and disobeyed and gone. Not so with Allen. His mother bade him not to go—that was sufficient for him. He trusted to her knowledge, and confided to her judgment, and he meant to obey her; yes, and what was better, he was not afraid to say so. It was a wise decision, and if every youth away from home had moral courage enough to decide doubtful questions in the same way, there would be many better men for it. Allen is now an excellent and honored man.—S. S. Visitor.

Keep Your Promise.

A boy borrowed a tool from a carpenter, promising to return it at night. Before evening he was sent away on an errand, and he did not return until late. Before he went, he was told that his brother should see the article returned.

After he had come home and gone to bed, he inquired, and found that the tool had not been sent to its owner. He was much distressed to think his promise had not been kept, but he was persuaded to go to sleep, and rise early and carry it home the next morning.

By daybreak he was up, and nowhere was the tool to be found. After a long and fruitless search, he set off for his neighbor's in great distress, to acknowledge his fault. But how great was his surprise to find the tool on his neighbor's door-stone! And then it appeared from the print of his little bare feet in the mud, that the lad had got up in his sleep and carried the tool home, and gone to bed again without knowing it.

Of course a boy who was prompt in his sleep was prompt when awake. He lived respected, had the confidence of his neighbors, and was placed in many offices of trust and profit.

If all the grown folks felt as this boy did, there would be a good many tracks of bare feet found some of these bright mornings; and what piles of tools and books would be found lying a their owner's doors!—Phrenological Journal.

—Do you know which are the two most important questions in the Bible?

I will tell you. God said to Adam, "Where art thou?" God said to Cain, "Where is thy brother?" God asks those questions of every one of us. Where are you child? Are you following Jesus, loving him, serving him, obeying him? Where is your brother, your sister, your playmate? Are you trying to bring them all with you by telling them of Jesus' love? A little dying child asked its father, "Papa, what shall I tell Jesus is the reason you don't love him?" These words brought the father to Jesus.—Mrs. Partrige's Infant Class Lesson.

Beware of the boy who does not obey his father.

The American Missionary Association and the Lodges in the South.

Note:—This is one of the letters alluded to in "Editorial Correspondence."

COLUMBUS, Miss. Oct. 17, 1874.

Pres. J. Blanchard.

DEAR BROTHER:—Some years ago the A. M. A., (which you represent as a Vice-president,) passed a resolution advising the members of colored churches under their care not to join secret societies. This resolution was repeated at Chatanooga, Tenn., at the first meeting of Congregational ministers held there.

I am inclined as a life member of said society to report the following facts and ideas:

1st. The Central South (Cong'l.) Conference is decidedly anti-secret. At their last session held at Talladega, Alabama, they passed a resolution approving the publication of the Christian Republic, and the publication and distribution of tracts by its editor. That paper and the tracts are out-spoken against secret societies. If a single member of our conference belongs to any secret society I failed to learn it, and I canvassed the subject pretty well. They may have in some of their churches members of secret societies, but others I know are decidedly anti-secret. Congregationalism holds an enviable position in this respect in the South.

2d. The leaders among the colored people are largely drawn into Masonic and other lodges. This is abundantly plain by the display of badges worn along our streets. Does the A. M. A. mean to succumb to these influences, or does it mean to hold the position it has so nobly taken? I know it does not think of submission to the Christless worship of the lodge.

But the colored people are in many places going from under their influence through the example of their leaders and possibly through the guilty silence of some of their missionaries on this subject of organized secrecy.

My position may seem a bold one, but I think churches should declare non-fellowship with oath-bound secrecy, and "thus have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." And this is the more necessary because,

3d. The ministers (white and colored) of other churches, with very few exceptions, belong to the Masons, Oddfellows, etc. These ministers teach from their pulpits "Salvation through Christ alone," but in the lodge that "All good Masons" go "to the lodge above," Jew, infidel, and saint together! Can this false teaching be kept down even in our churches but by said churches taking a decided stand? How can the A. M. A. best promote purity of doctrine in this respect and prevent the contradictions of such teachers from producing their legitimate fruit—infidelity? Alas! the fruit is abundant already.

4th. The church cannot do her part in maintaining free government unless she helps the nation shake off these relics of barbarism.

Passing by the tendencies of combined secrecy and the characters of individual societies as shown by their teachings, we take facts. A Mason can steal, lie, get drunk, shoot, stab, swear, and almost do anything else and escape the law. Nay more, be a member in good standing in the churches. I could call names and give places if it were best.

The natural outgrowth of such things are still baser parasites to the State, such as Ku-Klux and White Leagues, which last I suppose to be the old K. K. snake with a new skin. I would say more, dear brother, but perhaps this is enough.

May the Lord guide the A. M. A. and its missionaries through the difficulties that may press them, to work for his own glory as good servants of our common Saviour, Jesus Christ.

Truly yours,

S. C. FEEMSTER.

Religious Intelligence.

—October 31st was the anniversary of the Sixteenth Century Reformation. Early in the morning of that day, 1517, Luther nailed to the church door of Wittemburg his famous ninety-five theses.

—Rev. R. A. McYeal, for many years pastor of the United Presbyterian church in Oskaloosa, Iowa, and formerly member of the Executive Committee of the National Christian Association, has recently resigned his charge.

—The meetings held by Mr. K. A. Burnell under the direction of the Young Men's Christian Association, through Illinois, are having some success. At Kewanee, a large mining town, there were a number of converts and sunrise prayer-meetings were largely attended.

—The Presbyterian Synod of Nothern Illinois, lately held in Chicago, approved heartily the national Christian temperance alliance suggested by the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church, and appointed a committee, J. V. Farwell and Rev. A. E. Kittredge, to represent it in that body.

—A powerful revival of religious interest is prevailing at Jaffrey, N. H., which apparently originated in a two days' meeting conducted by members of the New Hampshire Y. M. C. A. On Sunday evening, the 11th inst., there were fifty six inquirers, and forty conversions are reported.

—An Advent conference was held in this city recently was attended by Moses Grant and Elder Couch, of Boston, and many other preachers and lay members from adjoining States. A holiness meeting was attended by manifestations of spiritual power and Elder Grant conducted evening meetings through all last week.

—Major J. H. Cole, of Chicago, a reformed drunkard and committee of the Y. M. C. A. on noon prayer meeting, has been asked to make the establishment and management in Chicago of a reformatory for drunkards a special object of his work, such institution to be supported by voluntary contributions, and to be conducted upon the principle and belief that in the power of Christ to cleanse from sin. He is the only sure hope for the drunkard either in this world or that to come.

—The Chicago Presbytery reports that during the past year there had been a good degree of prosperity within its bounds, and that there had been revivals in several of the churches, from which a large number of additions to the church membership had resulted. The number received by examination was 583, an increase of 157 over last year; by letter, 539; total, 1,122. There had been an increase of the Sabbath schools of 1,901 scholars.

—There are in New York city 380 Protestant churches, chapels and missions, having an attendance in the aggregate, at the most, of 250,000 people. To the hundreds of thousands not gathered in these churches the City Mission is organized to carry the Gospel. The New York City Mission and Tract Society is now closing the forty-seventh year of its beneficent operations. From its records, carefully kept, it appears that the city missionaries, in 85,203 visits among the poor and needy, in 1,411 prayer-meetings, 3,194 preaching services, and in many other ways, have made known the good news of salvation to multitudes of men, women and children, not otherwise reached.

—The Lee Avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn, has for some time practiced open communion. The Association to which it belonged appointed a committee last year to examine the position of the congregation in matters of faith and doctrine. This committee reported to the Association at its late meeting and the following resolution was adopted by a vote of 174 to 24, viz: "That the name of the Lee Avenue Church be dropped from the list of this Association, and that correspondence by letters and messengers be discontinued until she shall be in harmony with this body in respect to the observance of the Lord's Supper." J. Hyatt Smith, the pastor, protested against this action. The Association might make out a clearer case against the pastor himself. He is an adhering Freemason, and is a chief speaker for Masonic meetings. No Baptist who will examine candidly will deny that such unchristian practice is more to be deprecated than open communion.

News of the Week.

The City.

The new Farwell Hall is so near completion as to be lighted with gas for night workmen. It will be ready in three weeks for the public.——At a Republican mass meeting last week the chairman, Col. Eastman, referred to the efforts of the temperance ladies in the gallant remark that the Republican party would not allow "sixty or seventy old women to dictate its policy on the liquor and cigar question."——President Moss and Chancellor Borrough were installed as officers of the University of Chicago last Thursday evening.——The storm of last week was quite severe on the Lakes. Several vessels from this city were lost, but no loss of life is reported.——It is reported that the Chicago Tribune has changed hands, and the controlling interest has been purchased by Joseph Medill, who will continue it as an independent Republican journal. Mr. Medill has been all along a partner in the Tribune company, and was editor until elected mayor in 1871. Horace White goes to Europe.

The Country.

—The New Orleans city returns of registration, show a majority of 11,447, leaving the negroes for the State at large 2,173 ahead. Registration frauds have, it is said, already been discovered, and the investigation continues. The location of residence given by ten persons was found to be a waste lot. One man had registered his name fourteen times.——A daring attempt was made Oct. 24th, at Cameron Station, Mo., to rob the eastern-bound express train of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad. The passengers and train men were at supper, when six robbers boarded the train. Four jumped into the baggage car, and two mounted the engine. They ran the train two miles north, but failing in their attempts to break open the express safe, abandoned the train and fled to the woods. A few days later a passenger train on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road was attacked. Stones were thrown breaking the windows of the Pullman cars and a shot was fired into the train.——The Comptroller of the Currency continues to receive more currency from banks surrendering their circulation than is called for by those wishing to establish new banks. Of late there have been scarcely any calls whatever for currency from the West, and the Comptroller does not believe it will become necessary to make a requisition on the East to supply the demands of the West for at least a year to come.——Surveys are now in progress for a new bridge to cross the Niagara River just below Black Creek. The structure is erected in the interest of the Canada Southern Railroad in order to render that line independent of the present single track bridge, and also to allow its trains to go around Buffalo, instead of passing through the city at slow speed. The new bridge is to have a double track and double carriage way, and will be completed, it is expected, in August, 1875——Pres. Grant has proclaimed a Thanksgiving on Nov. 26th.———In New Orleans, last week, while Gov. Kellogg was driving up Canal street in a cab, he was hailed by Major Burke, Chairman of the Democratic Registration Committee. Gov. Kellogg ordered the driver to halt, and proffered his hand to Major Burke. The latter seized it, and attempted to pull him from the carriage, at the same time drawing a cowhide, with which he struck Kellogg. The driver immediately whipped up his team and started off. Kellogg turned and fired a shot at Burke from the rear of the cab. The latter also drew a revolver, and fired five shots at the carriage as it was driven rapidly away. Nobody was hurt. Burke then surrendered himself to an officer, and was taken to the lock-up. He was subsequently released on parole at Kellogg's request. The affair grew out of an animated correspondence between the parties on the naturalization question.———Recent reports from Nebraska of suffering and starvation in the grasshopper stricken district are modified by later news. No one has starved to death nor is likely to. Steps are being taken on the ground to relieve immediate suffering and funds are being raised in all the larger cities to further this work.———During last week severe forests fires raged through various sections of southern Indiana and Ohio, destroying timber, crops, farm buildings, and threatening several towns. Greencastle, Ind., did not escape, but was nearly destroyed.

Foreign.

Emperor William, in a letter which he has written to the Pope, says that Germany has done all in her power to live at peace with the Church of Rome, but that he is bound to protect the State against the attacks and conspiracies of the Catholic clergy.———It is reported from Spain, on authority which is believed to be reliable, that the Madrid Government has sent $5,000,000 for distribution among the Carlist chiefs for the purpose of terminating the war. This may be the cheapest way out of the Spanish troubles, but where is the glory and the historic chivalry of Spain? There is evidently a growing suspicion of Prussia on the part of Russia and a French alliance by the Czar is not unlikely.———The German National Assembly was opened last Thursday by the Emperor in person. He asks for grants of money to place the army on a war footing and enable it to be prepared at any moment to defend the country.—Count Von Armin is released on 100,000 thalers ($60,000) upon the advice of his physicians. He will probably go to Nice for his health.——The King of the Sandwich Islands is preparing to visit this country during the latter part of this month.———The trial of Kullman, charged with attempting to assassinate Prince Bismarck, closed last week. In answer to the questions put to him by the court, the prisoner admitted that he was guilty of the principal points of the indictment. He said that Bismarck was the worst and maddest enemy of the Church of Rome. He had intended to kill Bismarck, and had aimed at his head, as he had an impression that Bismarck wore a shot-proof shirt. He admitted to the court that he had committed a great crime.

Home and Health Hints.

PERMANENT WHITEWASH.—Take half a bushel of unslacked lime, slack it with boiling water, covering it during the process to keep in the steam; strain the liquid through a fine seive or strainer, and add to it a peck of salt previously well dissolved in water; three pounds ground rice boiled to a thin paste, and stirred in boiling hot; half a pound Spanish whiting, and a pound of clean glue which has been previously dissolved by soaking it first, and then hanging over a slow fire in a small kettle inside a large one filled with water; add five gallons of hot water to the mixture, sun it well, and let it stand a few days covered from the dirt. It should be put on quite hot; for this purpose it can be kept in a kettle on a furnace. A pint of this mixture will cover a yard square of the outside of a house, if applied with a large paint brush.

A STRONG WHITE PASTE.—Dissolve two and one-half oz. of gum arabic in two quarts of water, and stir it into one pound of wheat flour until the whole becomes of a pasty consistency. It is then to be heated, and one and one-half oz. each of sugar of lead and alum dissolved in a little water, added thereto, and the composition well stired until it shows signs of boiling, when it must be removed from the fire. Add while hot six drops of carbolic acid. This is a very tenacious and durable paste, and it may be used on almost any substance.

It is estimated that about six per cent. of cattle, and about nine per cent. of sheep and swine, nearly 600,000 in all, annually die on the passage to market from the West, and a large portion of these are sold in our markets, either as meat, or rendered into cooking lard; while the cattle that get through alive, for the want of food and water, and by reason of cruelty inflicted upon them, after losing on the average, in transportation, nearly a hundred pounds each in weight, from the most juicy and nutricious parts of the meat, come out of the cars full of fever, and many with bruises, sores, and ulcers; and these, together with smaller animals, to which the loss and suffering is, in proportion, equally great, are all sold in our markets for food.—Sanitarian.

A HAIR DRESSING.—When a scurf collects on the scalp try a dressing of one ounce of glycerine, two ounces of rose-water and thirty drops of carbolic acid for the disease. The blood needs purifying. Hot baths and course food are also aids.

Farm and Garden.

Map Your Farm.

The Farmers' Union suggests that every farmer should have a oomplete map of his farm, with each field, pasture and wood lot, together with all the fences, roads and ditches, plainly drawn, and either numbered or named, so they can be readily designated. Few farmers can appreciate the real value of one until they have tried the experiment, for with a map of the farm before you, you can direct your workmen to any part of it without the possibility of making a mistake. You can plan improvements and estimate their cost at your leisure, instead of spending half a day of your valuable time in surveying the land itself. Any person with a little ingenuity and patience, can draw a map of his farm. It should be about two feet square, or larger if desired, and drawn upon thick card-board, to prevent its being torn or defaced. Let our farmers try the experiment, and they will soon learn its value.

PRESERVING POTATOES.—A correspondent of the Scientific American says that he has tried the following method of keeping potatoes for years with complete success, though in some instances the tubers were diseased when taken out of the ground: "Dust over the floor of the bin with lime, and put in about six or seven inches deep of potatoes, and dust with lime as before. Put in six or seven inches of potatoes again; repeat the operation until all are stowed away. One bushel of lime will do for forty bushels of potatoes, though more will not hurt them—the lime rather improving the flavor than otherwise."

The American Artisan gives the following recipes for waterproofing leather:

Melt together beef tallow four ounces, resin one ounce, and bees wax one ounce, and when nearly cooled solid add as much neat's foot oil as the above mixture measures. It is to be applied with a soft rag both to the soles and uppers. The leather should be warmed meanwhile before a fire, and the application well rubbed in. It requires two applications to make the leather thoroughly water-proof.

Another way:—Dissolve three-quarters of an ounce of paraffine in a pint of lard oil. The best quality of oil should be used. It will be necessary to heat the oil in order to dissolve the paraffine. This solution may be rubbed on boots once a month, and it is said to render them perfectly water-tight, at the same time it does not interfere with the blacking. If the solution is found to make the leather too stiff, the amount of paraffine in proportion to the oil should be reduced.

Temperance.

—Dr. Evarts, of the First Baptist Church, Chicago, said in a recent temperance meeting that so long as the open saloon system was legalized, so long drinking habits of society would continue. With 4,000 open saloons in Chicago, temperance never would prevail. He spoke of Evanston, Illinois, and Vineland, New Jersey, as illustrations of what temperance can do. Hon Emery H. Storrs says that people complain that the temperance crusade did not last. But he replied last summer, when the ground was so dry that it cracked in great seams along the surface; when the heat poured down the heavens seemed brass, and the air filled with pestilence, there came a thunder storm which cleansed and purified all things. The crusade was, too, in the moral world, what thunder storms are in the physical. If a thunder storm should last forever it would become disagreeable. The temperance crusade prepared the moral atmosphere for persistent, systematic and Christian work against intemperance.

—Does any one wish to see, in part, the garnered harvest of the liquor traffic? It may be found within the walls of our State prisons. During a recent visit in the Sing Sing prison, a mournful procession of twelve hundred convicts passed in review before us in entering the large dining-hall of that institution. In response to our inquiry as to what proportion of these unhappy people were there, directly or indirectly, in consequence of alcoholic liquors, a prison official who accompanied us said: "It is perfectly safe to say three-fourths. Careful examination would show the proportion to be much larger. So crowded of late has been the condition of our State prisons, that many cells at Sing Sing, three feet by six, too small for one prisoner, have been occupied by two! The Tribune, Times, Post, and other of our leading journals, decry prohibition and advocate license. Behold in Sing Sing an illustration of its fruition.—N. Y. Witness.

A Scotch minister tells the following anecdote: There was a poor fellow in Dundee, who was a fearful victim to intemperance, and had been, while under the influence of drink, so cruel that he had beaten his wife so that she lay for an hour insensible. One day when a lady met his wife and asked for him, she replied that he had come home raving with drink, and she had to fly from the house till she would learn from one of the children that he had fallen asleep. That lady went to him, and with much difficulty persuaded him to attend the prayer-meeting one night. It so happened that Mr. Moody spoke that night about drunkenness, and said, "There may be a man standing here so given to drink that he may become a curse and a terror to his wife and children." The man at once said to himself, "Who has been telling him about me?" He went next night to the meeting, and at the close the lady who had persuaded him to attend on the preceding night found him among the anxious enquirers who remained. He found peace, and for many weeks he stood firm against temptation. One night the craving for drink came back upon him, and he went out of bed and said, "I must go and get whiskey." At last, when on his way to the door, he fell on the floor, and it was not so much praying as shrieking to God to help him; and there he lay on his knees till the morning began to dawn, and then he got the victory, and with his face shining as that of Moses did on his way from the Mount, that man remained a victor, and from that day to this he has kept free from drink.

Facts and Figures.

—It is the testimony af all tourists, and the statistics also show, that Europe has not room for its growing population, notwithstanding the enormous inroads made by immigration to this country. And yet Germany, in some portions, actually appears to be suffering for the want of laborers, and the land-owners in the now thinly populated districts have become alarmed to such an extent that they are urging their several members of Parliament to enact official measures to put a stop to immigration.

—A Detroit man has invented a process of making gas of hard wood; 33,000 feet can be made from a single cord. The gas itself costs nothing, for the charcoal into which the wood is converted is worth more than the wood from which it is made. Fifty cents a thousand feet will pay all costs of manufacture. A company has been started in Chicago which is practically testing the invention. The Tremont House will soon be entirely lighted with this new gas. The cost of lighting the hotel will be reduced from $28.00 to $3.00 a day.

—Herapath's Journal, the organ of the English railroads, says that no Eastern railroad has ever struck Chicago, without experiencing the most instantaneous and wonderful revival. "The great trunk lines running East from that city were all crippled, and one of them badly so. But from the time they reached Chicago and made their connections east, they started on that career of prosperity which has made them among the finest railway properties in any country."

—The last census referring to the business of 1869, reports 63,928 establishments manufacturing articles made entirely from wood, employing 393,387 persons, and using materials worth $309,921,403 annually. There are besides 109,512 industries in which wood is an important part for example—carriages, furniture, bridges, ships, etc., employing 700,915 persons, and using materials worth $488,530,844. If we assume that half of the class of mixed manufactories are employed upon wood alone, we have a grand total of 118,684 establishments, employing 7,439,840 persons, and using wood valued at $554,186,825 annually.

—Notwithstanding the treaty which England has made with the Sultan of Zanzibar for the suppression of the slave trade, and the dilligent efforts of British officers to intercept vessels conveying slaves from the coasts of Africa, it is believed that the traffic is being carried on as diligently as ever. Its agents are Mohammedans, whose religion expressly sanctions slavery, and allows a man as many slaves as "his right hand may possess." It is calculated that about 70,000 human beings are yearly carried off as slaves, and that 500,000 are slaughtered in securing these prisoners. More extended missonary efforts are required on the East Coast and in the interior region explored by Livingston, and several of the English societies are enlarging their efforts in that direction.

DEFENCE OF JUDGE DANIEL H. WHITNEY,

Master of Belvidere Lodge, before the Grand Lodge of Ill., On charge of Unmasonic Conduct, in bringing Samuel L. Keith the Murderer of Ellen Slade to justice.

9. "In the presence of brother Hurlbut, &c., had learned that Masons were going to attack him," &c. I was so informed, first by an "outsider," and secondly by a brother Master Mason (who refused to take part in my assassination), and who told me it was arranged to ask me to resign, after I should take the chair at the next meeting of the Lodge, and knowing that I would not do it, it was further arranged that certain ones (the names of several of whom I find upon the foregoing letter of complaints, should drag me by force form the chair, and in the melee, assassinate me; and trust to the circumstances of a row, and the strong arm of Masonry for protection. I did not say "because I had done my duty in pursuing a murderer," but I said because I had discharged my duty as a public officer, in endeavoring to procure the arrest of a man charged by the constituted authorities with murder.

In regard to the meditated attack on me, the Grand Master will undoubtedly remember, that brother Fuller, S. W., stated in open Lodge, that at the meeting of the Lodge after the murder of Miss Slade, it required the exercise of all the influence he possessed to prevent a "row in the Lodge," and that he prevented it "by inducing a part of the members to go home, and others to keep still;" and while I give full credit to brother Fuller for the course he pursued, and its good effects, yet it is true that these members were in a great measure deterred from their ruffianly designs on me, by a perfect knowledge that an excited populace, already goaded to madness by the base and shameful course pursued by members of this Lodge in reference to the murder of Miss Slade, had become aware of their designs on me, and that their every move was watched; and it is to these two circumstances that I now owe my escape from violence and death at the hands of Master Masons, in obedience (as they contend) to the duties they owe to the Institution, and the obligations that they have voluntarily taken upon themselves.

10 "In Lodge he has reiterated," &c. In Lodge I have repeated my knowledge of their premeditated attack on me, and also the declaration of one of the members that he wished to God there would be a lynch mob and I in it, he would be damned sure to dispose of me first, and that there were half a dozen others ready to do the same thing; and I also said in open Lodge, that they could not over-awe nor deter me from discharging my duty as a public officer, and a citizen. 11 and 12, I pass, until I come to notice verbal charges, which I presume these were intended to cover.

13. Names of the accusers—of these fourteen, I ask the Grand Lodge to bear in mind, but one was present at the meeting at the Court House, several of them had not been in the Lodge since that meeting, have not exchanged a word with me on the subject, nor even seen me up to the time of signing the accusations, and knew no more of the truth or falsity of the charges, than did any man in Europe. Yet they have a right to prefer charges, and of that I do not complain.

14. The certificate of brother Secretary is well enough in its way; and I have only to remark of my accusing brethren, that one is under the charge of having committed willful and corrupt perjury; in a suit where another Mason was a party and suffered in consequence of that perjury; one of the accusers is charged by a brother Mason with supplanting him in business, by falsely representing himself as an agent for the sale of a piece of land, and agreeing on the price; and afterwards going to another person and disclosing the bargain made with the brother Mason, and then selling the land to this person for fifty dollars more and hurrying him off to Chicago to secure the title; as he really had no power to sell; by which misrepresentation and transaction the brother lost the purchase of the land, greatly to his injury. Another of my accusers is under the charge of habitual intemperance, and others are obnoxious to the charge; it is rife here, and no doubt generally believed, that one of my accusers has seduced the orphan daughter of a brother member, and by the respectable portion of this community, or at least a large number of them, she is looked upon as a disgraced and ruined girl. Another of my accusers, S. Peck, has several times in open Lodge charged that brother L. was never a regularly made Mason, and that he got in clandestinely at the early organization of the Lodge, when they were not sufficiently careful in admitting members. Now these things were as well known to brother Secretary, when he made that certificate as was his own name. I would not speak of brother L. being not a regularly made Mason, had it been confined to the Lodge; but it has been repeated to "outsiders," and you can very easily imagine that it has caused me not a little trouble.

These, among other things, have kept the Lodge in confusion for a long time. I was wearied out with it, and declared I would resign, if discipline was not enforced. Some time before the murder of Miss Slade, committees were appointed on several of these cases, but they have taken no action on them, nor did I believe they would, at the time of their appointment.

I do not complain of the brethren for having preferred charges against me, it was their right so to do; and it is equally my right and duty to show you somewhat of the standing of these accusers, as well as to show you the fact that but few of these persons knew anything of the charges they signed, only from the representations of two well known members, one a lying, trifling and contemptible scoundrel, and the other one, since he has become a Mason, making no higher claims to infidelity than that of a consistent Deist. And I had certainly rather that these accusers would be compelled, even in an unmasonic spirit to prefer charges so badly shorn of the attributes of truth and fairness, than to have had it in their power to have preferred charges against me, fledged with these attributes, even in the spirit of "Brotherly Love, Relief and Truth."

And now Most Worshipful and Brethren, I will notice, as briefly as possible, my private letter to the Grand Master, which, with my consent, he laid before Belvidere Lodge.

1, "These proceedings were without my knowledge," &c. I first saw the charges against me in the hands of the Grand Master. At the first communication of the Lodge after the murder of Miss Slade, it was agreed, as I understood and as brother Fuller stated to the Grand Master, he understood, and I have no doubt every member there present understood that all action in reference to complaints against me was deferred until the next meeting of the Lodge. But it appears that some of the brethren changed their minds; of this, I do not complain, but confess that I should have felt better satisfied had they furnished me with a copy of their charges, or openly and honorably informed me of their change of purpose.

2. "It has been nearer a Hell," &c. This is literally true, if a place of torment, and the disposition of its inmates to render each other miserable, is a correct definition of hell. This Lodge has been, during the last two years past, one succession of broils and quarrels, until most of the moral and worthy members have almost entirely absented themselves from the Lodge, and assign the disturbances in the Lodge as the reason. A year ago last fall, brother Howell, the most expert Mason we ever had in the Lodge, and who had done nearly all the work of the Lodge for eight months, (brother Hotchkiss, W. M. not being very well qualified) on the night that he took his demit, declared in open Lodge that he "regretted that he had ever been a member of Belvidere Lodge, No. 60, F. A. M's, and that his connection with the Lodge has given him more pain than any other event of his life." Brother Gooding succeeded brother Hotchkiss, and it seemed the signal for bedlam to disgorge; the members were refractory, and brother Gooding was obstinate and mulish; and to give you a sample of our "peace and harmony," I will state that our chaplain, the Rev. O. Miller, in open Lodge, charged brother Burgess, to his face, with having equivocated and lied to him, and that such had been his course of deceit and duplicity, and that he had shown such an utter disregard of truth and veracity that he felt it his duty to declare that he would not believe him under oath; and this old dotard, for nearly a year, had had an open rupture with Burgess every time they met in Lodge.

I succeeded brother Gooding, and found everything in confusion; the finances deranged, the books not intelligibly kept, no report made to the Grand Lodge for the past year, and the members, who continued to meet, drawn together by a spirit of hostility, retaliation and recrimination, instead of the spirit of brotherly love, and exhibiting more the spirit and appearance of a parcel of refractory, capricious and ungovernable school boys, than that of gentlemen, and members of an honorable Institution. And these broils and difficulties had become subjects of public notoriety.

3. "I find myself associated as a Mason, with drunkards, gamblers," &c., &c. (A part of the answer in justification of the foregoing sentence, details a case of licentiousness and drunkeness on the part of two of the members of this Lodge, too revolting to publish; the whole has become public; and yet no notice was ever taken of these beastly transactions by the Lodge.) In the Lodge are ten or fifteen hard drinkers. By reference to the records of the Circuit Court of this county, I find two indictments against a brother, holding at the time high office in the Lodge, one for gambling, the other for keeping a common gaming house; and at the same term, an indictment against another brother, then holding high office in the Lodge for gambling; and at the same term an indictment against a private member for gambling; and at the same term an indictment against an unaffiliated brother for gambling; and yet no mention was ever made of dealing with these members, although the gambling and rowdyism of these and other members, was well known as one of the causes of my applying for a demit.

"Blackguards," &c., &c. I have always understood that "drunkards, gamblers," &c., were such. The agency of a member of this Lodge in the murder of Miss Slade has already been stated, as found by the Coroner's jury.

"Accessories," &c. Brother Hurlbut admitted in the presence of six of the Supervisors, and the County Clerk, that Dr. Woodward came to him immediately after the death of Miss Slade, and informed him of all the particulars of her death, and that he then advised Dr. Woodward to flee the country, which he did, and was pursued by the Ex-Sheriff Smith and the Sheriff, overtaken, arrested and brought back, and committed to jail on a charge of murder, found by the Coroner's jury; this agency of brother Hurlbut, after the death, he also admitted in open Lodge, in presence of the Grand Master. For other accessories in this matter, please see my answer to the letter of accusations. Again,—several weeks before the murder of Miss Slade, a brother came to me in open Lodge and stated that a brother who had committed a murder wished to visit the Lodge. I absolutely refused to permit it, and there the matter dropped. But being astonished that a murderer could present himself as a Mason in good standing, I afterwards made inquiry, and this seems to be the state of the case, as nearly as I have been able to ascertain, and which I think can be relied on. Some eighteen months or two years ago, a Free Mason murdered a man in La-Salle, or some county in that region of the State, and was indicted and tried, and found guilty, or the jury disagreed; and pending the motion for a new trial, or before he was formally remanded, as the case may have been, he was spirited away, and got into the country, and was secreted by members of Belvidere Lodge, until the murderer could be helped off to California; this, it appears, was the same man returning, secretly, for his family, and yet a Mason in good standing.

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issned by him, purporting to give a full and accnrate acconnt, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Mnrder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's mnrderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they pnrport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no donbt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y.,. and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—' The Storm Gathering;" "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attemptcd Abduction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

Publisher's Department.

For Our Agents.

DIRECTIONS THAT WILL AID IN CANVASSING FOR THE CYNOSURE SUCCESSFULLY.

We have been reading directions for canvassers prepared by a business firm and we take out the best ideas we find and arrange them in our own way for the purpose of helping our friends obtain Cynosure subscriptions.

Please cut this out and read the suggestions often before going out to canvass.

1st. APPRECIATE YOUR WORK.

You are conferring a public benefit in obtaining CYNOSURE subscriptions. You benefit society at large and individuals in particular.

2d. In commencing, get the LEADING PERSONS in your district to subscribe if you can. Consciously or unconsciously, we are all influenced by knowing what others have done; especially those who by virtue of office, education, wealth or talent occupy prominent positions among the people.

3d. INFLUENCE THE PRESS. Give the local editor a short notice of the CYNOSURE, or give him some copies of the paper. Ask him to read and notice it in his columns.

4th. HOUSE TO HOUSE CANVASS. Enter upon a faithful, systematic, thorough, house-to-house canvassing of the town or district. Do not rove about, but proceed regularly, neglecting no house, store or workshop. Never attempt to canvass among groups or crowds in the street; find your customers at their homes or places of business. Before entering a house learn the name of the occupant, which can be done by asking at the last house the name of the next door neighbor, and so on, never disturb a man who is busy; accost every one politely, and whenever you can, by name; and keep your temper under all circumstances, remembering that your object of interest is not yourself, but the work you have in hand. In factories, mills, or large business establishments, go first to the principle, get his subscription or at least his good will and permission to canvass among his people.

GOLDEN HINTS.

There are a few general hints derived from the experience of successful canvassers, which must be both studied and followed if the canvasser means to succeed.

I. Keep a strict memoranda of all who are out or engaged when you call, and do not fail to wait on them a second time. Wait also upon those who ask you to call again, &c.; this you should construe into half a promise to subscribe, and you should not fail to follow it up and take advantage of it.

II. It is highly important to the agent, no less than to the publishers, that he should report regularly and promptly as to his progress.

III. Do not expect too much at first. The business must be learned, just as every business must be, in order to succeed in it.

Learn this from the experience of others: Old and skillful agents usually go more successfully over the ground than new ones, because more slowly and more thoroughly. Let no day pass unimproved. Never droop under a little stress of weather.

Write! Write!! Write!!!

HAVE YOU FORGOTTEN TO WRITE?

This is the last copy of the CYNOSURE that our readers whose subscriptions expire in October will receive, unless they have renewed their subscriptions, or written requesting the continuence of their papers or unless we hear from them to that effect.

IF YOU DO NOT WANT THE PAPER send us a postal card stating the fact. It is so much pleasanter than to cut off subscriptions not knowing what the facts in the case are. We suppose many are waiting to send new subscriptions with their renewals. Write and let us know it. If you have neglected the matter of renewing without much reason, please attend to it now.

Will our subscribers whose time is out in November renew promptly? Let us hear from you whether you wish to renew or not? Send new subscriptions with your renewels if you can.

We hope all whose subscriptions expire in December will begin to canvass for new subscriptions now. So that you will have a good list of new names to send in with your renewals.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Note if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. Postage on the Cynosure.

After Jan. 1st, 1875, THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. The postage on the CYNOSURE is 20 cents a year.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 year a we cannot do this.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscriber for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Will our readers be so kind as carefully to read the suggestions for agents on the sixteenth page? How many persons in your localities ought to take the paper who do not? Please write down their names and call on them. Study their surroundings, consider the best way to address them on the subject. Talk with them when other business is not pressing. If possible, take their subscriptions. Never become discouraged. If they tell you to call again find out when they would like to see you and be sure to call.

Topics of the Time.

THE LAST AMERICAN REVOLUTION.—After fourteen years of power the Republican party has been beaten at the polls. So complete a political revolution has seldom occurred in our history. Its causes are easily found. They began plainly to appear two years ago. Originally the party of American principles, the success, which uniformly in the end goes with truth, attracted men who became, when policy superseded principal, the self-appointed leaders of the party. The untrustworthy appointments of the President, the demagoguery of Butler, Credit Mobilier, salary grab, a badly reconstructed South, Sanborn and Jayne, Casey and Simmons with their moieties and custom-house frauds, and the third term ghost, all contributed to the dissatisfaction of the people with the Republican party which had fostered these abuses. They therefore used the Democratic or Opposition (or whatever alias you please) party as an instrument of punishment. The Democratic leaders sorely mistake if they suppose it is a triumph of the distinctive principles they have held in past years. It is simply a verdict against a multitude of evils which have been summed up in the word "Grantism." During the two years before the next Presidential election we may at least hope for purer government. Both parties are put on their good behavior, with great opopportunities for showing it; and, in the absence of any important issue, as now, the impartial judgment of the people will then be given.

THE TRIALS OF JOURNALISM.—The Independent will hardly consider itself "persecuted for righteousness' sake" if the assignee of Jay Cooke sues it on a charge of contra bonos mores—— against good morals. A contract has been found among the papers of Mr. Cooke whereby it appears that Mr. Bowen stipulated that he will give to the sale of the Northern Pacific bonds "the exclusive interest and influence of his money and editorial columns." On this contract Mr. Bowen received $50,000 in the bonds and $460,000 in the stock of the road and received a receipt in full as if paid for in cash. The trustee maintains that the bonds and stock were obtained under an "immoral agreement and without adequate consideration. The Nation suggests that among those interested in this bargain are "the divines and moralists who by contributing to Mr. Bowen's paper and lending him the use of their names made his money and editorial columns worth purchasing." Few of them will be indifferent if they are brought into court "will ye nill ye." Their solicitude would have been more useful if exercised as did Rev. R. L. Dabney, of Virginia, who was solicited to write upon religious and other themes for the Independent. He replied to Hayes Ward, the editor, that he understood the design of the Independent in securing the use of his name to help introduce the paper into a number of Southern families where all its startling novelties would be sure to be read, "neither my common sense nor my conscience permits me to accede to this bargain." Subscribers, as well as contributors, in their proportion, have a responsibility in this matter they cannot avoid.

FAIRFIELD ON BEECHER.—Dr. E. B. Fairfield of the First Congregational Church, Mansfield, Ohio, has been upbraded by a few anonymous correspondents as meddling with what was none of his business in his thorough review of the Beecher case. This review published first in a Mansfield paper and afterwards in pamphlet, has passed to a second edition. Mr. Fairfield has received over a hundred letters from ministers and eminent lawyers and judges thanking him for his able work in vindication of the truth and public morals. In reply to his critics Mr. Fairfield writes in the Advance: "Up to this hour, I know of no steps that have been taken to bring this question of Mr. Beecher's guilt or innocence before any proper ecclesiastical tribunal, whose verdict could have weight with the general public. And that Christian men should wait to know the verdict of a petit jury before taking up such a case of scandalous scandal, would be, to most of us, a new doctrine in ecclesiastical jurisprudence. . . . . Every Congregational minister in the land has a special interest in this case. We publish annually a list of all the Congregational ministers in good standing in the United States. Henry Ward Beecher's at present stands among them. Were Theodore Parker living, and his name should thus appear, with all his theological heresies, or were Ralph Waldo Emerson's name to be found upon a forthcoming list, with his well-understood opinions, might not any minister belonging to the same denomination be thought reasonable in entering his protest? But to these believing Mr. B. guilty of adultery, falsehood, perjury, subordination of perjury, &c., what are all heresies of the head, even of Parker, or Priestly, or Paine, compared with this man's heresies of heart and life?

Christmas.

BY SPECTATOR.

Not finding any divine authority for celebrating our blessed Saviour's nativity on the 25th day of December; nor, indeed, for observing such a celebration at all, and having serious doubts not only about the propriety of such a celebration, but whether the whole concern, name and thing is or is not a diabolical invention designed to injure the church of Christ and promote the interest of Satan's kingdom, it is proposed to examine the subject with some little care.

By what authority is our Saviour's birthday called Christmas? Certainly no inspired writer ever gave it this name, Christmas; that is, Christ's Mass. Did Christ ever at any time appoint or establish a Mass, to be in any way connected with the Christian church? Never. The Mass as it is now celebrated in Roman Catholic countries was unknown to the Christian church for six hundred years, till Pope Gregory I. at the close of the sixth century introduced it into the church of Rome. We will let Pope Pius IV. explain the whole matter. In his creed which contains the standard doctrines of the church of Rome, he says: "In the Mass there is offered to God a true, proper and propitiatory sacrifice for the living and the dead. And that in the most holy sacrament of the Eucharist there is truly, really and substantially the body and blood together with the soul and Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ." Here we have the whole of it from an infallible (?) pope.

Now we are absolutely certain that our blessed Saviour offered himself as a propitiatory sacrifice to God once for all time and for all necessary purposes, and this sacrifice is never to be repeated. It is also certain that Christ never appointed any sacrificing priests in the Christian church. By what authority then does a Romish priest offer a sacrifice of any kind, and who gave him that authority? According to the doctrines of the church of Rome the priest by saying, "Hoc est corpus meum," (This is my body) can change a bit of bread into the real body, blood, soul and Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ! What jugglery! What a stupendous humbug! What blasphemy! When and where did Christ put himself, body, soul and Divinity under the control and jurisdiction of a licentious, popish priest, liable to be disposed of as his capricious imagination might dictate? The Catholic priests, if the infallible (?) Pope Pius IV. spake truth, far outdo Jesus Christ himself; for, he offered only his human nature, including his body and blood, as a sacrifice. But the priest offers both the human and Divine nature of Christ! What monstrous absurdity, arroganee and blasphemy! We know Christ offered himself only once; but the priest offers him a thousand times. "The sacrifice of the Mass implies and includes the blasphemous absurdity of offering God as a sacrifice to God! To say the least, it is an insult offered to and an insolent rejection of the true sacrifice offered by Christ. It would appear to me that all those imposters (for imposters they really are), who offer a morsel of bread as a sacrifice for the living and the dead, pretending at the same time that it is really and truly the body, blood, soul and Divinity of our adorable Saviour, together with all the countless millions of deluded dupes who put their trust in such blasphemous absurdities instead of the loving Redeemer of the world, may look for the wrath and vengence of an insulted Deity to be so inflamed against them as to cast them down to the flames of an endless hell as the just reward of their atrocious impiety.

With regard to the year of the world in which our Saviour was born, we know nothing with certainty. One hundred and forty-six different learned men of all nations, ages and creeds have placed his birth in as many different years. Some of them as early as the year 3,616 and others as late as 6984 from the creation, leaving an interval of 3,368 years in dispute. The chronology of our English Bibles which places the nativity in 4004 is that adopted by Archbishop Usher, who followed in general the modern Hebrew text. But according to Dr. Hales who followed the Septuagint, our Saviour was born in the year of the world 5411. If any choice is to be made the preference should be given to that derived from the Septuagint as it has been satisfactorily proved that the Jews in the second century when all or nearly all the Hebrew manuscripts were in their possession, out of hatred to the Christian religion and to weaken the Christians, argument, wilfully and maliciously corrupted the chronology of the Hebrew text. The Septuagint version was taken from the Hebrew before the latter was corrupted and of course is more reliable. The Septuagint about this time was mostly in the possession of the Christians and was commonly quoted by the evangelists and the apostles; the Hebrew, rarely. Josephus, who lived before the Hebrew text was corrupted, agrees with the Septuagint in his chronology and not with the modern corrupted Hebrew text which was followed by Usher. The probability then is (for we have no certainty) that our Saviour was born in the year of the world 5411.

We have just as little knowledge of the month our Saviour was born in as we have of the year. Twelve learned men have put his birth in the twelve months of the year, and each one has as good arguments to support his opinion as any other one of the twelve; with this difference, it is certain it occurred in one of the summer months, and not in the winter. Of this we are absolutely certain, because St. Luke informs us that it occurred when the shepherds watched their flocks at night. It was the custom of the Jews to send their flocks out to pasture in the spring of the year and bring them home when the first rain began, which usually took place in October. The shepherds to protect their flocks from the depredations of wolves, foxes and robbers watched them day and night during the summer months. But when the cold weather came they housed their flocks and slept in their own houses at night. This historical fact makes it certain that Jesus was not born on the 25th day of December, but some time during the summer. As the inspired writers have not given us the least clue to enable us to find out the day of the month or the month of the year of our Saviour's birth, it is manifest that God intended we should not know it, which proves that such knowledge would be either no use or an injury to us.

Several arguments might be used to show that Christmas as commonly understood, should be entirely abandoned.

1. That which we have no Divine authority to do is better to be left undone.

2. The observance of Christmas day would seem to be forbidden. Gal. iv. 9–11. Col. ii. 6.

3. The keeping of it has a tendency to lessen the respect due to the Sabbath day which is the only day required to be kept by Divine authority.

4. The observance of Christmas day opens a door for indolence and profanity. We read in the Scriptures of only two birthdays being kept, viz., that of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, on which he hanged his chief baker. (Gen. xl. 20.) and that of Herod, on which he cut off the head of John the Baptist. (Matt. xiv. 6. Mark vi. 21.) More licentiousness, drunkenness, misdemeanors and murders have been committed on Christmas day than on any other ten days of the year. I have observed this for many years past. On last Christmas day one man was stabbed near Dahlonega, Ga ; two were crippled for life in Nashville, Tenn.; and two were killed in a town in Ohio; the one was shot in a drunken spree, the other was hanged by a mob. All these considerations taken together induce me to believe that the institution of Christmas was the work of demons and ought to be abandoned at once.

Secret Societies and Christianity.

BY REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.
(A Seceder.)

We hope it will not be deemed impertinent to inquire into the relations between some of the well-known and widely-extended secret societies and Christianity. It may be presumed that none whom we address, whatever may be their relations to the secret societies, will object to an examination of these in the light of the Gospel. To some, no doubt, the very juxtaposition of the terms in our heading will suggest a hostile intention upon secret societies, but we desire to say in the beginning that against any of the societies simply as secret we have little objections. We have sometimes heard and read attacks upon them on the ground of their secrecy, which we felt were either wanting in force, or if their positions were admitted, they were equally hostile to the concealment of any matter from public notoriety, however unfit or injurious to be known. There can be no impropriety, much less a sin, in concealing what it is of no use to others to know. We suspect—and that, too, from inside information—that very much, if not all, that is secret in the societies, is of no public concern whatever, and it betrays a weak curiosity to suppose there is. On the contrary, we think that it is only the dignity which secrecy gives to anything in the minds of persons of a prying and credulous disposition that saves the secrets of the societies from manifest puerility, if not contempt. What are they, after all, but certain grips, passwords, signs, symbols, more or less significant, invented by men fond of such things, by means of which the members recognize each other and distinguish themselves from those who are not? If there are persons who can be entertained by these trifles and can be saved from something worse by joining the societies of which they are the safeguads, we have no objections on this ground.

But there is a thing or two which we do not regard as quite so innocent. These brotherhoods pretend to be religious. Some of the most "ancient and accepted" claim the Bible as sanctioning, if not authorizing, their existence and labors. They take their terrible oaths of secrecy upon it, they read from it in their lodge work as a part of their ritual, they carry it in their public processions, they pray and address God as their "Grand Master," the "Great Architect;" speak of heaven as a "Lodge," lay the corner-stones of Christian churches, have their chaplains, and, strangely, these are sometimes Christian ministers, and sometimes men of no religion, and sometimes, too, men of notoriously immoral habits. They claim to do the works of piety—they visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction—and this, too, in a manner much more certain and liberal than the church itself—alas that this should ever be so!—and in general, to be very benevolent. It is true that they often give back to a brother in need some of the money which he paid in, and in case of his death, like some other much better insurance company, they pay something to his family. But as for the piety or benevolence of such giving, we have only to say that it seems to us a little like the same thing in an insurance company, only we would prefer the insurance company, even the "Minister's League," to that. But their religion—it is this of which we wish to speak. We will take for example the Masonic fraternity, the most ancient, and without disparagement, perhaps, the most reputable and religious of all the fraternities. And now, without personal arrogance, we may claim for this secret society, the first we ever joined, what we think even its enemies must concede, that it gives a title of all that it possesses to its own members; and that its members are generally neither "extortioners nor unjust;" that it prays oft and thus leads many of its more ardent admirers to claim that it is as good as the church of Christ, if not better. But our own grand objection to its religion is that it is anti-Christian, that its prayers are blasphemous, that its use of the Bible is sacriligious, and the whole a compound of Judaism and Paganism.

1. Its religion is anti-Christian.—Perhaps it would be thought sufficient to say that it is unchristian, which might simply mean that, like many other organizations, it does not profess any connection with Christianity. But to speak after the manner of the Bible, it is anti-Christian. Masonry, with all its religion, studiously avoids the name of Christ. It does not recognize him in any capacity. Indeed, it does not know that "Jesus Christ has come in the flesh;" and hence, if the Bible, over which it swears so much, may be taken as authority, Masonry is not of God, and is anti-Christian. "Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God, and this is that spirit of anti-Christ." (I John iv. 3.) Moreover, since its prayers make no mention of him, they are simply deistical. How can a Christian minister or any Christian man address such prayers to God? And what has Masonry to do with the laying of the corner-stones of Christian churches, or burying the dead who die in the Lord? Does it not reject the "chief corner-stone," and deny the Lord that bought us? This the Bible, which Masonry carries when it goes abroad in its gaudy processions, calls a "damnable heresy." And if it seems not to be more uncharitable than the Bible is, and pressing the matter too much, we might say that Masonry—not its many truly pious, but mistaken adherents—is a damnable heritic.

2. Its prayers are blasphemous.—We make this point not on the ground that notoriously immoral men, who make no profession of religion, sometimes publically officiate in offering them, but on the ground already adduced, that they ignore Christ whilst assuming to address God in the way of worship. "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." "He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father."

3- Its use of the Bible is sacriligious.—It profanes this book by its horrid and barbarous oaths of secrecy taken upon it. The initiate invokes upon himself penalties in case of breach of his oath, which every merciful and human sentiment of the Bible utterly abhors, which insults human nature, made in the image of God, shocks every feeling of piety, and would degrade even the Modoc Indians below the savage level to which their barbarity has thus far consigned them, if they could be imagined bad enough to execute them. We say this deliberately and advisedly, and ask whether it be not sacriligious to use the Bible in the administering and taking of such an oath—oaths—for, as if one were not enough, many of the same kind are taken! The forced and impertinent applications of Scripture to Masonic "work" in the lodge, grates harshly upon the ears of those who have been accustomed to an honest hearing and reading of the Word.

4. The whole is a compound of Judaism and Paganism.—Masonry, ignoring Christ, goes back professedly to the time of Solomon, and seeks its origin in transactions about the building of the temple between the Jewish king and Hiram, King of Tyre, who was a heathen. We are not careful to inquire into such an origin for Masonry. Josephus says that Solomon and Hiram "were wont to exchange enigmas with each other," and may have invented Masonry. But whether or not, it is at least so contrived that a modern Jew and Mohammedan, or Turk, could adopt its creed and sit without offense in a lodge of workmen, "ancient, free and accepted Masons," constituted as our lodges largely are—of men professing Christianity.

We have spoken particularly of Masonry, but only as an example, as it undoubtedly is a model of all the more modern secret societies. We are fully persuaded, however, that some of the specific charges which we have made, do not apply at all in some cases, only in a modified degree, in others, to a number of the more recent fraternities.

We are the more confirmed in the grounds of our objections, since we know that they can have no trace of their origin in any dislike or any individuals connected with the orders. The only remembrance we can have of them is of their too partial kindness in receiving us, and of too long detaining us by their attractive fellowship in such unholy bonds. We can only ask those whom we deserted long ago in these fraternities to consider our accusations as bearing against the orders and not its many excellent and esteemed members.

The grangers' effort to protect farmers against speculators are as mistaken as their secret society principle. Wrong is never righted by setting another wrong against it. How the business prospers may be seen from the following paragraph which appeared in the Springfield Republican: "The Illinois grangers do not seem to be very successful as store-keepers. Out of two hundred stores started in that State all but nine have gone up the spout. The grangers don't 'hop the counter, worth a cent, which shows that a farmer, as well as other persons, should stick to his own business." The best way is for each to pursue faithfully the calling which Providence has assigned him, and leave the results to God.—Lutheran Standard.

Progress of Freemasonry.

From the N. Y. Daily Witness.

To the Editor New York Witness:

See enclosed report of the Masonic fraternity and weep for the miserable whelps who are wasting their puny strength in endeavoring to injure it.

Yours, &c., GEORGE JONES.

New York, Oct. 26, 1874.

The following is the report enclosed by our correspondent:

There are 43 Gr. Lodges in the United States and 5 in British America, maknig in all 48, with 8,645 subordinate lodges and 554,758 members according to the last received annual returns in the published proceedings. And yet fanatics think they can shake this mighty institution and make it totter. "Woe to the man on whom this stone shall fall, for it shall grind him to powder," and he that falleth upon it shall be broken.

REMARKS.

The above report of the progress of Masonry was sent in the letter which precedes it, and both are eminently suited to each other. The report appropriates for Masonry the language used by Christ concerning himself, a blasphemy which is of a piece with other pretentions of that emiently pretentious system. The "miserable, puny whelps," spoken of by Mr. Jones, are such men as President Finney, of Oberlin, (who has probably brought more souls to Christ than any other living man), and President Blanchard, of Wheaton College, Illinois, men who in moral worth outweigh, we think, all the Grand Masters of Masonry that ever lived, including the Earl of Ripon and Prince of Wales.

The numbers who join the Masonic ranks, either through ignorance or interested motives, are no proof of the excellence of the institution, but rather a presumption of its accordance with the Broad Road mentioned in Scripture, where many walk together.

The animus of the foregoing paragraph and letter should surely open the eyes of all ministers and other good men who have been drawn into Masonic lodges, and induce them to come out and be separate from an institution all of whose instincts and influences are in opposition to vital religion.

A candidate for admission into a secret society must have a fearful idea of the reality of the racks, the gridirons, the chains, the precipices, the howling of devils, and the mouth-made vows, and the other solemn ceremonies and ridiculous situations of an initiation, to have them affect his mind to any dangerous degree. The Sons of Malta probably brought initiation to the highest point as a work of art, and woe betide the poor candidate who attempted to put on dignity. But the "ritual" of that order was elastic, and was made up as the ceremony went along, and was adapted to the temperament and habits and reputation of the initiated. We only wonder that the Sons of Malta were not prosecuted for making men promise all sorts of things. But they escaped, and we fancy the Louisville Knights of Pythias will go acquit of any intention of harm, and will not be held responsible for the vivid imagination of a weak-minded candidate for the honors of admittance to the order, over the rough way the initiated are made to travel to reach the full effulgence of the order. There is no other way of arriving at the knowledge of the secrets of such bodies save by cold water douches, blanket tossings, barked shins, amid the clanking of chains and the moan of wicked spirits.—Cleveland Daily.

Our Sabbaths.

The Sabbath, of divine right, belongs to us. No power has the right to take it from us. It is a wrong when any one interferes, unnecessarily, with another's enjoyment of its privileges. The ordinance of the Sabbath is one of the most marked expressions of the Creator's benevolent thoughtfulness as to the wants of the world. It imposes a restriction upon certain things; and yet it is far more the expression of a privilege, with a benediction upon it. Ordained at the creation of man, it was solemnly sanctioned anew at the giving of the Law in the Wilderness, was explicitly re-affirmed by our Saviour, and had the crowning grace put upon it by the change in its calendar reckoning, from the last to the first day of the week, in commemoration of our Saviour's resurrection from the dead. The law of the Sabbath is, therefore, now twice and three times obligatory, even as the significance and blessedness of its privileges have been correspondingly enhanced. Experience, on the largest scale, as to individuals, families, and nations, has attested its priceless value. The American Sabbath, with its civil immunities and sacred customs, is one of the most valuable of all our national institutions. The destruction of these would, we believe, be followed by the loss, more or less suddenly, of all that is best in our national character and peculiar institutions.

Is there any danger of this loss? We are free to say that we think there is. We are no alarmists, frightened at one-sided pictures of things. We at all events aim to keep in view the tendencies and counter-tendencies of our time. We are aware of the cheering growth of all our religious denominations, of the wonderful advances made in the matter of Bible study in connection with the churches of the country, and the deep hold which all manner of Christian enterprise and institution have upon the hearts of our people—at least upon a very large portion of our people. But we are a conglomerate people. Europe overshadows New England. We are no longer isolated. All the world is at our doors; and what is now all the world, the religious and the irreligious, is contributing to the vital influences that go to determine our national life. This infusion of foreign nations is going on everywhere. The pressure of imported influences is universal, constant, immense, and too little appreciated. The most powerful influences are often the most silent. But Christians ought to be aware of these insiduous causes, and ought to resist them at the start, and all the while. A day does not bring forth a transformation; but a generation may. There is serious peril in the growing laxness of Sabbath observance. We cannot compel others to keep the Sabbath holy; but all the more carefully should we hallow it. We may not be able to compel railway managers to cease desecrating the Lord's day by the running of trains, but we ought to lift up our voices in persistent defence of a divine ordinance at once so sacred and so vital to the wellfare of the State. If they will do wrong it shall not be with our endorsement or even implied approval. Denunciation will not avail; and we can easily dispense with that, since it is the most futile of all persuasives. But it would be treason to the truth if Christians should, for any reason, fail to stand up for the truth.

But what of the Sunday papers? We cannot see any sound justification of them. They do not need to be. The Saturday editions might contain all that is now peculiar to the Sunday edition, and furnish plenty of reading for the Sabbath. That the Sunday papers are obliged, out of difference to the better class of their readers, to put in so much that is religious and otherwise excellent, is, of course, matter for gratulation; but we fear the "gift-bearing Greeks." These papers are mainly filled with matter that is of a wholly secular nature. In spite of the good things in them, they are doing a great deal to break down the wholesome sanctity of our Sabbaths.

Because we cannot legislate men into the habit of hallowing the Lord's day, we need not despair. It is true, the laws can, and clearly ought to, secure to every citizen his right to its rest and religious uses. It is, in fact, a monstrous perversion of the notion of civil rights, for the government to say to the courts, for instance, that they shall transact no business on Sunday, and then turning to the keepers of grog-shops, inform them that they shall be allowed to turn the day into turmoil. But while the enforcement of right laws is to be duly insisted upon, it remains that the most effectual way of perpetuating and extending the better observance of our Sabbaths will be for Christian families to hallow it so heartily, and use it so earnestly and yet so thoroughly joyously, that it shall commend itself to others irresistibly, as something most sweet, most reasonable, most sacred, most helpful to good living and happy homes. Between heartless rigor and equally heartless laxity there is a golden mean, according to which the Sabbath, that was made for man, may be rendered naturally and divinely useful to us.—The Advance.

It is never to be forgotten that religion and religious worship do not consist in an excited imagination, and the feelings that flow from it, but in very different qualities: in faith, in adoration, in penitence, in love. All show, all music, which tend to raise up mere sensuous images, have an earthward instead of a heavenward tendency. The religion of stained glass and altar cloths, of vestments and processions, the worship of which church architecture is the body and music the soul, may be fitted to kindle the mind into a sort of excitment, but it is with strange fire and not with fire from off the altar, and it vanishes in smoke and incense and ascends not to the ear of God in heaven.

McCOSH.

SECULAR CHURCHES.—"An elegant and costly edifice in which to trifle away a weekly hour of holy time; select society in the pews, artistic music in the organ loft, and a smooth-tongued preacher in the pulpit, these are relied upon to swell the pew-rents and insure financial prosperity. In other churches, where the satire on Christianity is not so palpable, there are still found not a few who seem to rely on the number of attendants, the attractiveness of the services, and the fullness of the treasury as the conditions of ecclesiastical prosperity. To the well instructed Christian the tokens of such a spirit in the church are painful and alarming. The church has but one source of power, and one condition of success—the presence and the working of the Holy Ghost. 'Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord.' With his aid, she triumphs in spite of the want of every external advantage. Without his help, every effort, howsoever suppported, issues in failure and loss.—Statesman.

One of the best tonics in a Christian church is the custom of regular and general giving on the part of its members. The world is broad and full of moral wants, and Christian men and women are the only ones to supply those wants. Ministers of the Gospel must be supported; Sabbath-schools must be organized and equipped; the Gospel must be sent to the heathen; churches must be built, colleges endowed, benevolent institutions maintained, and the necessary expenditures of religious services provided for. All this is done in the present age by the one commodity—money. The root of all evil is the love of money, not money itself. He who saves during the week that he may pay his share each Sabbath toward the promotion of some noble enterprise, does well. Such giving is twice blest. It blesses him that gives as well as him that receives. A church that is supported by the sacrifices of a few, while the many stand aloft from bearing the burdens, is sure to be an unthrifty church. The habit of giving at regular intervals as the Lord has prospered one, is a blessed habit. It may be that this one can spare a hundred dollars and that one but a hundred cents, and yet the former amount may involve less sacrifice than the latter. In the estimation of the perfect judgment of Christ, the widow gave more than all the rich benefactors of the temple, because her act involved more sacrifice.—N. W. Advocate.

Indiana State Anti-Secret Association.

The State Anti-Secret Association of Indiana held its first annual meeting in Dublin, Wayne county, on the 28th and 29th of October, 1874, in the United Brethren church. The meeting assembled at 10 o'clock, A. M., on Wednesday. After calling the house to order, the President read the 3d chapter of Colossians, which was followed by prayer by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and the singing of a hymn.

On proceeding to business, a Committee on Enrollment was appointed, composed of Isaac N. Ware and Emma A. Wallace.

The work of enrollment of delegates and friends being accomplished, the following committees were formed:

On Resolutions.—W. A. Wallace, T. B. McCormick, and J. P. Stoddard.

On Nomination.—I. N. Ware, J. T. Kiggins, T. B. McCormick.

On Programme.—Peter Rich, Wilson Scroggy, J. P. Stoddard, W. A. Wallace.

On Revision of Constitution.—J. T. Kiggins, A. E. Evans, W. A. Wallace, S. B. Ervin, Merchant Kelly.

According to a partial report of the Committee on Programme, Rev. J. P. Stoddard occupied the remainder of the forenoon. The speaker employed the time in explaining a Masonic chart, showing the succession and relation of the thirty-three degrees, with remarks on lodge government.

Afternoon session met at half past 1 and opened with devotional exercises.

The State Agent made a partial report, which was received, as was also the report of the Treasurer.

No other business being ready, an excellent and pointed lecture was delivered by T. B. McCormick, who had taken three degrees of Masonry. His lecture abounded in interesting anecdotes of personal experience and encounters with members of the fraternity.

Remarks on financial matters were made by J P. Stoddard, J. T. Kiggins and W. A. Wallace.

In the evening the house was filled beyond its seating capacity, and the audience was entertained by an eloquent and powerful discourse by J. P. Stoddard, on the Nature and Principles of Masonic Government. The best of order prevailed.

On Thursday morning, at half past 8, the meeting was called to order, and opened by reading a part of the 4th chapter of 2d Timothy, followed by prayer by T. B. McCormick.

The State Agent completed his report of the labor for the past year, and called the attention to several encouraging features of the movement.

The report of the Corresponding Secretary, and an advisory letter from the same, were read. The special report was received, and the letter, having reference mainly to amendments to the Constitution, was referred to the Committee on Revision.

The remainder of the report was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The Committee on Nomination presented the following report which was adopted.

Pres., Rev. A. Butler, of Wayne Co.; Vice-presidents, Arthur Robinson, of Marion; J. M. Darby, of Miami; H. C. West, of Hamilton; David Baker, of Benton; Wm. Hoobler, of Fountain; T. B. McCormick, of Gibson; Jacob Schemmerhorn, of Spencer; Wilson Milligan of Jay; Hardy Wray, of Bartholomew; Rev. A. Rector, of Delaware; A. E. Evans, of Wayne; Isaac Elliott, of Grant; J. T. Horne, of Huntington; ——Bruce, of Dearborn; ——, of Allen; Jacob Wolford, of DeKalb; P. H. Butler, of Steuben; S. L. Cook, of Noble; Samuel Engle, of Shelby; H. Burr, of Harrison; Wm. Givens, of Clay; W. T. Troop, of Vanderburgh; Lewis Wilson, of Pike; M. Kelly, of Fayette; H. C. Miller, of Union; Alfred Connet, of Greene, John Robinson, of Tippecanoe; Treasurer, Peter Rich, of Hamilton; Recording Secretary, Wm. Small, of Miami; Corresponding Secretary, W. A. Wallace, of Fayette.

J. T. Kiggins moved that the Committee on Revision be permitted to make a partial report, and be continued to make a full report at the next annual meeting of the Association. On motion of W. M. Givens, after some discussion the former motion was laid on the table for future action.

The Committee on Resolutions reported. J. T. Kiggins moved that the report be received, and adopted item by item, which was carried. It was also moved and carried that participants in the discussion of the resolutions be limited to five minutes, and that secret order men present be invited to take part.

After some criticism and remarks by W. M. Givens, T. B. McCormick, J. P. Stoddard, J. T. Kiggins and W. A. Wallace, the 1st and 2d resolutions were adopted. The hour of noon having arrived, the meeting adjourned to re-assemble at half past 1 P. M.

The afternoon session was opened with devotional exercies, conducted by W. M. Givens.

On motion of A. E. Evans, the further consideration of the resolutions was deferred till after action on other usiness.

The report of the Committee on Finance was read and approved. Remarks were made by J. P. Stoddard, J. Fall, C. G. A. Gantzekow, W. M. Givens and J. T. Kiggins. On motion of Mr. Gantzekow, a subscription of funds for the lecture work was taken up in pledges, which amounted to $315.

The Committee on Revision proposed that the 5th article of the Constitution be repealed, and that the 3d article have inserted after "Treasurer" the amendment, "and an Executive Committee of five members, three of whom shall be a quorum to transact business." Also that the 8th article be made to read, "Any ecclesiastical organization within the State of Indiana shall be entitled to representation, and all associations auxiliary to the State Association shall be represented by one or more delegates in this body." Amendments approved.

The further revision of the Constitution was referred to the proper committee to be reported on at the next annual meeting of the Association.

According to previous announcement, an able lecture was given by W. M. Givens, who gave some of his reasons, based on religious grounds, for opposing Masonry. Pointed and conclusive quotations were made direct from standard Masonic authors.

At the close of the lecture the following were elected an Executive Committee: Wm. Small, Wm. Hall, Geo. W. Hamp, Halleck Floyd, and Thos. Baldwin.

The resolutions were then taken up for final action. As time would not permit extended discussion, it was moved they be adopted as a whole. It was proposed that the 3d resolution be amended by striking out the clause, "and that we ought not knowingly to commune at the Sacrament with those who profess the Masonic faith, or worship at any secret altar." A discussion arose, growing more out of a difference of opinion on the subject of communion than out of direct opposition to the principle set forth in the clause. T. B. McCormick, W. A. Wallace and J. P. Stoddard opposed the amendment, while W. M. Givens, J. T. Kiggins, and a gentleman whose name is not known, favored it. The amendment passed and the clause was stricken out.

Some exception was taken by Rev. A. Butler to the Resolutions on Woman's Rights, but the Preamble and Resolutions were all passed, with the modification specified.

On motion of W. M. Givens, Marion was designated as the place for holding the next annual meeting, and the time left to the Executive Committee, who are also empowered to change the location, provided sufficient reasons be given.

Before the evening exercises opened, W. A. Wallace spoke on the absolute truthfulness of the expositions of Masonry and Odd-fellowship, and remarked that God has given the church the power to know everything that fallen men can devise, and that no secret society can remain secret any great length of time. J. T. Kiggins presented the claims of the Christian Cynosure to public and increased patronage, and offered the following resolution which was passed:

Resolved, That we rejoice in the increased circulation of the Cynosure in our State and elsewhere; that we recognize in it an able and efficient exponent and advocate of our anti-seerecy reform; and that we will seek to extend its circulation by presenting it to our friends, and securing subscribers whenever practicable.

The principle discourse of the evening was delivered by T. B. McCormick, from the words, "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." Following this, short speeches were made by J. T. Kiggins and J. P. Stoddard.

The Association adjourned with singing the Doxology, and benediction by J. P. Stoddard.

The number of delegates and friends from different parts of the State was not large, but the attendence from the town and neighborhood was very good, especially at the evening sessions. Excellent order prevailed, and a genuine interest in the deliberations and lectures was encouragingly manifested.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the good people of Dublin, for their generous hospitality in entertaining the delegates and others; and we trust that the people of Dublin will not prevent the light which is breaking in upon them to be shut out by the dark clouds of Masonic impudence and sophistry.

Field Notes from the Indiana Agent.

New Paris, O., Oct. 26, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:—Leaving Dora, Ind., on the 11th, I preached in the morning in the U. B. church at Lincolnville to a large and very attentive audience on "The Religion of the Lodges." Many of the dear friends expressed to me their warm interest in the cause by inviting me to return, and to visit them at their houses. A few of them had the art of "giving the grip" in a peculiar and not uninteresting manner; for they left in my hand, after shaking it heartily, not the "mark of the beast," but —marks of their appreciation of the work in the form of one dollar notes, some less; and good Bro. Large, whose name indicates the quality of his soul, gave me three dollars, while Bro. Gibb gave me five. Bro. Gibb is growing old, and knows all about the Morgan times, having lived in New York not far from the place where Morgan was murdered. For their kindness and hospitality toward me, in taking me into their houses and helping me on my way, these dear brethren and their families, along with brethren Mathews, Thomas, Ketner and others, are entitled to my grateful remembrance.

From this place a good brother took his carriage and conveyed me to Mount Pleasant Chapel, (U. B.) seven miles south, where arrangements were made for me to speak in the evening, which I did to a respectful and quite numerous audience. A meeting was announced for the following evening. After the lecture I stayed with the kind family of Bro. Ketner, formerly one of the presiding elders of the White River Conference of the U. B. church. Brother K. is quite extensively known as a radical opposer of the secret orders. Indeed, I may say truly that the White River Conference is almost a unit in its loyalty to the church in opposing the secret devil. They are proud of Bro. Milton Wright, editor of the Telescope, who is one of their members, and represents them well on this question. On Monday evening the audience had increased and the meeting was one of interest. In the introduction of my lecture I proved that Masonry was not a benevolent institution, by showing, that, before the individual can be entitled to any of the advantages or benefits peculiar to the order, he must pay the money into its coffers. I put it in these words: "The individual seeking admission must rap at the door of the fraternity with his money in his hand." I repeated this language, when a Mr. Watson, a hoodwinked, cable-towed farmer, lost his precious jewel, a silent tongue, and exclaimed, "That's a mistake!" "What is a mistake?" said I. "You stated that a man must knock at the door with his money in his hand," he replied, "and I deny it. I have been there and know!" "Did you get in without paying your money first?" I asked. This he would not answer, and I explained, by saying, "I thank you for your correction, and now I shall expect you to correct any other mistakes that I make, as you have 'been there and know.'" I now proceeded to show the audience the kind of thing this Masonic quibble was by saying: "I acknowledge my mistake, ladies and gentlemen, he does not literally pay his money 'at the door' of the lodge, but he pays it before he gets to the door. He sends it up with petition for membership. Am I correct now, sir?" To this he answered never a word, and the audience laughed. I then proceeded to tell the audience how every Mason is prepared ("duly and truly"); how he is taken into the lodge; and the kinds of oaths he takes; asking Mr. Watson to correct any mistakes, and as he did not make any more attempts to correct me I told the audience "I thought I had done pretty well to speak two hours about the principles, oaths and ceremonies of Masonry, and only make one mistake, which Mr. Watson had testified to, and, of course, having been there, he knew."

On Tuesday, Bro. Ketner took his wagon and family, and accompanied me to my next appointment at Salem Chapel, (U. B.) nine miles south, and within two miles of Marion, in Grant Co. Here I spoke to a small but appreciative audience, and appointed another meeting for Wednesday evening. Here I met Rev. Halleck Floyd, who has a "good understanding," and who is warmly in sympathy with our movement. He made a very fine speech on secrecy the second evening, and being the U. B. presiding elder on this district his influence is a great auxiliary to the cause. Brother S. B. Ervin, the Corresponding Secretary of the Indiana Anti-secrecy Association is also one of the presiding elders of this (White River) Conference. With such men as Wright, Floyd, and Ervin at its head, this Conference may be considered intensely anti-secret,—thank God! What a contrast between these men, and others whom we meet, who are ever cringing and bowing to whatever worldly influence promises them popularity or money, and bending the pliant hinges of the knee before the devil, and his worshipful masters! The Dempsey Patterson Debate.

NEW GALILEE, Pa., Oct. 31, 1874.

The long looked-for debate between the infallible expounder and defender of Masonry, Dr. Dempsey, and Rev. Mr. Patterson, United Presbyterian, came off as per arrangement in this place on Tuesday, the 28th, at 10 A. M., and continued until Wednesday evening. Rev. Patterson having the affirmative proved his position from history, quoted largely from Mackey, showed that treason had been concocted in the lodges in the past; that they claimed to be the same in the present; also proved their antiquity false, their oaths a profanation of the ordinance and monstrous; their spirit revengeful and murderous; their charity a sham and deception.

Dr. Dempsey's fort was to throw dust. He wanted to argue the question in the abstract; claimed that secrecy per se is not wrong, that oath-binding per se is not wrong, and two rights could not make a wrong when united. He tried to keep away as far as possible from concrete cases. He denied the authenticity of all the books; claimed that all seceding Masons were perjured villains, not competent witnesses. He would not contend for the antiquity of the order; denied that they made any claim to be a religious society. He also claimed that the Psalms of David were as Christless as Masonic prayers and Scripture quotations.

How desperate must the cause be when a man will confront the plain declarations of Christ himself, who says "that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses and the Psalms concerning me!" How silly the argument, if even true, that because we use the Psalms as the spirit of God indicted them, therefore they have the right to expunge the name of the Saviour from the texts they pervert, lest they should offend Jews, skeptics, and infidels of whom their lodges are in a great measure composed, and forget the awful denunciation of the Saviour himself, who says that he who takes away "from the words of the book of this prophesy God will take away his part out of the book of life."

As Mr. Blanchard's address in this place last spring prevented many good men from joining the lodge, so this discussion will do much good in opening the eyes of our young men. The fraternity are whistling to heep their courage up. They looked as fierce as the "bulls of Bashan" during the debate, but God will in his own time rebuke them. J. A.

Resolutions of a Congregational Association.

At the late meeting of the Fox River Union at Plainfield, Ill., after discussion of the topic, "The Church's Responsibility for Social Reforms," the following resolutions were passed:

1st. Resolved, That we recognize the obligation of the Christian church to use all its moral power to reform society by discouraging all practices that are vicious or corrupting in their tendency, and by encouraging whatsoever is right and pure and lovely and of good report.

2d. Resolved, That in the providence of God, Christians seem especially called upon at the present time to employ every appropriate moral and legal measure within their reach to stay the progress of intemperance and to discourage the use of all intoxicating drinks.

3d. Resolved, That in our judgment all secret oath-bound societies, and especially the institution of Freemasonry, are not in harmony with the principles of Christianity, nor with our free republican institutions; and we earnestly recommend to our fellow Christians to stand aloof from all the entanglements of such organizations and to use their influence to discourage others from joining them.

Correspondence.

Notes from Iowa.

ELK, Decatur Co., Iowa.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I have been a resident of this county for seventeen years, and am twenty-nine years of age. I am not aware that I have been injured in any manner by any secret society, except through sympathy for others. And I would thrust from my mind the accounts of their proceedings which are recorded successively in the Cynosure were i not for the hope that by knowing them I may be the means of rescuing some from the snare and keeping others from being caught by it. And seeing that it is every man's duty to profit by the experience of others, I give you the following incidents:

About three years ago our county treasurer, S. C. Thompson, ran off and was found to be a defaulter to the amoun of about $18,000. Two of my neighbors, one a Mason, and the other an Anti-mason, were talking one day about Thompson's defalcation. The latter said, "You Masons know where T. is. Why don't you bring him back?" The Mason answered, "We don't want him back." Another man said he knew where T. was, and would bring him back for a reasonable amount of money. But the majority of our county officers being Masons a their dupes, there were but faint efforts made to bring him back. The editor of the Decatur Co. Journal, P. O. James, dealt heavy blows against the court-house ring, composed of S. C. Thompson aforesaid and two or three more of the county officers, exposing by public print the dishonesty practiced by it. Not long after this exposure the said editor started from Des Moines to go to his home in Leon, and we have not heard of him since. Query: Could not the same law which murdered Wm. Morgan have murdered P. O. James, and for the same reason, viz., making known to the uninitiated the tricks enacted and sanctioned by the members of the Masonic fraternity?

It is a part of the Christian's business to oppose the progress of such crimes. The Anti-masons in this county say that a man who will oppose Masonry cannot get an office. Therefore in order to overthrow this deceptive power which says it is not political, and yet is so, we must organize a political party professing to be what it is, and by act and profession be opposed to it.

ANOTHER INCIDENT.

It seems strange that a man who is a preacher of the Gospel and who has spoken and acted in opposition to secrecy for several years, should say by his example "if you can save more money by joining a secret society you are justified in doing so." Yet such seems to be the suggestion of Ira B. Ryan. I will state as correctly as I can the occasion for this act, as told by Ryan and as I believe it to be. About seven years ago, Ryan bought of Sam. Harrow, of Leon, a stock of store goods, and paid the full amount asked, in several payments. Soon after the receipt of the last payment, said Harrow took the goods by a writ, claiming that he had not received payment. Ryan entered suit against Harrow. Ryan saw that the officers of the law were secretists, but why should he expect to gain anything by joining the Odd-fellows when he knew that every prominent O. F. in the county was aware of the position he held against the order. Notwithstanding he joined them.

The suit went from one court to another, and now Harrow and his sureties are worth nothing, some of them being a part of the court-house ring referred to above. And after seven years lawing and spending one good farm and property in Leon, it is said Ryan will get nothing. So much for a surrender to secrecy. I believe that opposition to secrecy will admit of no suspension for the goods of this world, for by such a course we lose the sympathy and aid of the friends we have made, and can receive none from an unforgiving opponent with whom we have been in controversy.

THE GRANGE.

This society had the name of collecting the largest congregation about a year ago at their harvest feast that was ever in this county. It had recently organized and many of its members were unaware of its real object. Last Thursday was the day for their annual gathering this year. There was about half as many present as there was at their meeting last year. One of their speakers was Mr. Day, of Marshaltown. He divested the grange of every political tendency, then referred to the progress made by it in California, and commended it. Another of the speakers was Rev. Mr. Wilson, M. E. minister of Leon. He took from religion all that would cause a sad expression of countenance, and wedded it to the gayety of earth.

Many members of the grange here are tired of it. Some on account of immoral conduct and bodily abuse practiced by other members, and some because it meddles with politics. The Republican party is opposed to it because the Democrats have organized a political party from it.

I believe that one of the existing parties is as good as the other when both are under the dominion of secrecy; therefore I will labor for the formation of a new party opposed to them. The growth of such a party will be slow which will be an evidence of its durability.

That secret societies have some good objects, I do not doubt. He is a very bad man who has never done a commendable act. But how can a man, especially a Christian man, look over their record and explain away, and justify the villainy that they have committed, and say they are worthy of the patronage of good men?

AN OLD LIFE LONG METHODIST FORSAKES THE M. E. CHURCH.

Mr. Wheeler, the writer of the two letters below, is a much respected farmer and consistent Christian. He is no come-outer, but is in an anti-secret Methodist church. Will not the leaders of the great Methodist Episcopal church be wise in time and cease to tamper and trifle with the very best conscience in their membership, who are sure to follow Mr. Wheeler unless they get relief. "There is no wisdom nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord." Mr. Wheeler's first letter lay for months unanswered and the paper continued to come. He then wrote to the publishing agent to stop it and the editor, Mr. Hoyt replied.

WHEATON, Nov. 24, 1873.

Rev. F. S. Hoyt:

DEAR SIR:—I have been impressed with the duty for some time of writing to you on a subject that is not the most pleasant to me.

I have been a regular reader of the Western Christian Advocate since the first number was published, now almost forty years ago. I have several times thought I would drop it as I did not feel satisfied with it. Last July when I read your comments on the Religious Telescope in regard to secretism, I felt I did not want the paper longer. When Masonry with all its wickedness and profanity and influence in the M. E. church is trying to cover up and hide its influence, I feel I cannot continue to support the paper or the church. When the character of Masonry is or may be known by every person who will read. . . .

And now I want the paper stopped and not sent to me any longer. It takes such grounds and says nothing against an institution that is not only corrupting the churches, but our courts of justice all over the land, that I feel it is not right to support it. . . .

I am aware that the most of the M. E. preachers are Masons. It is said that nine tenths of the preachers of the Rock River Conference are Masons. I understand that you have one of them in the Book Concern. He opposed having anything said in the Conference last year upon the subject of Masonry. It is treated as the subject of slavery was in the Conference several years ago, not allowed to be agitated in the Conference. But after God and Lincoln had abolished it the M. E. church claims to have been in advance of sister churches in the anti-slavery cause. Shame. I believe God is about to destroy Masonry as he did slavery. When the church tries to cover up the abominations of Masonry that are made known by hundreds of men who have been members and know all about it, and the men that hold a high position in the church say they know nothing about it is a shame to them as they may know if they will. . . . As we are to be brought into judgment with every secret thing whether it be good or evil, may we be prepared to render our account with joy and not with grief is my prayer. Yours in the love and fellowship of Christ.

AMOS W. WHEELER.

THE EDITORS REPLY.

BRO. WHEELER.— . . . I am not unwilling that men should reject Masonry; but I have this view about it: i will only be by raising the church to such a spiritual life as will render all such things childish. That once a great crime was perpetrated by Masons I have no doubt. I have seen in late years many Masons and known something of their doings. I think the church is the true home of the Christian, the true sphere for all his labor and influence, and that it is very unwise to attempt to find any other home or any other friendships but those which the church can furnish.

You must excuse me for any seeming neglect in not answering your letter.

Shall be glad to hear from you at any and at all times. Yours truly,

F. S. HOYT.

SECOND LETTER.

Messrs. Hitchcock and Walden:

I received a postal card from you a few days ago requesting me to renew my subscription for the Western Christian Advocate. . . . Before the last year was up I wrote to Mr. Hoyt to stop sending the paper, as I did not want it and gave him my reasons for it. A paper that will support an institution as wicked and Christless as Freemasonry, which rejects Christ in the lodge and swears its members by horrid oaths to conceal its wickedness and aid in crime, I cannot support. . . . . And now when it is so evident that Masonry controls the Annual and General Conferences of the M. E. church. is it any wonder that such abominations are reported in the church as we find from one end of the land to the other?

There is a day coming when the hearts of all men will be made known, and when deception and fraud cannot be hidden. You and I will then render our account. May we be prepared for that day is my prayer.

Yours respectfully,

AMOS W. WHEELER.

Kansas Politics.

COFFEYVILLE, Kansas, Oct. 28, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Inclosed is a short article from the Independence Kansan of Oct. 23, a paper published at the city of Independence in this county. You will see from this article that "the grip" of secret societies is becoming disgusting to men of sense, whether it be granges or Masons, for the grange is Masonry in disguise and so are the White Leagues of the South. It seems to me that if the government was to strike at Masonry the foundation of all secret combinations, that it would have less trouble with the Ku-Klux and White Leagues. This man Cunningham referred to in the article is a candidate on the Republican ticket for county superintendent of public schools. He is a Mason, a granger and is a member of the M. E. church, and I am informed that he acts as class-leader (I don't mean anything disrespectful of the church, but I do doubt any man's religion the moment I find that he is a member of a secret society). I am also informed that he is an Odd-fellow and Good Templar. I don't vouch for his being an Odd-fellow, but I think he must be a Good Templar for the reason that charges were made against him in the U. S. district Court at Topeka for elected if all the orders he belongs to prove true to him, for he is just the kind of man that generally gets office in Kansas. Yours, B.

It is being put to a thrifty use by some of our local politicians, and by none more so, than the man who petitioned the commissioners to fasten a fraudulent debt on the county of $200,000, to run up town lots and a drug trade. The soft handed granger Cunningham, is going about the county using the grip of the order of the Patrons of Husbandry, and one of his seven tongues to convince the honest members of that order that they should support him for two years, now that he is busted up in the drug trade and corner lot business. Granger, whoop up the individual who prostitutes your grips to such uses, and teach him to respect the policy of honesty, and the obligations of your order.

OUR MAIL.

W. M. Parry, Farmingdale, N. Y., writes:

"I have recently come to this place to labor as a Free Methodist preacher, and not finding the Cynosure in circulation, but secret oath-bound societies controling to an alarming extent, carrying darkness and ruin among the people, I began to scatter some old copies of the Christian Cynosure, and have begun to solicit subscriptions believing that it may be made a blessing under God in scattering light among the people and checking, to some extent, this giant evil.

Curtis Cogswell, Deer Lick, O., writes:

"I am going to New York next week, and shall take a lot of your books and tracts with me and do all I can on my journey to advocate the cause against secretism."

A. S. Hammond, Eauclaire, Wis., writes:

"I circulate my Cynosure and it is having a good effect. A man said to me the other day that the paper is one of the best published. Our fall elections here are waxing warm. Parties and anti-parties. The people are becoming alarmed. I hope soon to send you some new subscribers."

R. D. Nichols, Janesville, Mich., writes:

"May the Lord enable you to continue the Cynosure without abatement of size or quality of contents. May he help those who write for it and those who edit it—all this unless he secs a better way to set at liberty the bound and remove the obstacles to the free spread of his Word and hindrances to the embracing of the religion of Christ."

This friend is not a stranger to our readers, and accompanies his encouraging words with corresponding works.

Mr. J. H. Carpenter, Rockton, Ill., writes:

"Probably I shall be in at your convention next month."

We hope the Illinois subscribers will hold meetings and have delegates appointed and their expenses arranged for in all parts of the State. Remember to pray that the kingdom of Christ may be promoted and souls saved because of this meeting.

A Mayn, Promise City, Ia., writes:

"The Cynosure is doing a noble work. The first paper I read and is next my daily food."

Rufus Northway, Colebrook, O., writes:

"I intend to send you my renunciation of Masonry as soon as I can get time."

We shall be glad to receive it and many more from other seceding Masons.

R. H. Purvis, Glade Mills, Pa., writes:

"You may consider me a life subscriber. For if you continue as you have I will take it as long as I live."

J. P. Shattuck, E. Deering, Me., writes:

"I received your tracts in due season and am making quite a sensation in the distribution of them. As soon as I have a little more leisure to attend to it I shall try to get a number more of subscribers. People are even more willing to accept the truth than I expected."

"The common people heard him gladly" is said of Christ. We are encouraged by this friend's words.

D. R. Baker, Collegc Springs, Ia., writes:

"The cause is gaining in this community."

Jacob Warner, Oregon, Wis., writes under "term of subscription" on the renewal paper, "During Life."

Nelson Callander, Starrucca, Pa., writes:

"A few months since I saw an article in the Cynosure headed, 'Masonry Settles Pastors.' And I am prepared to say also Masonry unsettles pastors, as we have just had a case of that kind in our town; but in so doing they made an anti-Mason of said pastor"

A. M. Durfee, Sherman, N. Y., writes:

"The Masons and Odd-fellows have got up and are running a farmer's grange in Sherman of some two hundred and fifty members. I find the grangers more in favor of secret tomfoolery and deception than I was willing to believe."

E. J. Chalfant, York, Pa., writes:

"Would it not be well to change your notice of the "Tract fund" and put it on another page, and in larger type, and with a new appeal for funds, etc?"

We think it would. We hope thousands of tracts will this winter be put into the hands of persons who will read them. Read the extract from Rev. J. P. Shattuck's letter. There are thousands of people North, South, East and West who will receive them gladly and read them eagerly and to good purpose.

C. D. Brooks, Dunkirk, N. Y., writes:

Dear Cynosure,

"To me, cease not thy coming,
While still for right appealing;
Nor cease from sin reproving
While rings and clans abounding
Are church and state corrupting,
And honest men beguiling.
Ring out the truth and loudly call,
Till rings and clans shall crash and fall."

H. J. McMaster, Luana, Ia., writes:

"Your paper has the true ring and will do good where read."

Rev. E. Thomas, Oakland City, Ind., writes:

"I am still working for the paper and shall continue to do so. I have something to communicate to the paper when I have time to write."

Mr. Thomas has been requested by friends to publish a statement, and we shall look for something valuable.

Mrs. G. W. Hanks, Postville, Iowa, writes:

"I wish I could do more for the cause. I bid it God speed with all my heart."

Daniel K. Barrett, Jr., Gassett's Station, Vt., writes:

"I have seen the Christian Cynosure two or three times. I am heartily in sympathy with the work it is engaged in. . . Had I some tracts perhaps I might distribute a few to good effect. . . I am trying to do all I can in public and private to lead men from darkness to light, from error to truth."

David Dodds, Bakertown, Pa., writes:

"Since you discontinued the fortnightly I have been receiving the weekly Cynosure. I am much pleased with the change. We get so much more variety and general news that is interesting. I am a forty year Antimason. I endorse all the evils of the craft as exposed by the Cynosure. The whole system is bad and evil continually."

Abram N. King, Cherokee, Ia., writes:

"I have just arrived in this part of the country as a minister of Christ in the interest of the United Brethren church. I find secrecy everywhere; and as I desire to give the devil his just dues I wish some helps and among the rest I wish the Cynosue."

We hope this brother will send us news of the progress of his work occasionally for publication in the Cynosure.

Samuel Beedy, Cambridgeboro, Pa., writes:

"The glass of time with me is most run out. Age eighty-seven years. This is a hard spot. Freemasons all round me, A lodge-room in sight of my windows where they meet once in two weeks. I live in that region of country where Col. Miller lived who came so near losing his life with William Morgan. I was acquainted with him and his father and mother. His mother was an uncommonly smart woman. David Miller has been dead about ten years. His mother lived to about one hundred years. She outlived him. His brothers and sisters are all near here. I think none are Freemasons."

Thomas C. Radabaugh, Cambria Mills, Mich., writes:

"I can do without some other things, but not without the Cynosure. I prize it above all other papers. God bless you in your endeavors through it to do good. I am in the midst of lodge men, but my head is up, and I am still scattering what light I can. I hope to be able soon to send you some new subscribers."

Rev. A. W. Paul, Dundee, N. Y., writes: "I received those blank petition rolls night before last. Yesterday I took a little time from my great hurry and in a very short space of time I had down fourteen voters and twenty-one others, and I hope to send in more than a full list. While I was at our conference in Utica, (F. M.) Elder Barlow was around here lecturing. To say the least, his efforts were attended with excellent success everywhere in these parts. Those who were already Anti-masons were well stirred up by way of being put in remembrance. I will try to get all the subscribers I can for the Christian Cynosure."

We hope all who have received petition blanks will endeavor to obtain from two to five hundred names each. There are three months to collect them in. Please do thorough work.

LESSON XLVII.—NOV. 22, 1874.—THE ANOINTING AT BETHANY.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK xiv. 3-9. Commit 3-9; Primary verse 6.

3 And being in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head.

4 And there were some that had indigdation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made?

5 For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her.

6 And Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she has wrought a good work on me.

7 For ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good; but me ye have not always.

8 She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.

9 Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her."—VERSE 9.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

The title of our lesson, "The Anointing at Bethany," is to distinguish it from the previous anointing (probably at Nain) which is recorded by Luke (ch. vii. 36-50). Bethany was a little village on the eastern side of the Mount of Olives, about two miles from Jerusalem.

What is the first topic? Who are mentioned as holding a meeting? (verse 1.) Where did they meet? (Matt. xxvi. 3.) What did they decide? (verse 1.) Why not put him to death on the feast day? (verse 2.) This shows us how Jesus was regarded by them.

What is the second topic? Where was Jesus? (verse 3.) Why do you suppose he was called Simon the leper? Who else was at the supper? (John xii. 2. 3.) What did Martha and Lazarus do? What did Mary do? (verse 3.) How much ointment did she have? (John xii. 3.) What anointings are given in the Home Readings? Where did she anoint Jesus? (verse 3-8; John xii. 3.) What does David say of the Lord in Ps. xxiii. 5. Was the perfume strong? (John xii. 3.)

What is the third topic? Who asked the question in verse 4? (John xii. 4.) Why did he call it a waste? (verse 5.) Did he care for the poor? (John xii. 6.) What was the reason? How did they feel toward Mary? (verses 4, 5.) This was because they hated Jesus.

What is the fourth topic? What command is given in verse 6? What question? What vindication? What commendation in verse 8? What explanation? What did he say about the poor? (verse 7.) What about himself?

What is the fifth topic? Repeat the ninth verse. Has it been done? It is like a sweet perfume coming down through the centuries.

LESSONS. A broken heart is the true alabaster box; love is the delightful perfume. Jesus asks only this: Have you done what you can?—National Sunday-School Teacher.

A Lesson for Teachers.

The N. Y. Witness well applies a recent fearful illustration of the influence of bad company on Sabbath-school youth:

"To all Sabbath-school teachers the lamentable case of poor young Rigney, who was murdered by the drink forced upon him by boon companions in a Brooklyn saloon open for Sunday traffic, makes a forcible—irresistible appeal. Christian men and women, having charge of the senior and Bible classes in our schools, and thus possessing great influence in shaping the life character of the young people who listen to your words Sabbath after Sabbath,—you cannot afford to let such an illustration of the perils to which your scholars are exposed pass unnoticed. Hundreds of young men will leave the doors of our city schools tomorrow afternoon and go direct to the rum shop, many of them to remain there all the evening and far into the night. This is an awful statement, but it is a fact. In one of the best and most efficient Sabbath-schools in Brooklyn this is frequently the case with some of the senior scholars; and teachers are sometimes shocked to encounter young men on the street, in different stages of intoxication, who on Sundays sit in the classes and are most attentive and intelligent listeners. There is no disguishing the fact that strong drink is making fearful ravages, not only among the thousands of young men who in these great cities are friendless and alone, but also in the families of Christian parents, and amongst the scholars of earnest, faithful teachers. Let every Sabbath-school teacher tomorrow make special reference to the dangers which exist on every hand, give an earnest warning to resist temptation in the strength of God, to refuse the first glass and the first invitation to enter those places where the "infernal stuff" is sold—to remember, as Dr. Hepworth said in a recent address, that there are times in every man's life when to say "no" is heaven, and to say "yes" is hell. Let each Christian man and woman also prayerfully ask: "What is my own duty in this matter, and what is the influence which my example is exerting?"

Political Masonry.
[CONCLUDED.]

[From the Anti-masonic Review, 1831.]

Men wish Anti-masonry could only be a moral question. The work in your hand, kind reader, takes it so. But know, that your very moralist would be compelled to relinquish his labor, did not the spirit of inquiry aroused by making Anti-masonry political, keep him alive. At the polls, the question may be effectually settled without strife in a short time, and the whole subject die. Churches are saved, families are saved, and the country is saved, while free men go quietly to the ballot-box, and publicly put in their vote against secret Freemasonry, and banish it by ostracism. How else can we do? We have no pope in the country to excommunicate it by his decree. We have no emperor to abolish it by his will. We have no parliament capable of expelling, or restraining it. It is only for them to will, and it is done. Their voice distinctly heard at repeated elections in Monroe county has put away the Masonic charters from that country; the same voice heard in this city will shake the charters from the hands of Masons here, and it will everywhere banish Freemasonry from our soil. The question of Freemasonry is a painful one in many of its connections; but it is put, and must be put to the people, and to the whole people. We have repeatedly brought tit before moral men, and religious men alone. They listen, they burn, they act; but in one moment they run afoul of their pastor, their temperance president, or Howard benevolent brother, Freemasons, and they are palsied. They will still hear, but it is next to impossible to bring them to act, to countenance, or to sustain a public investigation of Freemasonry. The people have taken it up with their ballots, and with the ballots let them settle it.

And, what should be conclusive upon this point, the question has been a merely moral question for one hundred years; and, notwithstanding, the public by a great majority has always decided against Freemasonry, and refrained from its embrace, still the midnight thing has increased year by year. Consider this fact. It has been a moral question agitated by every neighborhood, and sometimes, as thirty years ago, briskly agitated in books and sermons and pamphlets. This moral disputation has always been of advantage to Freemasonry. It has brought the secret thing more into notice, and been an apology for its glorifying itself falsely with the names of all the excellent of the earth from Adam down. Any thing, Pandemonium, or Erebus itself, covered with a veil, and adorned with the names of Washington, Franklin, and La Fayette, and at the same time modestly inviting the young to lift the veil, and to taste of its pleasures, will possess allurements for all men, and will always be catching some. So we find it with Freemasonry. While we talk about it, and condemn it, as an immoral institution, ten thousand moral Masons differ with us, besides a hundred thousand immoral Masons. And these are more than enough to keep the institution alive, and to make it honorable, and give it respectability in the world.

Who is so blind as not to see, that in this way the question of Freemasonry is endless, and the life of the institution lasting as delusion and sin. The people have made it a moral question, and settled it long ago; but seeing that does not rid us of Freemasonry, the people are determined to carry their decision to the polls of the elections, and politically to establish their moral position. O glorious privilege, belonging only to Americans: the privilege of sealing their moral conclusions with the impress of the highest political power! O happy constitution of government, which collects in the ballot-box like an electrical battery, the scattered and almost imperceptible decision of the public will, and discharges it like the irresistible lightning of heaven upon the corrupt systems and indefensible opinions of past ages, and purifies the moral atmosphere by the energy of its political action! O blessed use of the elective franchise, when it is exercised not to exalt this citizen, or to prostrate that; and when, with a sovereignty almost divine, paying no respect to persons, it aims solely to uproot the deep foundations of error, and immorality, to destroy the works of darkness, and to expel from our Eden of social, political, and religious privileges, the lurking serpent, that great enemy of the church and of the Constitution, Freemasonry. We bless the God of our fathers, that he has given us a form of government by which the chaff of public opinion may be readily sifted from the wheat, by which the wicked inventions of wicked men, however entwined around the hearts of many upright citizens, and interwoven with all our social and civil relations, may be gently separated from the body politic, without violence or bloodshed, by the natural energy, and healthful operation of the constitution and the laws. We praise Him, who has the hearts of all men in his hands, that may use their elective franchise in a way to rebuke the proud lie which exalts itself among the most glorious societies of the age; that they have made it feel, and forced it to confess the power of public opinion concentrated by the ballot-box; and that while it has melted away in the focus of the political lens at Rochester, it softens throughout New York, and is excited in every State on our borders.

As nothing can be riper, so nothing can be fitter for destruction by the power of the ballot-box, than Freemasonry. Sober men may rejoice that they have a way at the polls to enforce their abhorrence of the impious system without disturbing the peace of the church, and all the haters of the vainglorious and deceitful institution may give their vote without contention or reproach, 'to put Freemasonry where it will stay put,' under the ban of public opinion, 'among the past misfortunes of our blessed country.'

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOV. 12, 1874.

Questions.

Do our friends realize the fact that the Cynosure has not paid current expenses for a single month since the paper was enlarged? Do they realize that November and December are probably as good months for canvassing as we have?

Do they realize that after the publishers have patiently waited to see whether their patrons will appreciate the paper by giving it a circulation sufficiently to sustain it, in its present size and form, if more money does not come in, it will have to go back to the old style?

A few friends are doing all they ought towards sustaining the paper, but we feel sure that there are hundreds of subscribers who are not doing what they can, what they fell that they should do towards its support. Will you get one new subscription each week for the paper?

Are you doing all you can towards sustaining it? Will you ever have a better time to work for the paper than to-day?

J. C. Graham, Viola, Ill., writes:

"MERCER Co., Ill., will have a delegate at your State Convention on the 18th inst. Local convention to-day, thinly attended by warm friends that wish to be represented there. May the Lord of the battle bless and lead that convention."

Is your county represented? Send your pastor and one or two others if possible. We hope the gentlemen will bring their wives when practicable.

C. A. Blanchard, Sec'y
Ill. State Association.

CONSOLIDATING THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The authors of the "National Congregational Council," Leonard Bacon and A. H. Quint, seem to hate the ground idea of Christian reform. They were converted to abolitionism, along with Benjamin Butler and Daniel Sickles, by the war; prior to which one was a proslavery Whig and the other a Buchanan Democrat. Neither of them, in their long and prominent pastorates, so far as we hear, has, by his labors, ever produced a revival or assailed a popular evil. Dr. Bacon protected the broad-gauge heresies of Bushnell when the good Dr. Hawes could not endure them. He, more than any other twenty public men, kept the New England churches from going into abolitionism, and so saving the earnest and originally honest "Come-outers." His whole stock-in-trade has been "Puritanism," and yet he has steadily run down Puritanism in numbers and in power. But, like all ministers without unction or earnest godliness, weak with the people, he has life-long, needed money to sustain his power and prominence. "Failing to worm himself into the Presidency of Yale College, which so offended him that he called Woolsey, in his sermon at his inauguration, "an inoffensive professor of Greek," he then concluded to go into the theological department of Yale, though he never was a theologian. And Beecher, in the Plymouth Church, raised the money to endow him (Bacon) and was rewarded by a Puritan lecture-ship in Yale!

Thus Dr. Leonard Bacon, almost without ministerial gifts, as Paul describes them, is able to put his cold and cunning hand on the young New England clergy; with Beecher to impart their fire and their elements of worldly success. Dr. Bacon's influence on young clergymen is seen in his two sons, Leonard W. and George B., who copy his spirit with changed methods. Leonard took a Presbyterian church, and wrote a mongrel Episcopal liturgy for it. George is broadest of the broad-gauge, and the author of a book on the Sabbath which wholly and in terms denies its divine authority. Both have cast off all semblance of Puritanism. Judged by the immediate and necessary effects of the movement, these two gentlemen would seem to have originated "The National Congregational Council," to keep the American Congregational churches out of the anti-secret and other reforms; and to cover Dr. Quint's position as "Grand Chaplain" and high priest of the lodge. They both seem to dread and hate the American Missionary Association as they hated and persecuted the reform in which, and the men by whom it originated. And, besides this, the American Missionary Association has warned its freedmen's churches to keep clear of secret societies, which hurts Quint with the lodge.

Under the name and plea of "Consolidation," and protecting Eastern capatalists from the necessity of discriminating between good and worthless colleges at the West, they helped start the College Society to kill the abolition and save the anti-abolition colleges.

At the late New Haven "Council," it was proposed to "consolidate" the American Missionary Association into the hands of men of pro-slavery, anti-reform antecedents! May God in mercy defeat this attempt to "consolidate" the Puritan churches of this land into the hands of men who, in the days of English Puritanism, would have been with Laud and Bonner, not with Robinson and Brewster. When the Congregational churches of this country go under the lead of a chaplain of Freemasons, they will be like the Pilgrim Monument at Plymouth, which is still level with the earth. But this "National Council" uncalled for by vote of the churches, is likely to fall still-born, as did the New England Society which was to elevate the colored race and kill off abolitionism. Dr. Bacon himself sees its nullity. He says of it in the last Advance: "The idea of sending messengers from all parts of the United States to sit and hear written dissertations, which might as well (and perhaps with greater advantage) be read at home in the family or in the closet, is an idea which forgets the arts of printing and the multidudinous newspapers, with the mails that carry them on wings of steam over the entire continent." But what can his Council do? They hate "sound doctrine" and reform. What is left them?

Ritualism.

The High Church tendencies of the Episcopalian denomination, which received so severe a rebuke in the recent General Convention in New York are probably not generally understood. After reading the following explanation of the ritualism from an exchange the action of the Convention will be appreciated. The defection of Bishop Cummings and the Reformed Episcopal church last year was doubtless influential in securing the rejection of Prof. Seymour and the passage of resolutions reproving ritualistic practices in the Convention: "Since the meeting of the General Episcopal Convention, in New York, every reader of the newspapers has learned of the discussion on the subject of ritualism in that body. While many have a slight knowledge of the word as applied to the Protestant Episcopal church of America, very few understand its full signification. A brief synopsis illustrative of the practices which obtain in advanced ritualistic churches will therefore be interesting.

On entering or leaving the church it is the custom to bow toward the altar. In passing in from the altar a genuflection (kneeling upon one knee) must be made. The devoted kneels and prays, both upon entering the church and at the close of the service, also when the clergy enter a prayer should be offered kneeling. The sign of the cross should be made before and after engaging in public and private prayer. If this does not satisfy one's pious devotion the sign may be made on entering the aisle, on kneeling in the pew, at the last clause of the absolution, at the last clause of the Lord's Prayer, at benedictions and invocations, at the "grace of our Lord," at the end of "Gloria in Excelsis," at the words "in the glory of God the Father," at the end of the sanctus and before and after partaking of the sacrament. During service a bow should be made at every mention of the name of Jesus, at the first verse of each Gloria Patri, at the verses "Holy, holy, Lord God of Sabbaoth," and "When Thou tookest upon Thee to deliver man," in the Te Deum, in the magnificat at the words "holy is his name," and at passages in the Apostles' and Nicene creeds too numerous to mention. Elaborate rules are laid down as to when and how the devotee should kneel, as to what stage in the service the worshiper may withdraw from the church.

In all ritualistic churches the real presence of Christ is believed to dwell in the sacramental elements; therefore the deepest adoration is enjoined upon the worshiper during the administration of the "Lord's broken body and shed blood." The elements are first received by the celebrant, then by the bishops, priests and deacons, then by the choir, then by the men and lastly by the women. A genuflection is made when the level of the chancel is reached in going up to the communlon. If the rail is full the communicant kneels upon the floor until there is a vacant place. The Lord's body is received upon the palm of the right hand, which is crossed over the left, and both are raised to the lips. The Lord's blood is carried to the lips by taking the chalice in both hands, the priest retaining hold of it. The communion over, the most devout form of leaving is to genuflect towards the altar and retire facing that object until the chancel steps are reached. No one must think of leaving the church until the clergy have entered the sacristy. Physical fasting is also commended during the self-examination which should precede communion. When and how incense should be used is also carefully defined. These are some of the most important rules prepared for the use of the church in America, compiled from the best Anglican authorities, and circulated during the secret session of the Convention at New York.

In the "Directorum Anglicanum," considered by extreme ritualists the best authority, we find the following:

'Also, if by negligence any of the blood be spilled upon a table fixed to the floor, the priest must take up the drop with his tongue and the place of the table must be scraped and the shavings burned with fire, and the ashes reserved with the relics beside the altar, and he to whom this has befallen must do penance forty days.

'Also, if a fly or spider, or any such thing, should fall into the chalice before consecration . . . the wine which is in the chalice ought to be poured out and the chalice washed and other wine and water put therein, to be consecrated. But if any of these contingencies befall after consecration, the fly or spider, or such like thing, should be warily taken, often times diligently washed between two fingers, and should then be burnt, and the ablutions, together with the burnt ashes, must be put into the piscina."

The evident belief of ritualists in transubstantiation, together with the innumerable bodily contortions, are a near approach to the elaborate ceremonies of the Romish church, and no wonder that those who love the simple heart-worship of the Low Church have uttered so strong a protest against ritualism in the New York Convention.

Send for extra copies of the Cynosure. We have a large number of copies of the Cynosure which we wish to send out free for canvassing purposes. Those who can use them to good advantage ought to have them. Do not let them lie idle on our shelves if they would be read in your community.

A long pull and a strong pull and a pull all together would cancel the Cynosure debt and get it on a paying basis. Now is the time to pull. Are you all ready?

NOTES.

—The First Church of Christ, the Wesleyan and, we believe, the Free Methodist church of Wheaton have appointed delegates to the State Convention in this city. There are many other churches which should do likewise on next Sabbath, if arrangements are not already made.

—Another non-fellowshipping Baptist church has come before the public in rejecting a member of the grange. Peter Shuttle, a Patron, applied for admission to the Baptist church of Gallatin, Tenn., and found that he could not hold membership at one and the same time in organizations one under the headship of Christ, the other of the devil.

—The Chicago Tribune gives the following biographical notice of a clergyman of this city: "The Rev. Henry G. Perry, Rector of All-Saints Episcopal church, Chicago, was recently reinstalled Grand Chaplain of the Masonic Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters for the State of Illinois, at their annual session in this city. The Rev. Mr. Perry is also a Knight Templar and Thirty-second degree Mason."

—The Religious Telescope speaks thus of a recent visit of our General Agent: "Rev. J. P. Stoddard, lecturer and general agent of the National Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies, visited us last week, while spending a night and morning in this city. He arrived late in the evening, unexpectedly to his friends, and was the guest of the Rev. Wm. Dillon, who made haste to invite in neighbors to hear, at his house, a short lecture from the lecturer. We were present, and were highly pleased with what we heard. We trust this 'small beginning' may introduce Bro. Stoddard to a future general hearing in our city, as he is a representative of which any cause might be proud."

—Rev. A. Crooks, of the American Wesleyan, known and loved by a large circle of our readers outside his denomination, reached his home in Syracuse on the 27th ult. The Wesleyan says of his convalesence: "He claims to be much better, and no doubt is, but he is coming up very slowly. He has been on the street a few times, and appeared, the ghost of his former self, at the office perhaps thrice since his return. He has lost thirty pounds from his two hundred and ten, and his physical strength is turned to the weakness of a child. His eyes seem large, his voice hollow, and his step unsteady. But his mind is clear, his thoughts active, and his soul growing brighter and more serene as he arises from the clouds and smoke of the battle toward the bliss of the everlasting gates. We do not believ that the Lord is about to take him home now, but only intends to show him both worlds from a point between. A point where the true value of the two appears more nearly correct than is usually manifest. May prayers still go up in clouds to heaven's windows for him."

—In an opinion not long ago given by Father Hyacinthe on the Jesuits and their evil power over France, we find the sentiment of thousands of godly men and women of America re-echoed in regard to the jesuitical lodge system of our own country. "There is no salvation for France," he says, "except in a powerful awakening of a religious sentiment. But that awakening is impossible as long as she is not cured, at whatever the cost, of the cancerous sore of superstition and hypocrisy which is personified in the order of Jesuits and their adherents. Upon this point my conviction cannot be shaken. Against such a formidable enemy as this we must combat with energy, not only until we have overthrown it, but until we have plucked it out by the roots! There will be hypocrites and evil-workers in the world always; but there should not be a kingdom of Jesuits substituted for the kingdom of Jesus Christ, our only King and Saviour."

The Illinois State Meeting—A Masonic Notice.

William Rounsville of Peoria, is editor of the Illinois department in the St. Louis Freemason. In the November number he reports the meeting of his Grand Lodge in this city, and having learned of the meeting of the State Association, in the midst of it he wanders off into the following beautifully Masonic strain; only it is not generally supposed that the Masonic lodge is a body of social reformers. That work its opponents assume. Delegates will please notice:

When a filthy cesspool is drained, the process always sets in motion the strange, unclean and horrible creatures that breed and crawl upon its bottom. When any cleansing of the body social takes place, there are always some opponents who foam out their own shame about it. If there is no bane without an antidote, it would seem that the converse is true, that there is no antidote, without a bane. Scarcely had the Communication of the Grand Lodge of Illinois come to a close, when an Anti-masonic meeting was called, to counteract the effect of that meeting of Masons. It is not to be wondered at, that these Anti-masons should be alarmed, if they are honest in their opposition to our order. Still less is it a matter of surprise that they are frightened if they are hypocrites. The concentration of two thousand delegates from all parts of the great State, representing in an eminent degree the morality, wealth, ability and influence in their respective locations, chosen themselves by those they represent for their superiority in their several communities, is an event not often occurring, and when it does take place, calculated to impress upon the minds of the opponents a very vivid idea of the moral and numerical power of the body they are fighting against. It is no matter of surprise, then, that the faithful allies of Blanchard, Philo Carpenter and Moses Pettengill should see their craft was in danger, and summon the clans to see what was feasible to be done in the premises. At this writing we have not learned what hell-broth they have concocted for Masonic lips. But we shall learn what it is in due time.

Resolutions Adopted by the Indiana State Association.

Resolved, 1. That all ministers of the Gospel, and all teachers of religion and morals, are bound by the law of God and the dignity and sacredness of their profession, and by the eternal interests of the people under their charge, to renounce, abstain from, inform themselves on, and condemn frequently and forcibly, Freemasonry and all other secret associations; that all who are called by the name of Christ, who are entangled in the shares of secretism, are hereby earnestly entreated to withdraw immediately from their sinful connections, and be content with a full enjoyment of civil and Christian liberty; and that the persistent silence and indifference of ministers and public men, in reference to these great and popular evils is deserving of the severest censure, being highly reprehensible.

2. That all churches which receive and retain in their communion adhering members of secret societies, and otherwise encourage the existence of, and render popular, such ungodly institutions, are guilty of high crime against God and man, and must sooner or later experience the most serious consequences from the Divine displeasure.

3. That we cannot consistently with our Christian integrity encourage by our presence or support by our means those ministers who are in league with works of darkness, and are thus incapacitated for preaching a pure Gospel; nor ought we knowingly to commune at the sacrament with those who profess the Masonic faith, or worship at any secret altar.

4. That the purity and permanence of our civil institutions and the security of our government demand the effectual suppression of all forms of secret association within the limits of our nation, by constitutional law.

5. That the granting of charters by our legislatures to Masonic or kindred institutions is sanctioning treason against State and General Government, empowering one class of citizens to break the laws and despise authority with impunity, and putting the unsuspecting many at the mercy of the conspiring few; and that such practice should be abolished, and prohibitory measures adopted.

6. That all those who belong to the Masonic or other secret orders, and acknowledge their oaths or promises as sacredly or honorably binding, or are in avowed sympathy with such institutions, are unfitted for the fair and equitable administration of law or the discharge of official duty, and are thereby disqualified for holding any office under government or in society, and should not receive the suffrages of the people.

7. That membership in secret societies should be made a legal disqualification in individuals for acting as witness or jurors, except due allowance be made for the effect of their Masonic obligations on their testimony or judgment, in cases where one of the parties in the suit is also a secret brother, even though their respective societies be different; and that judges and attorneys are greatly crippled in the exercise of their duties, and rendered untrustworthy, by secret connections.

8. That we cannot, as Christians and Americans, cast our vote for any man for any office, whom we have reason to believe is connected with the Masonic or any other similar institution, or is in sympathy with secretism.

9. That the prevalent idea among many, favoring a separation between religious or moral questions, and politics, is an infidel and most dangerous heresy, and in this country an utter impossibility; that such a course, if practicable and successful, would necessarily end in national ruin; that religion should be the foundation of all political action, and that politics should be the conservator of religious rights and progress; that the principles of Christianity, and therefore Christ, should rule in civil government, and all civil authority be based upon the law of God.

10. That reason and experience teach that in this country the final issue to which all moral questions must sooner or later be brought for final settlement is the ballot-box; and to defer political action in any reform movement is to embarrass the cause, prolong the contest and delay success.

11. That political Anti-masonry is the only cure for political Masonry; and that it is the opinion of this Association that the time has fully come when anti-secrecy should be made a political issue in local, State and National elections.

12. That churches which fellowship Freemasons, knowing, or having opportunity to know, the character of Masonry, or which have their corner-stones laid with Masonic ceremonies, or open their doors for the celebration of Masonic rites, are guilty of giving their sanction and influence to the Masonic anti-Christ, and are responsible for many of its evils, especially in the immediate neighborhood of such practices.

13. That the ceremonies used by Masonry and other secret orders, in the burying dead, celebrating festivals, and laying corner-stones of public buildings, houses of worship, and institutions of learning, are heathen in their origin, un-Christian and un-American in their character, and are unwarrantable usurpations of the rights of the people in such matters; and they should not be tolerated in a Christian land, nor participated in by intelligent men.

14. That Freemasons are responsible for the sins of Masonry and their consequences, according to their knowledge of, or ability to become acquainted with, the principles and requirements of the institution; and further, that to discriminate in our opposition between Masonry and Masons is unwise and untenable, calculated to strengthen the order, destroy the force of our arguments against it, and confuse the public mind, thus unfitting it to render a prompt and just verdict.

15. That those newspapers which are edited by Masons or men favorable to secret orders, who use their sheets to laud and popularize such associations, and shut out full and free discussion on these matters, merit the severest condemnation of the honest and intelligent public, and should not receive the patronage of a truth-loving people.

16. That we hold all to be Freemasons who have not openly renounced allegiance to Masonic authority, and have not exposed the Masonic mysteries, or endorsed the truthful expositions made by others; with the adhering members of all similar associations, and also those who profess sympathy for the Masonic institution, or any other form of organized secrecy.

17. That it is the duty of community at large to become informed on the subject of Masonry in particular, and secret societies in general; to investigate their character, claims, and objects, with their effects on society, church, and state; and to take every legitimate and vigorous measure to make them unpopular and extinct.

18. That we recognize no neutral position on this or any other moral question; but that all to whose minds these subjects are presented must and do take one side or the other.

19. That no man can serve two masters, because he will hate the one and love the other, or cleave to the one and forsake the other; that no man can serve Masonry and Christ at the same time, as the principles of Masonry and Christianity are so contrary to each other that they cannot simultaneously dwell in the same breast, and such a a double profession is hypocrisy to both systems.

The following, by J. T. Kiggins, were offered in connection with the above:

Resolved, 1. That the sentiment which in church and state makes woman unequal to man, and awards to her unequal compensation for her labors, is selfish, unjust and tyrannical; that it is a relic of barbarism from which, as a nation, we must free ourselves.

Resolved, 2. That all barriers in civil or social laws or customs which hinder women from choosing for themselves their sphere of action, and place them at a disaavantage, giving them an unequal chance in the conflicts of life, are demoralizing to our common humanity, and ought to be removed.

The Baptismal Covenant.

BY REV. W. POST.

PLEDGE.

Dost thou renounce the devil and all his works?
This world's vain pomp and all its glory too?
Its carnal coyetings! and fleshy lusts?
No more to follow them?—I truly do.

APOSTOLIC CREED.

In God the Father I believe, Maker of all, the mighty one,
And Jesus Christ our soverign Lord, his only, first begotten Son
Conception of the Holy Ghost, of the virgin Mary born;
Suffered under Pontius Pilate, crucified and mocked to scorn;
Laid low in death in Joseph's tomb; buried, with the dead did dwell,
He rose again on the third day conquorer of derth and hell;
Ascended to the Father's throne, sitteth there at God's right hand;
Shall come to judge the quick and dead, when this world and time shall end.
I in the Holy Ghost believe, and God's holy church below;
Saints communion, sins forgiven, and the resurrection too.
And after death eternal life, state of all the glorified.
Firm in this sacred faith I stand, in the hallow'd trust abide.

VOW.

Now in this holy faith baptised,
My best endeavor hence shall be,
God's righteous will and word to keep,
Through all my life, Christ helping me.

PRECEPT.

"Pay thy vows unto the Most High."

The Corner-Stone.

It is generally admitted that the Bible is the corner-stone of our republic; not the New Testament alone, but the Old as well. Our best legislators study diligently the laws of Moses, our health writers find in its pages ample authority for enforcing their views as to health, diet and remedical agencies, and to us all the Bible is the fountain of morality and the rule of exemplary life. With all this, the ignorance of a great many professed Christians with regard to the books of the Old and New Testaments is simply amazing. John Allen, "the wickedest man," puzzled the knot of ministers who visited him with the hope of inducing him to reform his life, by asking them, "Gentlemen, how many books are there in the Old Testament, how many in the New?" As not one of the D. D's could answer the query, he commended them to a thorough knowledge of the tools of their trade before they undertook to use them upon him.

Doubtless the very best place to learn the sacred Scriptures is at home, at the family altar. A chapter or a part of a chapter read every morning and commented on or explained carefully will make an impression that, when multiplied by 365 every year, and deepened by Sunday-school teaching 52 times in a year, must be abiding. The reason why children, as a general rule, find the hour of family devotion irksome is because the exercises are dull, and the reason they are dull is because of ignorance of the sacred Word on the part of him or her who conducts the devotions. Some years ago a pious gentleman visiting our family was, by courtesy, invited to read the morning lesson, which was then in Ezra and concerned the building of the second Temple. The chapter was long and mumbled through in a wretched way; the children, meanwhile, bored beyond endurance, sat listlessly and uneasily on their seats, and we inwardly resolved that whosoever came again he should not have the opportunity of repeating the imposition. However dull and stupid the prayers may be, the "Sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God" should always be bright and interesting. Our prayers are human, but the Word is divine. Therefore is it that every capacity, the lisping child, the soaring intellect, the burning heart, find ailment suited to its needs. For the child are the inimitable stories scattered like gems through the sacred pages; for the scholar, the logic of St. Paul, the mysteries of the prophecies, the histories of earlier books; for the aspiring saint, the Psalms and the blessed utterances of St. John the Divine.

Until the boy or the girl has mental development enough to desire the last two we would keep him mainly on the stories, mingling therewith more and more the histories of the nations and times in which the scenes are laid, and bringing all the aids of maps and illustrations that can be procured to bear upon the themes under discussion. When the interest of the child is thus thoroughly aroused, and then judiciously made continually to grow by what it feeds on, the main part of the work is accomplished. Even then the parent and teacher must take care lest by overdoing the work the child be crowded and become weary. Our Sunday-schools should be supplementary to Bible teaching at home. It is to be feared, however, that here, as in secular teaching, the responsibility is thrown mainly upon the instructor; and the parent thinks that when he has sent his child regularly to church and Sunday-school his duty is discharged. In this, as in the secular school, those pupils learn the most who have the daily influence and teachings of home to enforce and underlie the influence and drill of the school-room. The facilities enjoyed by our Sunday-schools at the present day are very great. Recently one of the prominent clergymen of Buffalo has constructed a model of the Tabernacle and its furniture, the study of which is scarcely more interesting to grown people than it is to those in their teens. We have elevated maps and panoramas of Palestine, stereoscopic views, and innumerable volumes bearing on every point of the topography, geography, and history of places mentioned in the Scriptures. Better even than this is the interest in this subject taken by our most eminent educators. The main effort now with churches of all denominations is to see that the "lambs" of the fold are properly nurtured.

Before a child enters his teens he should be able to repeat from beginning to end the names of all the books of the Old and New Testaments, and place each in its proper division, poetical, historic, or prophetic, and to turn with the utmost readiness and facility to any book between the lids that may be called for. To borrow a comparison, he should be familiar with these books and their places in the canon as is a compositor with the places of the types he uses. This mechanical familiarity will give him by and by the facility he needs in comparing parallel passages and concentrating the various rays of sacred truth in one focus. Fifteen or twenty minutes every morning given to the enthusiastic and familiar study of the Bible will produce immense results in the knowledge required, far greater than can be obtained by a much longer time given at irregular intervals. How can parents keep the tone of morality up to concert pitch, either in themselves or their families, without these daily morning readings? How can we "keep in tune with Heaven," unless these divine cadencies are evermore sounding in our ears? How can we build the house that shall be, unless we found it upon the corner-stone of everlasting truth?—N. Y. Tribune.

Hints on Sacred Music.

Sacred music is not an amusement or mere entertainment. We go elsewhere for amusement, but should never look for it under a cloak of religious worship.

It is not a mere display of skill, though no skill is too great to be consecrated to the service of God. Skill must be the means, not the end, and in the service of public worship must be wholly subordinate to the great work of lifting the soul heavenward. The command is "Sing to the Lord" not to men.

True sacred music is found in the employing of our musical faculties to worship the Supreme Being, taking the art of singing into service of praise, just as the art of speaking is taken in to the service of prayer. Its first element, therefore, must be holy devotion, without which it cannot be acceptable in the sight of Him to whom all praise belongs.

It should be made intelligible. The command of Scripture concerning the exercises of public worship is "Let all things be done unto edifying:" and concerning prayers which were not understood by the unlearned, Paul says, "Verily, thou givest thanks well, but the other is not edified." Will not this apply with equal force to the singing? In the same chapter (1 Cor. xiv. 15) he says, "What is it, then? I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also. I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also."

From the text just quoted, as well as from general religious principles we believe that prayer and praise should stand on precisely the same footing in the sanctuary, and that whatever is wrong in the one would be equally out of place in the other.

If the song be an act of worship on the part of the congregation, then all must in some way take part in it, with the heart and mind at least, if not vocally. When the minister rises to engage in prayer, he does not say, "I will pray," but "Let us pray." So, also, "Let us sing," and there should be the same thoughtful, reverential, devotional act of the heart in the song as in the prayer, on the part of all assembled.

If the offering of praise be the duty of a Christian people, then they cannot delegate it to a choir or "music committee" and relieve themselves of all further responsibility in the matter, taking no further interest in it.

When the congregation sing, all should be thoroughly in earnest, and strive to make the exercise so hearty and enlivening, that it shall kindle the fires of devotion in all hearts. No listless, cold formality without emotion, as if the maimed, the halt, the blind, and that which we would blush to offer to earthly friends, in our parlors, because we had taken no pains to make it good, might be an acceptable sacrifice to Him who is above all praise.

The music of the preaching service, the prayer-meeting, and the Sunday-school should be so blended and intertwined, that each shall prove helpful to the others, and all combine to cultivate the spirit of true worship in the hearts of young and old; thus preparing the earthly song to be but the prelude of the "nobler sweeter song" in the "house not made with hands."

Dear reader, will you do anything, by voice or influence, in this great work for the Master.?—Sowing and Reaping.

Use of Silence.

A pity that so few people understand the full effect of well-timed silence! How eloquent it is, in reality! Acquiescence, contradiction, indifference, disdain, embarrassment, and awe may all be expressed by saying nothing. It may be necessary to illustrate this apparent paradox by a few examples. Do you seek an assurance of your lady-love's affection? The fair one confirms her lover's fondest hopes by a compliant and an asserting silence. Should you hear an assertion which you may deem false, made by some one whose veracity politeness may withhold you from openly declaring that you doubt, you denote a difference of opinion by remaining silent. Are you receiving a reprimand from a superior. You mark your respect by an attentive silence. Are you compelled to listen to the frivolous conversation of a fop? You signify your opinion of him by treating his loquacity with contemptuous silence. Again, how much domestic strife might have been prevented, how often might the quarrel which by mutual aggravation has, perhaps, terminated in bloodshed, have been checked in the commencement by a judicious silence! Those persons only who have experienced them are aware of the beneficial effects of that forbearance, which to the exasperating threat, the malicious sneer, or the unjustly imputed culpability, shall never answer a word. A soft answer turns away wrath; but sometimes erring humanity cannot give this soft answer in moments of irritation. In such cases, there stands the fortress of silence, with doors wide open, as a refuge for the tired spirit until calmer moments come. Think of this seriously, you who glory in having "the last word."
—Ex.

The surest way to conquer is sometimes to decline a battle. Thus Fabius Maximus conquered Hannibal. Thus, too, may the Christian conquer his peculiar besetment. It is dangerous to provoke an unequal enemy to the fight, or run into such a situation where we cannot escape without an encounter disadvantageous to us. (The theory, then, that a man can have no virtue unless he is always in the midst of temptation is false.)

The Crisis of Souls.

Often, when traveling among the Alps, one sees a small black cross planted upon a rock, or in the brink of a torrent, or on the verge of the highway, to mark the spot where a man has met with sudden death by accident. Solemn reminders these of immortality! b t they led our minds still further; for we said within us, if the place where men seal themselves for the second death could be thus manifestiy indicated, what a scene would this world present! Here the memorial of a soul undone by yielding to a foul temptation, there a conscience seared by the rejection of a final warning, and yonder a heart forever turned into stone by resisting the last tender appeal of love. Our places of worship would scarce hold the sorrowful monuments which might be erected over spots where the spirits were forever lost, spirits that date their ruin from sinning against the Gospel while under the sound of it.—Spurgeon.

How to Write for the Papers.

"Will you give me some hints in regard to writing for the papers?" asked a friend the other day.

"Certainly," I replied with my wonted suavity; and if the professional journalist does not think my suggestions sensible, he can tuck them into his buck-basket just as ruthlessly as he does these articles you are so wisely seeking to improve. What a world of nonsense he keeps us from seeing. But to my hints:

1. Never write for the papers unless you have something to say. Thoroughly good newspaper articles are only written when a man feels: "Necessity is laid upon me: yea, woe is unto me if I write not this article." If you have nothing to say, by all means say nothing.

2. Don't undertake to say what you have to say unless you are in your best mood. If you are a minister, I should say to you explicitly, "Never write for the papers on Monday." Those of us who are not ministers have our "Mondays"—though they often come in the middle of the week. It is, I have sometimes fancied, the custom of most amateur journalists to do their newspaper work when they are too much fagged mentally or physically, for "serious business." The minister, for instance, who is off the hooks, so that he can't prepare a sermon for an audience of five hundred, rushes incontiently (or would rush, but for the buck-basket) before an audience of fifty thousand or so. Ought this to be so?

3. Jot down the points that you wish to make (at least mentally) before you begin to write. See the end of your article from the beginning. If you have no points to jot down, you have really nothing to say.

4. Put your points in the clearest and sharpest way possible. Don't cover them with the verbiage. Let them stick out.

5. Say what you have to say in the fewest possible words and simplest possible manner. Never make use of an illusion, a quotation or a figure of speech which does not distinctly promote the impression that you are seeking to make.

6. Stop when you are done. That is, possibly, the great secret of the true journalist. He does not think that he must follow everything out to its last analysis. He contents himself with suggestive hints which his readers are competent to follow out, and love to follow out, for themselves. He realizes that articles now-a-days are read and prized in proportion to their brevity. Of editorial matter:

A two column article has one reader in a hundred.

A column and a half, one reader in seventy-five.

A column article, one reader in fifty.

A three-quarter column article, one reader in twenty-five.

A half column, one reader in ten.

A quarter column, one reader in one.

Boil yourself down, then, before you write for the papers. Ask yourself, with every fresh page of copy, "Am I not really through?"

7. Cultivate vivactity of style and variety of expression. Abound in crisp, terse, epigrammatic sentences. What Blair says of preachers is pre-eminently true of journalists: "Their first duty is to interest their audience." Here is where the "born, not made," comes in.

8. Write always with a realizing sense of the fact that every sentence —nay, every word— will be subjected to the severest criticism of ten thousand hostile eyes. Throw yourself into the attitude of a cynical, captious, ignorant adversary, and carefully criticise what you have written after it's cold. You will be amused often to see what nonsense you have written—what loopholes you have left invitingly open for attack.

9. Be courteous, even when fealty to truth compells you to be severe. Remember that you are a gentleman, whatever the advocate of rival opinions may prove himself. Keep out of controversy as far as possible. It rarely pays. Never, in any circumstance, be betrayed into a controversy with the editor of a paper. He has got you too entirely at his mercy.

10. See to it that what you send to a newspaper be paragraphed, spelled and capitalized as it should be. Write on one side of small-sized paper in a neat, clear hand, and shun abbreviation. Take time to spell out all words that will have to be spelled out in the paper.

11. Make up your mind to acquiesce cheerfully to any disposition which the editor may in his wisdom or folly, make of your articles. Ten to one, his judgment of your incubations is more trustworthy. Certainly he knows better than you, quod decet (as Cicero, Horace, and Quintilian would say;) that is, what hits the very highest grace of journalism—adaptation.—Selected.

The Seven-Dollar Thief.

A traveler on his journey meets a robber in the woods. "Give me your money," cries the highwayman, "or I'll shoot you."

"It may be," thinks the traveler, "the man is in want;" and he generously gives him six dollars. "Take this. God bless you. Farewell."

"Stop! stop!" cried the robber; "I see another dollar, and I must have that."

"O sir," replies the traveler, be content. Of my all, seven dollars, you have six, and I only one to help me on my journey."

"Give me that seventh dollar," cries the robber, drawing his pistol.

What do you think of the robber? "The meanest thief I ever could conceive of." What is his name? Sabbath-breaker.—Selceted.

The Broken Window.

"There, you've done the mischief now," cried Joe Harris; "you've broken that church window, real expensive too, such windows are."

Charles Mercer stood up and looked with regret and sorrow at the accident that had befallen him. He had broken the window, and the bare thought filled his young heart with dismay.

One little boy, hearing the crash, had started to run away, but seeing the others maintaining their ground, had turned and stood looking timidly on the wreck. Charlie Mercer was the son of a poor widow, and as he thought of the cost of such a window, tears filled his eyes, which he vainly tried to keep back.

"I tell you what," said Joe Harris, somewhat softened by the evident grief in the face of his playmate, "if you say so, we won't tell, and no one will ever be able to find out who broke it."

"No," cried Charlie Mercer, "never. It is bad enough to have broken the window; it would be ten times worse to conceal or lie about it. I shall go at once to the trustees, and if mother and I can pay for it, it shall be done. Poor mother, how sorry she will be."

"Well," said Arthur Harvey, "I can't see that the whole blame should rest on Charlie. We have been playing, and it just happened that his ball struck the window. You know very well, Joe Harris, that Charlie opposed our playing here so near the church, all said there was no danger. I think it is nothing but right that we should all help him with the cost."

"I'll not pay the first red cent!" retorted Joe. "If I had broken the window, I should have paid the cost like a man, and not been a baby about it, either. As it is he may pay it himself, or get out of it the best he can."

Charles Mercer walked away from the disputing boys homeward. He expected no assistance, and he knew very well how sad his mother would feel, but he must tell her all, and perhaps she could help him devise some means of paying for it. Meanwhile Arthur Harvey hastened across the field to one of the trustees to see what could be done in Charlie's favor. He told the whole story of the accident, and how Charlie had refused to conceal his fault. The trustee was a kind-hearted man, and decided at once that the money should be raised by contribution; so heading a paper, he sent Arthur round to raise the necessary amount, which was speedily done.

You can easily imagine Charlie's delight and astonishment when, coming to the trustee a few hours after, to make full confession, and beg a little time for earning the money, he found the necessary funds had all been collected. As for Arthur, he was already too happy to need the grateful thanks of his dear friend and playmate.—Children's Friend.

How Thimbles are Made.

The manufacture of thimbles is very simple, but singularly interesting. Coin silver is mostly used, and is obtained by purchasing coin dollars. Hence it happens that the profits of the business are affected instantaneously by all the variations in the nation's greenback promise to pay. The first operation strikes a novice as almost wicked, for it is nothing else than putting a lot of bright silver dollars, fresh from the mint, into dirty crucibles, and melting them up into solid ingots. These are rolled out to the required thickness, and cut into circular pieces of any required size. A solid metal bar of the size of the inside of the intended thimble, moved by powerful machinery up and down in a bottomle s mold of the outside of the same thimble, bends the circular disks into the thimble shape as fast as they can be placed under the descending bar. Once in shape, the work of brightening, polishing, and decorating is done upon a lathe. First, the blank form is fitted with a rapidly-revolving rod. A single touch of a sharp chisel takes a thin shaving from the end, another does the same on the side and a third rounds off the rim. A round steel rod, dipped in oil and pressed upon the surface, gives it a lustrous polish. Then a little revolving steel wheel, whose edge is a raised ornament, held against the revolving blank, prints that ornament just outside the rim. A second wheel prints a different ornament around the center, while a third wheel with sharp points make the indentation on the lower half and end of the thimble. The inside is brightened and polished in a similar way, the thimble being held in a revolving mold. All that remains to be done is to boil the completed thimbles in soap-suds, to remove the oil, brush them up, and pack them for the trade.

"One thing helped me very much while I was preaching to-day," said a clergyman.

"What was that?" cried a friend.

"It was the attention of a little girl, who kept her eyes fixed on me, and seemed to try to understand every word I said. She was a great help to me."

Think of that, my little ones; and when you go to church or chapel, fix your eyes on the minister, and try to understand what he says, for he is speaking to you as well as the grown-up people.—Selected.

Religious Intelligence.

—Jacob Wainwright, the faithful attendant of the late Dr. Livingston, has returned to Africa from England, and will act as a native teacher, under the direction of the Church Missionary Society.

—The late Illinois Wesleyan Methodist Conference passed the following among other excellent reformatory resolutions: "We would add our testimony to the position taken by the National Association of Christians opposed to Secret Societies, opposing all forms of organized secretism, including those in the supposed interests of temperance and agriculture."

—The Presbyterian Board sustains the only existing mission in Brazil. In a territory nearly as large as Europe, and a population of 10,000,000, there are only thirteen Protestant ministers preaching the native tongue.

—Ex-Pres. C. G. Finney is giving a course of lectures on prayer, before the Oberlin Theological Seminary. The institution has thirty-nine members, one of whom is a converted Jew who was for six years teacher in a synagogue.

—The Central West Association (Cong.) at New Windsor, Ill., passed resolutions on Sabbath railroading; expressing alarm at the extent and growth of the practice; requesting the management of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R. to stop the Sunday labor on that road and use their influence in favor of a like action by connecting lines; and appealing to the people residing in towns on the railroad lines to work for this end by pub meetings, petitions and other means. This is a subject of great importance in which ministerial associations can suitably exercise their influence.

—Rev. E. P. Hammond, the evangelist, begins a series of meetings in Galesburg, Ill., about the middle of the present month.

—There is a marked religious interest at Wheaton, chiefly connected with the College. A number of students are inquring for the Living Way. A weekly union meeting of the different churches is also held.

—At Monmouth, Illinois, there is more than usual interest in the churches; they have been holding a series of union Gospel meetings for a time past, which consist of prayer-meetings, Bible readings and the discussion of topics designated beforehand. The results have been very encouraging and hopeful. President Wallace of the College is actively engaged in this work.

—Next year is the Centennial of the United Brethren church. The Religious Telescope suggests continuing its celebration into 1876 when the National Centennial will be an absorbing theme in the country. The objects of the church celebration would be thus more fully met and every member reached by its influence.

—The leading topic of discussion by the Presbyterian ministers of Chicago at a late meeting, was how to promote a revival of religion in the city. The efforts of Mr. Hammond in St. Louis, last winter, and in Cincinnati three years ago, and of Mr. Moody in various cities of Scotland more lately, were discussed. Revivals do not come from past experiences, but from present faith proved by works.

—The American Board, at the recent meeting, decided from economical reasons and from the multiplied Protestant agencies already at work, to close their labors in Italy, and to recall their missionaries there.

—The American Missionary Association finds a needy and accessible field among the Chinese of San Francisco. They have 405 pupils in their evening schools, of whom 35 have given up idolatry, and numbers have professed Christianity.

—The Fox River Union of Congregational ministers met during the last week of October in Plainfield, Will Co., Ill. Isaac Preston, of Lockport, head a paper on the responsibility of the church for social reforms. After this had been presented, the resolutions found on another page against intemperance and the lodge were passed.

News of the Week.

The City.

Ex-Mayor Joseph Medill took his place as editor-in chief of the Tribune Monday morning. In his salutatory he mentions the difference of views entertained by himself and Mr. White, which partly led to his temporary separation from the paper. This difference was only on political topics, Mr. Medill preferring to remain in the Republican ranks, although without sacrificing independence. Mr. White has skilfully conducted the Tribune through an opposition Presidential campaign and has made a record as editor equalled by few. The transfer of 60 shares of the Tribune stock was made at $5,000 each, making the valuation of the Tribune Company $1,000,000.——The largest cargo of oats ever loaded on any boat in the port of Chicago, was shipped lately on the propeller "Davidson," consisting of 111,000 bushels.——Messrs. Noyes, Patterson and Hurd of the Chicago Presbytery have published a long explanation of the reasons why the minority in the Swing case did not appeal to the General Assembly.——The treasurer of Rev. C. E. Cheney's church (Reformep Episcopal) is a defaulter. The church will lose $5,000 to $10,000.

The Country.

The political changes have made no panics in the stock markets. Gold even tends lower.——Postmaster-general Jewell has lately issued a stringent order forbidding the use of intoxicating liquors either in or out of his department during business hours.——One hundred and ninety-three deaths from diphtheria occurred in New York city during the last two weeks of October. A scientific investigation of the causes of this phenomenon is to be made, and perhaps some knowledge will be gained respecting the disease itself and improved methods of treatment.——The committee of Seventy in New Orleans has addressed to the President of the United States a protest against the further occupation of the State by Federal troops. They do not choose, they say, too have the canvassing Board act in the midst of bayonets. The tone of the protest betrays the feelings of the victorious conservatives, and is not altogether respectful.——The New York Witness celebrated the event of its weekly edition reaching a circulation of 50,000 last week amid the congratulations of many friends and viands without wine.—A heavy northwest gale has prevailed last week in parts of New Hampshire and serious forest fires are reported in the neighborhood of Durham, Suncook and Nashua. The two last places were thought to be in great danger, and the Nashua fire department turned out to fight the flames. A dispatch from Suncook says 500 acres are burned and it hoped the fire will be subdued before reaching the dwellings. Several hundred acres are also destroyed at Eppingham.

Political.

The elections of Tuesday were a surprise to the country, although anticipated by many shrewd men. Every State, except Wisconsin and South Carolina, polled majorities against the Republican party. The next Congress is estimated to stand thus: Senate, Republicans, 41, Democrats, 32, Independent, 1; House, Republicans, 96, Democrats, 173, Independent, 6. The term Democrat being applied to nearly all the opposition elements after election. Ben. Butler was defeated in Mass., Gov. Dix in New York, Genl. Farnsworth in Ill.

Foreign.

The difficulty between China and Japan about the island of Formosa has been settled. China will pay an indemnity of 500,000 taels, upon which the Japanese troops will be withdrawn from the island——Dispatches from Madrid dated Monday, Nov. 9th, state that the Carlists have raised the siege of Irun, their last remaining strategetic point and, have practically disbanded. Don Carlos has escaped to France and beside a few scattered troops nothing remains of his army.

Home and Health Hints.

The Hands.

People, with a few unfortunate exceptions, have each two hands. We should not mention this fact were it not that in the education of the youth only one seems to be generally considered. Children are taught to hold their knives in their right hand when cutting their food, and when this necessary occupation is completed lay it down and use their forks while eating, still employing the right hands. The only further instruction they receive in regard to the left hand is to keep it clean in common with the right hand, and not get in the habit of thrusting it into their pockets. They are taught than whenever only one hand is required the preference is to be given to the right. Thus the left hand is, with a large majority of people, a comparatively useless member, employed only to suplement the other in all manual opperations. Without pausing to inquire into the origin of the senseless custom, it is sufficient for our purpose to say that it has no foundation in the anatomy of the hand, or in any natural peculiarity of the human mind. As well might we teach the children to hop about on their right foot, to keep the left eye closed, and to stop the left ear with cotton as to teach them to magnify the value of the right hand at the expense of the left. Nor in renouncing this absurdity would it be necessary to lay aside social conventionalities. The fork may be held in the right hand while eating, and the knife may take its place in cutting food. These are small matters, observed only for conventional reasons. What excuse can there be for neglecting the early and careful instruction of both hands? We are not speaking of an impracticable thing when we say it is possible to rear children so that whatever one hand can do the other may do equally well. We know this has been accomplished in many notable instances where the disability of the left hand has been rectified in spite of all obstacles arising from bad habits acquired in childhood. We have seen surgeons transfer an instrument from one hand to the other during an operation, whenever convenience required it, without the least awkwardness. We have seen draughtsmen using both hands in coloring drawings, an immense advantage both in rapidity of work and evenness of shading. We have seen working men chop timber "right or left-handed," and one carpenter who used to hammer or saw with either with equal facility. In all these cases the use of the left hand in common with the right gave very much greater efficiency.—Scientific American.

Coughs.—It is said that a small piece of resin dipped in the water which is placed in a vessel on a stove (not an open fire-place), will add a peculiar property to the atmosphere of the room, which will give great relief to persons troubled with a cough. The heat of the stove is sufficient to throw off the aroma of the resin, and gives the same relief that is afforded by the combustion, because the evaporation is more durable. The same resin may be used for weeks.

Farm and Garden.

Colored Wash for Fences.

The following, says the Massachusetts Ploughman, is a most excellent, cheap and durable wash for wooden fences and buildings. It owes its durability to the white vitriol which hardens and fixes the wash:

Take a barrel and slack one bushel of freshly burned lime in it, by covering the lime with boiling water.

After it is slacked, add cold water enough to bring it to the consistency of good whitewash. Then dissolve in water, and add one pound of white vitriol (sulphate of zinc) and one quart of fine salt.

To give this wash a cream color, add one-half a pound of yellow ochre (in powder). To give it a fawn look, add a pound of yellow ochre, and one-fourth of a pound of Indian red.

To make this wash a handsome gray stone color, add one-half a pound of French blue, and one-fourth pound of Indian red; a drab will be made by adding one-half of a pound of burnt sienna, and one-fourth pound of Venetian red.

For brick or stone, instead of one bushel of lime, use half a bushel of lime and half a bushel of hydraulic cement.

A Wisconsin correspondent sends to The Western Farmer a statement of experience bearing on the question of shelter belts for fruit. He says he has no doubt that a white willow hedge thirty feet high on the west side of his orchard saved some of his trees; "even the Sweet Bough and Fall Pippin were secure behind it;" in fact "for a distance of twenty rods not a tree was lost." He leads us to infer that those beyond this limit succumbed to the winter. He advises protection on the north and west sides, but says: "Let those who try it remember that they cannot raise fruit within thirty feet of an evergreen or other live fence or wind-break. We lost nearly a whole row of apple trees by placing them too near our willow row. Nursery trees will do nothing near any timber belt."

DEFENCE OF JUDGE DANIEL H. WHITNEY,

Master of Belvidere Lodge, before the Grand Lodge of Ill., On charge of Unmasonic Conduct, in bringing Samuel L. Keith the Murderer of Ellen Slade to justice.

4. The essential points of this are matters of record in this Lodge.

5. The agency of Mr. Keith, in the death of Ellen Slade, was found by the Coroner and jury.

6 "The open and palpable course." &c. The conduct of members of this Lodge was such as to leave no doubts in the public mind, nor in my mind, that they were acting improperly in reference to the matter, and hundreds charged it upon us as a fraternity; and I publicly repelled this unfavorable impression, and charged it upon the individuals who were guilty of a violation of their duties as citizens, and, as I conceive, as Masons; a violation of duty that admitted neither of defence or excuse.

7. "But here is, after all, the head and front of my offending." Perhaps sufficient has already been said on issuing the warrant by me, and the agency of certain brethren in their efforts to obstruct the progress of the law, in my reply to the letter of accusations. And I will only add here, that these brethren were perfectly friendly toward me until it was generally known that I had issued the warrant and sent South in pursuit of Keith, since which they have appeared entirely unable to control their rage and violence; and their lying tongues they have utterly failed to control not only as against me, but also the doings of the Most Worshipful Grand Master when here.

8. Sufficient has been said on this head, and of 9. I have only to say, I acted in a spirit of conciliation and accommodation.

10. "One thing is apparent," &c. Several weeks before the murder of Miss Slade, while I was conferring the Master's degree on the Rev. S. Park, I observed that he hesitated, and I took occasion to explain to him his relative duties as a man and a Mason. Brothers Hurlbut and Bassett took exceptions in open Lodge, to my explanations; and on several occasions since, they have maintained the positions they then assumed in regard to the duties of Masons toward each other, which position and views will be fully understood from the following charge, which with others, I filed against brother Hurlbut before he visited the Grand Master to this Lodge, to-wit; that on the evening above referred to, "brother Hurlbut then and there held and presented to the Lodge, views of the duties and obligations of Masons to each other, inculcating principles at variance with individual rights, derogatory to the principles of morality, in violation of the laws of the land, and in derogation of the order and well being of society; and calculated to jeopardize the rights, property, liberty, character and lives of those who are not of the fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons"—views that compelled me at the time, to mark Stephen A. Hurlbut and Simon Bassett, the two most dangerous men to society that it had ever been my mistortune to meet with; and their subsequent conduct has fully justified those fears, and, what is worse, I assure you, M. W., and brethren, I have since met with many others holding the same dangerous views. I know that in the presence of the Grand Master, Bros. Hurlbut and Bassett endeavoring to show that their views coincided precisely with mine; now, if this was so, why did they arraign me in open Lodge, and bitterly denounce the explanations that I had given? It certainly was not difficulty to understand me. I simply told Bro. Park that the assurances I had given him at the altar. that nothing in Masonry conflicted with his duty to himself, his family, his neighbor, his country or his God, were not falsified by any subsequent proceeding or ceremony. It was at this they took umbrage, and contended that Masons were bound to go for, stand by, and protect each other, as against "outsiders" at all hazards and under all circumstances, except in cases of murder and treason. If these brothers have charged their views I am glad of it. I have never so understood Masonry, and another thing, I never will. And if I find myself mistaken in regard to Masonry, I will find it quite easy for me, in future, to let it alone, being forced to the conclusion of an old and high Mason here, who, when urged by me to visit the Lodge, said, "he had been a Mason over thirty years, and that he knew the Institution to be demoralizing and corrupt, and that unless it had greatly reformed within the last twenty-five years, a Lodge was no place for an honest man."

Most Worshipful and Brethren,—I will now briefly notice the charges verbally made against me to the Grand Master.

1. "That D. H. Whitney, W. M., had guards stationed around the Lodge, on the night of the alleged meditated attack on him." It is true that a large number of persons were around the Lodge that night, who had heard of the contemplated "row" in the Lodge, and the unprovoked attacks of certain members on me in the public street; and to that assembling of citizens around the Lodge, and Bro. Fuller,s interference, I am indebted for my personaly safety. It is worse than idle for any man, or set of men, to preach to me that a man is not in greater danger amidst infuriated Masons, than in the midst of infuriated "outsiders."

2. "He is turning Anti-Mason, rushing to open hostility to the order," etc. I have no doubt but some of the brethren were induced by Hurlbut, Bassett, Peck, and a few others, to believe this; for you know that this was a prerequisite to their doing me personal violence. On any other principle it is not easy to account for the reasoning of these men, that to deal with, and turn me out, will prevent my rushing "toward open hostility to the Order," when a committee composed in part, if not in whole, of my accusers, have been dallying for months with a brother for a slight offence, and which reports that he threatens to reveal if not let alone, and they suggested to the Lodge the propriety of dropping the matter for that reason; when they all know that he does not know enough of Masonry to work his way into a Lodge; while the same brethren know that I am as familiar with Masonry as I am with my alphabet. The solution of the whole matter is, that it is a deliberate and malicious falsehood.

3. "He has refused to speak and converse, out of open Lodge, with several of the brethren." This is as true as Holy Writ, and it is because I have found them miserable twaddlers, false, malicious and deecitful. I never so learned Masonry, and this must be my apology.

4. The charge that I said, "brother Jervice refused to telegraph in relation to the flight of Mr. Keith," the Grand Master will remember, was not proven; this was a common report, I never asked him to telegraph, knew nothing of it, and cared less.

5. It was also charged, "that the Lodge could not be induced to meet again, under me as W. M." The brethren might have saved all that breath. This is stale, and the rod in the hands of a parcel of the members, and used for a long time, as they imagined, to hold the officers in order. When I was elected W. M., I was gravely informed by several of these brethren, that, if at any time I should call brother Gooding to my aid, it was determined by the members quietly to withdraw from the Lodge; and when, a few weeks before the murder of Miss Slade, I consulted several of these very members on the subject of my resigning, they declared that if I resigned it would break up the Lodge, for they never would meet under brother Fuller. And of this charge I will only add, that these brethren will be no more gratified to get rid of me, than I will of them. And I simply ask you to observe, from the foregoing, the combustible and discordant materials that I was called upon to harmonize and to govern, and then conclude of the position of any honest man among them.

Members of the Grand Lodge: I have now answered all the charges made against me, that have come to my knowledge; and as the M. W. G. Master assured me that if any other charges were preferred I should be furnished with a copy of them, and having received no copy, or even intimation of other charges, I will call your attention to the fact, that in all their bitterness and zeal, these brethren have brought no charges against my moral character.

And now M. W., and brethren of the Grand Lodge, having pursued the course of my defence, as directed by our M. W., Grand Master, in case of my inability to appear personally before you, and in a manner which seemed to me called for by the circumstances, in justice to myself, to the Grand Lodge, and to the Order, as anomalous as these proceedings appear to me, I submit them without complaint of this course of proceeding. I have but little to say by way of argument, deduction or comparison, but rest upon the facts submitted.

Of the truth or falsity of the charges made by the Coroner's jury, I have had, nothing to do; that determination belongs elsewhere; and it was only for me to see that the progress of the law was not obstructed by a wicked combination, while in my power to prevent; and although carried out, as all predicted who had observed the influence at work, I forbear to comment upon them, as my defence of right should be confined to the foregoing charges.

But as to the foregoing matters—why, after brother Burgess had possessed himself of the evidence against Keith, did the brethren advise him to flee his country? Were they alarmed at the strength of the evidence against him? Or were they prompted by villainous cupidity to take advantage of his fears, and extort from him his money? These brethren may hang upon which of these horns they choose; either should forever damn them with all honest citizens and good men.

I frankly confess to you, that I feel but little solicitude about the result, and certainly if my expulsion is premeditated, as some of my brethren boast, I have lost considerable time and much paper; and can only say, if my suspension or expulsion is essential to the purification of Masonry, and if for me to walk beside a procession, an expelled Mason, with my accusers and some others in full regalia and in full communion, will add to the glory and honor of the Institution, as it certainly will to the gratification of "drunkards, gamblers, rowdies," etc,, make me the example or the victim.

I ask nothing but open, frank, and fair dealing. I have neither said nor done anything in a corner. I have dodged no responsibility; neither do I stand before you, by this my defence, to implore nor supplicate; nor do I retract one word I have said nor apologize for an act I have done in reference to this whole matter. I knew my duty and have performed it to the best of my judgment and ability. I should, perhaps, feel a greater solicitude for the result, had not my connection with the Lodge, thus far, shown to me the utter falsity of all that was represented to me of Masonry before I became a Mason.

"Brotherly Love and Truth," are almost total strangers to the Lodge, and "charity and relief," have seldom entered our door; not a twentieth time as often as pails of beer have. Out of a revenue of some ten or twelve hundred dollars, but about fifty has ever been appointed for charitable purposes, and yet, it is all frittered away; to speak to you of "harmony" among us would be an insult to its shade.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Facts and Figures.

—Mr. A. T. Stewart has psid $35,000 for a cattle picture by Auguste Bonheur, which is now in his gallery. Auguste is a brother of Rosa, and this picture is 16 feet by 20. Mr. Stewart also has Gerome's well known picture of the gladiators.

—The President of the Boston Common Council, in a recent lecture upon leather, said that, during the year 1870, there were in the United State 4,237 tanneries, and 3,082 currying establishments, employing 30,811 men and 1,255,340 cords of bark.

A capital of $55,024,290 was invested in the business, and the aggregate sum of $12,088.530 was paid as wages to workmen. While the value of the iron business in the United States in 1870, was less than $100,000,000, of the cotton trade less than $178,000,000, of woolen goods less than $208,000,000 the value of the leather business exceeded $286,000,000.

—An iron works in Leechburg, Penn, turns out weekly about seventy tons of sheet iron, by the use for fuel of natural gas drawn from an abandoned oil well situated about one-fifth of a mile from the works. The production has been increased about thirty-three per cent since the gas was first used, about seven months ago. The iron made by the use of gas commands from $10 to $20 per ton more than the same class of iron made by the same firm at other works where coal is used for fuel. This natural flow of gas is plentiful in that region, and along the Ohio river it is utilized in many ways for heating, lighting and in manufacturing establishments.

—The Queen of England's daughters are certainly examples to the rest of the fashionable world in industry and taste. At the royal Swiss cottage each of the Princesses has a garden which she cultivates with her own hands. They have also learned to cook, and they frequently sit down to a meal prepared by one or other of their fair hands. Louise, wife of the Marquis of Lorne, is a clever artist, and all of them are accomplished in some way or other, besides being excellent linguists. All these matters take time and hard work to learn, and it is evident that the daughters of a Queen, although born to every luxury, have not dwindled away their time in fashionable dissipation, like many of their humbler sisters.

—Senator Schurz, in a lecture on the Franco-Prussian war, tells an amusing anecdote, showing how Prince Bismarck was converted from his old feudal ideas to the modern doctrine of free trade. Bismarck, in the earlier part of his official career, was Prussian Ambassador at the Diet of German Sovereigns at Frankfort. The laws of Frankfort recognized the exclusive privileges of the ancient guilds. Bismarck having occasion, one day, to replace a broken picture net in the wall, he found himself obliged to employ a joiner to make a new frame, a glazier to put in a new glass, a mason to plaster up the hole in the wall, and a house-painter to paint it over,—the whole work being a simple job that one man could have done easily. Mr. Schurz says that Bismarck was converted, and from that time on he has been an advocate of free trade.

Temperance.

Political papers have, many of them, a periodical attack of Maine liquor law, and try to prove prohibition a failure. The Chicago Tribune lately published a long letter with this object in view. On the other hand read the following from the Wesleyan:

PROHIBITION DOES PROHIBIT.—VINELAND, N. J., with 10,000 inhabitants no grog-shops, has an annual expense of only $450 for police expenses, overseers of poor, judges and clerks of courts, poor expenses, etc., while Yonkers, N. Y., with 15,000 population and 145 licensed saloons, has $60,000 annual expenses for the same purposes. If prohibition does not prohibit, then why does every grog-seller in the land oppose it? If "more liquor is sold" where prohibitory laws are in force, then why do not the entire liquor fraternity unite to enact prohibitory laws all over the country? If "more liquor is sold" why do all the liquor dealers and drinkers, and all the politicians seek to blast forever, in eternal infamy, men who vote as they pray, and who seek to enact prohibitory laws such as will benefit their business so much? The fact is, the cry is a falsehood. A leading paper in the city of Burlington, Vt., says Rev. Dr. Huntington, of Syracuse, who has recently returned from Burlington, "A leading paper of that city keeps a standing advertisement at the head of its columns, offering $100 reward to any man who will show where any liquor is sold as a beverage in that city or within twenty miles of it."

—According to the report of the Special Revenue Commissioner to Congress the sales of retail liquor dealers over the counter in 1867 amounted to almost one thousand five hundred million dollars, and more than half the national debt and the annual interest on the whole debt. The witnesses who make these statements are not thieves, idlers, burglars, topers, toddy sellers, gamblers or politicians, and not always the rich and fashionable, the office holder or the covetous man. These generally overlook those evils in order that their trades may flourish and their wicked ends be secured. Those who testify of the evil are the chemists who affirm that alcohol, is a dangerous poison, having a special affinity for the brain, and Judge Pitman has also shown that alcohol is also a soul poison. In this it has a peculiarity not shared by any other agent. It stimulates the lower propensities and weakens the higher faculties, and its influence is thrown entirely in the scale of the animal impulses against the reason, judgment and conscience. Chemists also affirm that alcohol is no more fit to be taken ordinarily than opium, prussic acid, or nux vomica. Physicians agree with these statements, and as professional men, unless they are moved by unworthy motives, tell the same story.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accnrate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abdnction and Mnrder,' is the title of a volnme written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The anthor belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and mueh more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to he, in its obligations, the author of this hook must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acqnainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his account is entirely rcliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are snfficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;' "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

Publisher's Department.

For Our Agents.

DIRECTIONS THAT WILL AID IN CANVASSING FOR THE CYNOSURE SUCCESSFULLY.

We have been reading directions for canvassers prepared by a business firm and we take out the best ideas we find and arrange them in our own way for the purpose of helping our friends obtain Cynosure subscriptions.

Please cut this out and read the suggestions often before going out to canvass.

1st. APPRECIATE YOUR WORK.

You are conferring a public benefit in obtaining CYNOSURE subscriptions. You benefit society at large and individuals in particular.

2d. In commencing, get the LEADING PERSONS in your district to subscribe if you can. Consciously or unconsciously, we are all influenced by knowing what others have done; especially those who by virtue of office, education, wealth or talent occupy prominent positions among the people.

3d. INFLUENCE THE PRESS. Give the local editor a short notice of the CYNOSURE, or give him some copies of the paper. Ask him to read and notice it in his columns.

4th. HOUSE TO HOUSE CANVASS. Enter upon a faithful, systematic, thorough, house-to-house canvassing of the town or district. Do not rove about, but proceed regularly, neglecting no house, store or workshop. Never attempt to canvass among groups or crowds in the street; find your customers at their homes or places of business. Before entering a house learn the name of the occupant, which can be done by asking at the last house the name of the next door neighbor, and so on, never disturb a man who is busy; accost every one politely, and whenever you can, by name; and keep your temper under all circumstances, remembering that your object of interest is not yourself, but the work you have in hand. In factories, mills, or large business establishments, go first to the principle, get his subscription or at least his good will and permission to canvass among his people.

GOLDEN HINTS.

There are a few general hints derived from the experience of successful canvassers, which must be both studied and followed if the canvasser means to succeed.

I. Keep a strict memoranda of all who are out or engaged when you call, and do not fail to wait on them a second time. Wait also upon those who ask you to call again, &c.; this you should construe into half a promise to subscribe, and you should not fail to follow it up and take advantage of it.

II. It is highly important to the agent, no less than to the publishers, that he should report regularly and promptly as to his progress.

III. Do not expect too much at first. The business must be learned, just as every business must be, in order to succeed in it.

Learn this from the experience of others: Old and skillful agents usually go more successfully over the ground than new ones, because more slowly and more thoroughly. Let no day pass unimproved. Never droop under a little stress of weather.

Do not forget to send for extra copies of the Cynosure for canvassing purposes. They are sent free. Are you at work for the paper? Remember what a blessing good literature is in families. Ask God's blessing on your labors and then go to work.

The infant class in Wheaton, Ill., contributed $2.00 and sent the Cynosure to a man in Minnesota whose crops had been destroyed by the grasshoppers. We have other subscribers in the grasshopper region who can hardly take the paper this year. Is there any other Sabbath school class that would like to follow the example of this one?

Will our subscribers whose time is out in November renew promptly? Let us hear from you whether you wish to renew or not? Send new subscriptions with your renewels if you can.

We hope all whose subscriptions expire in December will begin to canvass for new subscriptions now. So that you will have a good list of new names to send in with your renewals.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES.

No commission is allowed on club rates. Club rates are intended for those who wish to give the commission to subscribers.

Subscriptions may all be sent at one time, or at different times, and in all cases the sender should keep an account of the names and amounts sent.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Note if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Postage on the Cynosure.

After Jan. 1st, 1875, THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. The postage on the CYNOSURE is 20 cents a year.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 year we cannot do this.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscriber for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Bills.—We send out this week bills to those friends who have asked us more than two months since to continue sending them the Cynosure promising to renew their subscription soon. With a few of them, some special arrangement perhaps has been made to pay hereafter. If so, do not grow angry with us for forgetting it, but send us a postal card telling us what this arrangement is. Remember that we need the money VERY MUCH, and send a part of the mount due if you cannot pay the whole.

Will you write to us immediately after receiving the bill whether able to remit or not? We hope you will appreciate our need of funds and make a special effort to settle your account.

Topics of the Time.

THE FAST DAY recommended by the National Committee was, we learn, a blessing to many, and was widely observed. The Rock River Conference of the United Brethren Church endorsed it and recommended its observance and the holding of special meetings in the churches throughout its bounds. And other religious bodies and individual churches did likewise. Let us not only pray but "look up," expecting the fulfilment of plead promises. Paul and the New Testament reformers were "in fastings often." So in the Old Testament, Ezra, Nehemiah and Daniel fasted successfully to reform a corrupt church.

A BLACK MAN'S TRIUMPH.—To all their successes on both sides the Atlantic the celebrated chorus of Jubilee singers must add this crowning one—they have conquered home prejudice. Two years ago last May they had returned to Nashville from an honorable and prosperous campaign in the North, where their labors for their loved Fisk University had netted $20,000. The Nashville Industrial Exposition was in progress, and crowds were present from all parts of Tennessee. Prof. White, the leader of the chorus, asked permission to sing to the thousands thronging there, and was promptly refused—it would break up the fair. The young freedmen went out again, with greater success than at first. Their heart-reaching melodies drew the applause of thousands through all the Northern cities. They crossed the Atlantic, and even greater success waited them. The children of bondage were guests of noblemen. They raised the fund for their college building to $90,000. And when the other day they came home again, the Directors of the Exposition sent a cordial invitation for the Jubilee Singers to hold a concert in their building, and the people of Nashville beheld the largest audience ever assembled in their city listening to and cheering these gifted freedmen. "Whathath God wrought!"

GLADSTONE AND MANNING.—Like our great slavery agitation, popery is becoming the "irrepressible conflict" of Europe. An article in the Contemporary Review by the late English premier, in condemnation of ritualism, has been followed by a pamphlet by the same author, reiterating his former views and announcing the bold proposition that the doctrines of Rome are hostile to civil government; that her converts renounce moral and civil freedom; and place their loyalty at the mercy of the Vatican. Mr. Gladstone further expresses a firm belief that the object of the infallibility doctrine and Vatican decrees is simply a struggle for the temporal power, and he appeals to all Protestants to remember the days and valor of their fathers. Manning, Catholic Archbishop of England, replies cautiously as a Jesuit. He says the Vatican decrees had no such object as changing civil obligations; that men are bound to obey their rulers by natural law; that infallibility is a Divine trust and, with revealed truth, rests on Divine law. But he avoids saying which shall have preference, the Catholic doctrines of papal supremacy or the natural law of civil rights. The discussion is deeply agitating the English press and will be watched by all Christendom. When such statesmen as Disraeli and Gladstone, with the reformed priest, Hyacinthe, turn prophets, the world must listen. If their apprehensions are unfounded, they may be proved so, but by other arguments than the Jesuits are using in France and Germany.

THE CURSE REVIVING.—A bill is now on its passage in the Texas legislature of most extraordinary character. It provides, in brief, for the sale to the highest bidder of the labor of any person convicted in the courts, or of any person confined on charge of committing misdemeanor. This ordinance is hedged about with a few restrictions which may be easily swept away if the case requires. This act will be seen to involve the vital principle of slavery—involuntary servitude. Only the employer cannot sell his laborer as a chattel. This infamous enactment is being pushed by the Democrats of Texas in solid rank, and its intention against the black race is only too evident. The enforcement of the act is put in the power of the local justices, and the history of Texas is warrant enough for the assertion that it never be applied to white men. It is a careful provision to legalize private revenge and perpetuate the slavery of the black man. Through this measure if it becomes law, the power is altogether in the hands of his former oppressors to deprive him of liberty, as certainly as did the accursed system which dragged down in its death a half million of our citizens and wrapped whole States in conflagration and ruin. If this is the first echo of the Democratic triumph, where shall we look for the end?

SPURGEON SMOKES!—A few Sabbaths ago an unexpected trial came upon the great London preacher. At the close of a sermon on the sinfulness of little sins a brother Baptist clergyman, Pentecost, from Boston, was introduced for a few remarks. He proceeded to relate a part of his Christian experience wherein the grace of God was revealed in such a manner as to purge him from the sin of tobacco-using. Mr. Spurgeon dismissed the congregation with the remark that he could not allow his people to go away with the impression that the use of tobacco was a sin, and added, "I intend to smoke a good cigar for the glory of God before I go to bed to-night." A day or two later he wrote to a London paper defending his practice, but apologizing for the remark, which sounds very like a needless use of the name of God. The Baptist Weekly, however, defends both: the practice, because it "tends to induce toleration and charity to all men; and the remark, "because we should be thankful for all things." Such pusillanimity needs the rebuke of a Carlyle. What regard for "the glory of God" had Mr. Spurgeon, or any of the worthies mentioned by the Weekly, when the horrid nausea of their first smoke came on them? Or how will the effect on the pockets, brains and morals of his weaker brethren be harmonized with this new theory of "the weed." Mr. Spurgeon contentedly shuts his eyes amid a cloud of smoke and proposes not to be dictated to by any man about his indulgence, and more of like stuff which betrays his sensitiveness to the criticism he is sure to have. So conspicuous an exhibition of weakness is most to be regretted for its effect on he multitudes whom it will confirm in a costly, hurtful, and needless practice.

True Courage.

Speak thou the truth! Let others fence,
And trim their words for pay!
In pleasant sunshine of pretense,
Let others bask their day!

Show thou thy light! If conscience gleam,
Let not the bushel down:
The smallest spark may send its beam
O'er hamlet, tower, and town.

Woe, woe to him, on safety bent,
Who creeps from age to youth,
Failing to grasp his life's intent
Because he fears the truth.

The Marquis of Ripon.

Ripon is situated in the county of York, two hundred and eight miles north-west of London. It was anciently noted for its manufacture of spurs, which were in so high repute that "as true steel as Ripon rowels" became a proverbial expression to denote honesty and courage. But England has recently been morally spurred by the Marquis of Ripon until she has leaped into the throes of excitment. The marquis is represented by the English journals as a staid, wealthy, middle-aged, unimaginative gentleman, of whose theological antecedents nothing is known except that they are supposed to have been brought up in the soundest school of Protestanism. This English gentleman, whose title gave him rank next to the royal family, occupied the highest office known to the Masonic fraternity in England until a recent date, when he resigned it, and the same position was taken by the Prince of Wales. It appears upon examination that his forsaking the order was brought about by a purpose, formed some seven moths ago, to investigate the objections filed against the fraternity by the Roman Catholic church, with a view to writing a defense of Freemasonry. But upon examination these objections became serious and important, and at last sufficient to lead him out of not only the Masonic fraternity, but out of the highest positions and honors in it, and also out of the Protestant Episcopal church, into the Roman Catholic church.

The Church Times, an English journal, says that this change by Lord Ripon has been a source of grief and dismay to the English Freemasons and to others—meaning by the latter, I suppose, those regretting the severance of his church relation.

Your correspondent has no disposition to sanction or in any way approve of the church of Rome, but there are three lessons in this case that we should not be slow to learn. The first is, that any honest man who will take the labor and pains of examining the institution of Freemasonry will find it to be intolerably corrupt. The Marquis of Ripon, though he commenced the investigation predisposed in favor of Masonry and with a view to defend it against the arguments advanced by the church of Rome, found those objections overwhelming nevertheless, and his conclusion must be the conclusion of every one who loves truth and righteousness.

In the second place those churches that favor or even tolerate Masonry must expect trouble. The English church is in trouble about this nobleman leaving her pale; and there is no use of any one shutting his eyes to the fact that commotion and grief is at the door, ay, already within those churches that wink at this iniquity. Places are not wanting where the Methodist Episcopal church is torn asunder by this evil; and it is the rock that, being dashed against, will split any church that wakes up to see this hideous monster. May the God of peace spare us as a church this sorrow by keeping us firm in the right.

And in the last place, those churches that oppose this evil will receive recruits for their faithfulness. They may suffer for a time. The sons of darkness may jeer at them, but they will have their day of triumph; and for every one that they have lost by standing for God and truth they will receive a hundred-fold, for God has decreed that those that honor him shall be honored, and they that dishonor him shall be lightly esteemed.—Telescope.

Appeal to the Masonic Clergy.

Dear brother, God has set us as watchmen on Zion's walls, and we are commanded to warn men of the dangers that are coming upon them.

Our commission is from King of kings, and no other power can call it back, nor may we lay it aside at pleasure, or take any obligation on ourselves that will stand in the way of its faithful execution. And if you or I should take such obligations by mistake or otherwise, it would of necessity be null and void, because the bond of Jehovah is still upon us, and feeble man may not disannul the law of his God.

Now my brother, we know that Masonic oaths have death-penalties attached to them.

Let me ask, are these penalties binding, and has the lodge that administers, a right to execute them?

The law of this country pronounces such an execution to be murder, because it is taking the life of one, who has not been guilty of any capital crime, without due process of law, and without the privilege of a trial by jury in open court.

It is murder in the sight of God who gives civil law its authority, and says, "Thou shalt not kill." "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed."

It is murder by the confession of many Masons who say "These penalties are not intended to be executed."

But dear brother, if the penalty is not binding why is any other part of the oath? Were not both sworn to with the same solemnity, at the same time, over the same Bible, and both in God's tremendous name?

No my brother, they judge rightly; God does not sanction their penalties, but by the same reasoning his holiness will no more sanction the oath built upon such penalties, or the lodges they hold together.

By law, the oath-snared clansmen testify in open court, the reward of pardon being held out by the state to induce them to turn state's evidence, and break a sinful oath, and good men rejoice at it. Herod kept his oath and killed John the Baptist. Did he do right?

No! for that would be to allow man at will to set aside the laws of God, and make him a partner in crime."

Then Masonic oaths cannot be binding unless we reject the decisions of the Christian world, as set forth in their moral philosophy and their jurisprudence.

But men watch their ministers and trust to them. They say, "Masonry cannot be so bad or our preacher would not belong to it."

Dear brother, they are in your hands, and you may lead them as you will. Will you take them into the lodge? Or will you try to keep them out?

It is not enough that you should be silent.

Your friends understand that you are a Mason and suppose that you approve the order, and your silence will lead them into the lodge.

No cunningly devised oaths of men can release you from your duty as a "watch-man on Zion's walls." No obligations of Masonry can disannul the higher command to warn your fellowmen of danger, or blot out the earlier obligation that Jehovah has sanctioned with heavier penalties. "His blood will I require at thine hand." Ezekiel, iii: 18. Jesus said:

But whoso shall offend (stumble) one of these little ones that believe in me, it were better that a mill stone were hanged about his neck, and he were drowned in the depth of the sea. Matt. xviii: 6.

O my brother, let us obey God rather than man, and keep the obligation he has placed upon us.—Christian Republic.

New Mexico.—A Trip to San Juan.

BY AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

Santa Fe was dull, and a little variety desirable to dwellers in that quaint old town. So a trip for business and pleasure was determined onby gentlemeu sojourning there, and the Indian town of San Juan on the banks of the Rio Grande, some thirty miles distant, was selected as the place where they should go to spend a short time; seeing the sights and enjoying themselves. A team and carriage were hired for the occasion. And equipped with camping utensils, provisions, a photographic outfit, sketch-book, and writing materials, that we might render permanent the scenes of beauty, and the oddities, and record passing events which otherwise would be but fading pictures in the mind's album.

We started and for three miles rode up hill, through the evergreen cedar-covered hills, which surround Santa Fe; to the divide between the Rio Santa Fe and the Rio Fosuque. Here broke upon us one of the many grand views of the great west. East are the Santa Fe Mountains with canon-rent sides and snow-covered tops. In one of the largest canons heads the Rio Fosuque, and theeye can trace its course clear from the fields of snow, through the black canon among the cedar-clad hills into the open valley, dotted with farm houses and green fields, and on for twenty miles till, at the foot of a lone mesa where stands the Indian Pueblo of San Lafonsa, it drops into the Rio Grande. On the other west, the horizon, is bounded by the Hemas range of mountains, which as they go north, gradually break into steep-sided, flat toped mesas. In the far north the mountains melt into etherial blue, while far off among them we can trace the course of the Rio Grande del Norte, where it issues from the Faos canon and trace it a hundred miles until it is lost in another canyon, at the base of the Hemos mountains.

From here we go down a gentle grade into the Fosuque valley, through a Mexican settlement, leaving to the left the picturesque Indian village of Fosuque, with its big mud church nestled among the orchards. Another short jaunt over the hills and we are in Nambay on the Rio Nambay. From here is a long road over a range of dreary hills, which convey the idea that the allies, time and the elements, have had a battle with the hills and the hills have got the worst of it. They are seamed into all fantastic shapes. The fronts of some are guarded by a line of clay buttes with broad, spreading sand-stone caps, reminding one of a platoon of Chinamen with their broad brimed hats. One grand old castle stands out by itself with walls a hundred feet high, towers, parapets, and loop-holes, and we could almost imagine we saw hosts of armed men passing to and fro on its walls so much did it look like a work of man's devising.

A little further on we crossed the Rio Chiquito and rattled through the Mexican town of Santa Cruz, a town where there was more church than town, and more crosses than people; where everything looked as if it had seen its best days. The people looked sleepy and even the goats and dogs seemed to partake of the general laziness. Through here and we were fairly in the valley of the Rio Grande, here seven or eight miles wide and nearly all under cultivation. Several small towns were in sight. Here and there we would catch a glimpse of the river as it wound through the valley which was everywhere dotted with groves of cotton wood. As we approached San Juan we met Indians on the road with their packed burros, returning from market, or going to and from the fields. At the acequois the squaws were washing, or going to and from the town with huge earthern jars on their heads in which they carry water. We reached the town at a little before dark and were kindly received by some Mexican friends who were living there, farmer residents of Santa Fe. We, however, prefer camping; and after passing through the town, camped, cooked our meat and boiled our coffee, beguiling the time by talking bad Spanish to the Indian children, who had gathered round our camp to learn what they could by seeing or perhaps to get an invitation to stop to tea. A night was pleasantly spent beneath our blankets. In the morning we were ready to do the town in the most artistic style.

We sallied out early with our camera and took views of the town in various shapes, not forgetting to take a picture of an Indian carreta (car) with its huge wooden wheels, and the wooden plow made according to King Solomon's patent. The town is laid out in regular streets and the houses built joining each other, two stories high, the upper story usually smaller than the lower, and the lower entered by trap doors, on the roofs which are reached by ladders from the ground, the houses are built of deobes and plastered withmud. In the whole town which probably covers twenty acres, closely built, there is not a tree, a shrub, or a blade of grass, and the houses are of precisely the same color as the streets. Thus these people have built their houses, farmed their land, and lived generation after generation for hundreds of years. They are honest, industrious, and in this way seem to enjoy life, so that as I have studied them. I have often thought they were happier than if they were more enlightened. Through the aid of the Mexican ladies, who dressed as Indians and stood with them, we were able to get some good Indian groups.

But enough of the Indians. We dined with our friends, and that evening returned to Santa Cruz when we spent the night, and in the morning through the courtesy of the priest, had the church thrown open to us with the privilege to examine and photograph what we chose. It was a huge building, two hundred feet long, and fifty wide, with twenty foot wings on both sides of the altar. On the outside its appearance was rather stately, but it presented the inconsistency of being an adobe building with stone towers. Inside was a study, I could have enjoyed for a week instead of a few hours. The church was built one hundred and ninety years ago. The paintings and images, set, were many, although they displayed but little artistic talent, were very interesting as characterizing the age and the people who made them, and showed the zeal of the Spanish priests who carried their religious teachings among these Indians who seem to have enthusiastically adopted the pomp and pageantry of the Romish faith. The altars in their time had been grand affairs. The pillars and beams over the altar as also the railing was covered with gold leaf. Great numbers of saints were painted on the walls, and some of them I noticed were dressed as Indians and wore feathers in their heads. Only a portion of the floor near the altar was paved with stone, and there were no seats. It has always been a custom with those who could afford it, to bury their dead inside of the church; and here each dying generation had been placed with the bones of their fathers, till the earth in the floor of the church was filled with human bones, and as you pass through the church, you tread on the bones of one generation dug up to bury another. While here I witnessed the burial of a child of poor parents. It was buried a few feet outside of the church door and without a coffin. We left these relics of the past and monument of man's present blindness and degredation in time to reach Santa Fe that night, having been absent three drys.

H. T. H.

Rise of the Society of the Illuminati.

About the year 1728, the great era of infidelity, Voltaire formed a set design to destroy the Christian religion For this purpose he engaged, at several succeeding periods, a number of men, distinguished for power, talents, reputation, and influence; all deadly enemies to the Gospel; atheists; men of profligate principles, and profligate lives. This design he pursued with unabated zeal fifty years; and was seconded by his associates with an ardour, and industry scarcely inferior to his own. In consequence of their united labors, and the labors of others, from time to time combined with them, they ultimately spread the design throughout a great part of Europe; and embarked in it individuals, at little distances, over almost the whole of that continent. Their adherents inserted themselves into every place, office, and employment, in which their agency might become efficacious, and which furnished an opportunity of spreading their corruptions. They were, found in every literary [institution] from the Abcedarian school to the Academy of sciences; and in every civil office, from that of the bailiff to that of the monarch. They swarmed in the palace; they haunted the church. Wherever mischief could be done, they were found, and, wherever they were found, mischief was extensively done. Of books they controlled the publication, the sale, and the character. An immense number they formed; an immense number they forged; prefixed to them the names of reputable writers, and sent them into the world, to be sold for a song; and, when that could not be done, to be given away. Within a period, shorter than could have been imagined, they possessed themselves, to a great extent, of a control, nearly absolute, of the literary, religious and political state of Europe.

With these advantages in their hands, it will easily be believed, that they left no instrument unemployed, and no measure untried, to accomplish their own malignant purposes. With a diligence, courage, constancy, activity, and perseverance, which might rival the efforts of demons themselves, they penetrated into every corner of human society. Scarcely a man, woman, or child, was left unassailed, wherever there was a single hope that the attack might be successful. Books were written and published in innumerable multitudes, in which infidelity was brought down to the level of peasants, and even of children; and poured with immense assiduity into the cottage and the school. Others of a superior kind crept into the shop and the farm-house; and others of a still higher class found their way to the drawing room, the university, and the palace. The business of all men, who were of any importance, and the education of the children of all such men was, as far as possible, engrossed, or at least influenced, by these banditti of the moral world, and the hearts of those who had no importance but in their numbers and physical strength. A sensual, profligate nobility, and princes, if possible, still more sensual and profligate, easily yielded themselves and their children into the hands of these minions of corruption. Too ignorant, too enervated, or too indolent to understand, or even to inquire that they might understand the tendency of all these efforts, they marched quietly on to the gulf of ruin, which was already opened to receive them. With these was combined a priesthood, which, in all its dignified ranks, was still more putrid; and which eagerly yielded up the surplice and the lawn, the desk and the altar, to destroy that Bible which they had vowed to defend as well as to preach; and to renew the crucifixion of that Redeemer whom they had sworn to worship. By these agents and these efforts, the plague was spread with a rapidity, and to an extent, which astonished heaven and earth; and life went out, not in solitary cases, but by an universal extinction.

While these measures were thus going on with a success scarcely interrupted, Dr. Adam Weishaupt, professor of the Canon Law in the University of Ingoldstadt, a city of Bavaria, a man of no contemptible talents, but of immense turpitude, and a Jesuit, established the society of Illuminees. Into this establishment he brought all the systematized iniquity of his brotherhood, distinguished beyond every other class of men for cunning, mischief, an absolute destitution of conscience, an an absolute disregard of all the interests of man, and a torpid insensibility to moral obligation. No fraternity, for so long a time, or to so great an extent, united within its pale such a mass of talents or employed in its service such a succession of vigorous efforts. The serpentine system of this order Weishaupt perfectly understood. The great design of the Jesuits had always been to engross the power and influence of Europe, and to regulate all its important affairs. The system of measures, which they had adopted for this end, was superior to every preceding scheme of human policy. To this design Weishaupt, who was more absolutely an atheist than Voltaire, and as cordially wished for the ruin of Christianity, superadded a general intention of destroying the moral character of man. The system of policy adopted by the Jesuits, was, therefore, exactly fitted to his purpose; for the design, with this superaddition, was exactly the same.

With these advantageous preparations, he boldly undertook this work of destruction, and laid the axe at the root of all moral principle, and the sense of all moral obligation, by establishing a few fundamental doctrines, which were amply sufficient for this purpose. These were, "that God is nothing; that Government is a curse, and authority an usurpation; that civil society is the only apostasy of man; that the possession of property is robbery; that chastity and natural affection are mere prejudices; and that adultery, assassination, poisoning, and other crimes of a similar nature, are lawful, and even virtuous. A large branch of the Masonic societies in Germany and France had already adopted the same objects, as the great and controlling ones of all their personal and united labors. Here secrecy furnished the most advantageous opportunities for the formation of every design, and the most advantageous contrivance for its successful execution. Here the spirit of hostility against religion and government was kindled, and blown up into a flame. Here, in a word, all that vice could wish, and profligacy attempt, was proposed, matured, and set for execution. Under these circumstances, were founded the societies of Illuminism. They spread, of course, with a rapidity which nothing but fact could have induced any sober mind to believe. Before the year 1786, they were established in great numbers throughout Germany, in Sweden, Russia, Poland, Austria, Holland, France, Switzerland, Italy, England, Scotland, and even in America. In all these was taught the grand and sweeping principle of corruption, that the end sanctions the means; a principle which, if everywhere adopted, would overturn the universe.

The design of the founder and his coadjutors was nothing less than to engross the empire of the world, and to place mankind beneath the feet of himself, and his successors.

Voltaire died, in the year following the establishment of Illuminism. His disciples, with one heart and one voice, united in its interests; and finding a more absolute system of corruption than themselves had been able to form, entered eagerly into all its plans and purposes. Thenceforward, therefore, all the legions of infidelity are to be considered as embarked in a single bottom; and as cruising together against order, peace, and virtue, on a voyage of rapine and blood.

The French revolution burst upon mankind at this moment. Here was opened an ample field for the labors of these abandoned men in the work of pollution and death. There is no small reason to believe, that every individual illumined, and almost, if not quite, every infidel, on the continent of Europe, lent his labors, when he could, and his wishes when he could not, for the advancement of the sins and the miseries, which attended this unexampled corruption. Had not God taken the wise in their own craftiness, and caused the wicked to fall into the pit which they digged, and into the snares which their hands had set, it is impossible to conjecture, the extent to which they would have carried their devastation of human happiness. But, like the profligate rulers of Israel, those who succeeded, regularly destroyed their predecessors.—Pres. Dwight.

The Origin and Early History of Freemasonry, by G. W. Steinbrenner, Past Master, extols the institution of Freemasonry very highly, but says of it, after giving extended account of the early times of the fraternity:

"In very many instances, Masonic authors, blinded by a foolish vanity, and by a desire of proving the vast antiquity of the institution, have strenuously combatted the idea that the fraternity was derived of operative Masons. . . . . Each fancied resemblance or agreement, with some symbol or alleged custom of the ancient mysteries, is seized upon as a sure and reliable indication of a direct connection, and thus they not unfrequently involve themselves in matters which have not the slightest bearing on the subject in question. There is no record, sacred or profane to induce us to believe that the fraternity has been derived from any of these sources. To assert this may make the vulgar stare, but will excite rather the contempt than the admiration of the wise. Let Freemasons then give up their vain boastings, which ignorance has foisted into the order, and relinguish a fabulous antiquity, rather than sacrifice common sense."

Dr. Dalcho, the compiler of the "Book of Constitutions" for South Carolina, says: "Nither Adam, nor Noah, nor Nimrod, nor David, nor Solomon, nor Hiram nor St. John the Evangelist, were Masons."

The American Cyclopedia under the article of "Freemasonry," with Steinbrenner and other historians, fixes the rise of Speculative Freemasonry about the year A. D. 1717.—Am. Wesleyan.

It is surely high time that the religion of Him who declared, "Behold I spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing," should prevail over all secret societies, so far, at least, as his followers are concerned. Especially should this be the case with Freemasonry, which forbids any allusion to Christ or his teaching at its meetings, but rather glories in putting all religions on the same level; and this not in a society for mere secular purposes, but in one which boasts a high moral and religious code. No infidel society has more completely ignored Christ; and how Christians can be connected with it surpasses our comprehension. Where secret societies have no object in their secrecy but a sort of child's play, they should grow out of their bangles and spangles, their regalia and high-sounding titles, their pass-words and grips. Where, on the other hand, they have any objects that cannot be quite as well and even better attained without secrecy, they are dangerous elements in a free community. The church of Rome is quite right in its relentless condemnation of secret societies, in which, however, it should include its own orders of monks, friars and nuns, and especially the society of Jesuits, all of which are secret as the grave, and eminently dangerous to human freedom.—*N. A Challenge.

Mr. Hunter, of Freeport, Illinois, writes: "I intend to send the heaviest petition that goes up from this State. This is a challenge to all who may engage in the same work."

So far as possible we hope the names will be written in ink. Keep the petitions as clean as you can conveniently. Be sure that those who sign, do so knowing what they are doing (see note concerning the chartering the Masonic Hall Association in this number of the paper,) and then try to send up the largest list of names that energy accompanied by perseverance can collect.

Who will send up more than Mr. Hunter? Will anyone?

Pennsylvanians, Forward!

GREEN GROVE, Luzerne Co., Pa.

Such is the orders from the Commander-in-chief of the armies of Israel, now ringing in our ears. It is the war trumpet of God sounding through the evolutions of providence by the spirit or breath of the Almighty. The order is to the freemen of the Key-stone State. In the providence of God, and by the promptings of his spirit, we trust, were we led to organize on the 5th of Nov., 1874, a State Association opposed to secret societies, in which some ten or fifteen of the counties are already represented. A lecture fund is started and $200 put down in figures by good men, besides verbal pledges, and we have the prospect of reaching the sum needed by the 1st of December. We have, we hope, also found the man for State Agent and Lecturer, of good address and of scholarly bearing, who will go down into the pit while his praying brethren "stay at the windless," as Robert Hall and his coadjutors did, while Cary went down into pagan darkness on the great work of missions.

Ours is as much a work of missions designed to bring "the true light" to bear on the surrounding darkness of the lodge worship of the country, as was the work of Cary and Judson. There are only two religions, the false and the true. The religion of Jesus Christ is the true, while all the systems of religion in the world, born of men and of the devil, are one in nature and design, and are alike fatal to the souls that embrace them. He who worships the Brahma of the Hindoos is as near the true worship as he who worships the "Grand Architect of the universe" in the Masonic sense; and we think nearer, as the Hindoo has also Vishu and Siva a kind of trinity aproximating at least, the true idea. Freemasonry is as much a false religion as is Braminism and is as much the subject of missions. To this proposition we challenge contradiction.

Christians and citizens of Pennsylvania, ours is a double mission work. To meet and enlighten the thousands who are subjected to a system both anti-Christian amd anti-republican, a sworn enemy to both church and state. In this the saints and citizens may work abreast as against the "Great Rebellion," ten years ago. One with the holy promptings of the sacramental host of God, the other with sacred fire of the patriot. Happy is the man in whose breast both the Christian and the patriot meet. Such, we believe, is the man, whom God in his providence is pointing out to work in our noble State, against "whatever exalteth itself above all that is called God," "that man of sin and mystery of iniquity," called "The Orders."

In view of this great work we ask the Vice-presidents of our State Association whose names are published elsewhere, to start a subscription immediately, and get as much as possible subscribed, so be paid quarterly, to help support our State Lecturer when he enters the field. Let the amount obtained by each one be reported in figures as soon as possible to the Corresponding Secretary of the State Association. "Let us work while the day lasts for the night will come when no man can work."

The following is the form of subscription to which we have obtained in pledges $200:

We, the undersigned, hereby agree to pay the sums opposite our names, payable quarterly, to sustain a State Lecturer in the Key-stone State.

Reform News.

—The General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, returned from Indiana Tuesday morning and is attending the State Convention in Chicago.

—Interesting news from Elder Barlow's work in New York State came too late for this issue.

—Pennslvanians may be proud of the work commenced in their State. See the report and Elder Callender's notice. The resolutions adopted were too long to find room in this number.

The State Association of Pennsylvania Organized.

To all Christian friends opposed to secretism:—You will rejoice with us we know, for a good work has been inaugurated in the Key-stone State; and the account of it is this. Our N. E. Pennsylvania Christian Association held its fifth annual meeting in the Free Methodist Hall at Wilkesbarre, Nov. 4th and 5th. In response to an earnest call of our beloved brother N. Callender, published in the Cynosure, several brethren appeared as delegates to take part in forming a State organization. The first day's business was given to the work of our local association. The usual committees were appointed and reported, officers were elected for the year and resolutions passed. We came together with stronger convictions than ever of the importance of our cause to the welfare of church and society generally. We met new friends; were nobly entertained by our Free Methodist friends of Wilkesbarre; engaged frequently in prayer for God's blessing on our endeavors to overthrow the numerous and pestilential secret orders; had two most excellent lectures from our good Bro. J. L. Barlow, on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. These lectures were delivered to fair and attentive audiences, and were models in their fullness of argument, in logical exactness, in proving every point from the standard works of secretism itself. The first lecture was on the religion, the second, on the secrets of Masonry. Such lectures as Bro. Barlow gives will tell powerfully on intelligent and honest minds.

On Thursday, Nov. 5th, at 10 A. M., after an hour spent in devotional services, the convention was organized by the choice of Rev. S. E. Miller as temporary chairman, and Bro. S. E. Callender, clerk. After full discussion and prayer to God for direction, it was resolved to proceed to form a State Christian Association opposed to secret societies.

The following persons were, on nomination, elected as permanent officers for the current year:—

President, Rev. A. L. Post, Montrose, Pa.

Vice-presidents: Dea. John Jones, Phenixville, Chester Co; E. J. Chalfant, York, York Co.; Rev. M. D. McDougal, Wilkesbarre, Luzerne, Co.; James Stewart, Hoken daqua, Lehigh Co,; James Mathews, Philadelphia; Allen White, Cole Creek, Bradford Co.; George Cobb, Factoryville, Wyoming Co.; D. M Elderkin, Spartansburg, Crawford Co.; Rev. J. M. Bishop, Chambersburg; S. E. Miller, Clifford, Susquehanna Co.; John Stewart, Northampton Co.; Rev. I. N. Earle, Wayne Co.; E. D. J. Myers, Carbon Co.; Rev. David Dodds, Fairview, Butler Co.

Rec. Sec'y. Rev. J. W. Raynor, Union Dale, Susquehanna Co.

Cor. Sec'y., Rev. Nathan Callender, Greene Grove, Luzerne, Co.

Treasurer, W. B. Bertels, Wilkesbarre, Luzerne Co.

Executive Committee: Clark Lowry, S. C. Stevens, C. E. Callender, Dr. J. C. Miles, Simon Besecker, Davis Seamans, Geo. Cobb.

It was then resolved that the following brethren be a committee to draft a constitution and report in the afternoon: Rev. A L. Post, J. L. Barlow, M. D. McDougal. A recess was then taken till 2 1–2 P. M.

In the afternoon the Association was called to order by president Post, and after prayer, Rev. David Dodds, of Fairview, Butler Co., presented his credentials as delegate and was welcomed to membership and made one of the Vice-presidents. The committee on Constitution reported the following, which was considered and unanimously adopted:

CONSTITUTION.

Art. 1*st*. This Association shall be known as the Pennsylvania State Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies.

Art. 2*d*. The object of this Association shall be the dissemination of truth with regard to secret societies by lectures, books, papers, tracts and personal effort; and the endeavor by all proper and legitimate means to banish such societies from the church of Christ, which they cripple and supplant, and from civil society which they demoralize and corrupt.

Art 3*d*. The officers of this Association shall be a President; a Vice-president in each county of the State where friends are found who are in sympathy with the objects of this body, and actively operating therewith; a Recording Secretary; a Corresponding Secretary, a Treasurer; and an Executive Committee of seven, besides the President, Secretaries and Treasurer; to which body shall be committed all the business of the Association not transacted in open session, and five members of said committee shall be a quorum.

Art 4th. The duty of these officers shall be such as usually devolve upon the officers in like bodies; only that the Vice-presidents in each county shall as soon as practicable secure the organization in his locality, of a county association, auxiliary to this; and further that he perform such other work as in his estimation shall advance the objects of this Association, and the Corresponding Secretary shall open correspondence with the Corresponding Secretaries of other State Associations, as well as those of county and other associations in the State, which correspondence he shall present in abstract at each annual meeting of this Association.

Art. 5th. The above officers shall be elected at each annual meeting, and shall hold their office until their successors are elected.

Art 6th. Any persons may become members of this Association by signing the Constitution and by contributing of their means, and by personal effort towards the advancement of its legitimate work.

Art 7. This Association shall meet annually, and at other times if deemed proper and necessary, at the call of the chairman of the Executive Committee, or as the Association may otherwise direct while in session.

Art 8th. This constitution may be altered or amended at any regular meeting of the body, by a majority vote of the members present.

We hope, dear brethren, with each year of our history to receive large accessions of our citizens as adherents and co-workers with the principles here laid down, and hope our Key-stone Association may keep pace in zeal and usefulness with yours of sister States.

After the adoption of the Constitution, prayer was offered by Rev. David Dodds, of the United Presbyterian church.

It was next resolved to circulate a subscription to raise funds to secure a State Lecturer, and between 200 and 300 dollars were raised in a few minutes as the beginning of said fund.

It was also resolved that 500 copies of the proceedings of this Convention with the Constitution, and a list of the officers elect, be published. The Corresponding Secretary was directed to notify the several Vice-presidents of their appointment and invite them to earnest effort to secure a State Lecturer.

Some other miscellaneous business was transacted. Various brethren remarked upon the importance of our enterprise, and it was the solemn conviction of all that we had entered upon a great work in the Key-stone State, and that with God's blessing we may eventually pull down many strong holds of secretism. The resolutions just passed by the N. E. Penn'a Association were adopted by this body, as expressive of our views, hopes and aims.

A resolution of hearty thanks to our Free Methodist brethren for the use of their hall and for kind and generous hospitality was passed, and the State Association so fairly started then adjourned, after prayer, to meet at the call of the Executive Committee.

Friends, we ask your prayers, that the cause of social, moral and religious welfare may prosper among us and with you. Yours for Christian right,

JAMES W. RAYNOR.

The Du Page County (Ill.) Association.

The annual meeting of this, one of the oldest county auxiliaries, was held last week (Nov. 11th,) in Downer's Grove. The local arrangements were considerable, but Elder Freeman was strong enough for the burden. This was the first Anti-masonic meeting the people of the place have had the privilege of attending, hence the labor of awakening an interest, securing a house, circulating notices, and breaking through the indifference of the people to secure a local attendance. In the county at large, arrangements were made by Prof. Stratton, President, and E. D. Bailey, Secretary of the Association, for preliminary meetings for appointing delegates and arousing an interest throughout the county. These were held with more or less success in several townships. Good meetings were held in Lombard, Big Woods, Warrenville and Lisle, a small audience was out at Wayne, and at Bloomingdale and Danby the meetings failed, one from insufficient notice, the other because the church trustees changed their minds after once granting their house. All these meetings should have had longer notice.

On Tuesday evening before the convention, Rev. A. J. Bailey, late of Monroe, Wis., lectured in the church at Downer's Grove; and the Association met in the same place the next forenoon. Rev. A. D. Freeman, of Downer's Grove, was elected president and E. D. Bailey, of Wheaton, secretary for the year ensuing. Rev. I. A. Hart, of Wheaton, spoke in an interesting manner of his own experiences in Masonry and of seeing the copy of Morgan's Illustrations of Masonry before it had passed the press, in an office in Utica, N. Y.

In the afternoon addresses were made by Rev. J. B. Walker, of Wheaton, on the morality of the lodge compared with that of Scripture, and by H. H. Hinman, the State agent, on some of the pagan characteristics of Masonry. Brief remarks were made by Rev. Wm. Pinkney and E. B. Thompson. A number of delegates were appointed to the State Convention in Chicago and a committee to examine into and report Masonic interference with justice in the courts of the county.

In the evening Pres. Blanchard addressed a greatly interested audience, proving the lodge system to be idolatry, to be opposed to the principle of property, and an antagonist of virtue, endeavoring to break down all distinctions between good and evil. Remarks were also made by H. H. Hinman, E. D. Bailey and H. Carpenter. The influence of this meeting and its discussions will be lasting and of great benefit throughout the county. It will be followed by neighborhood meetings during the winter.

From the General Agent.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 4, 1874.

DEAR K:—I have been studying the effect of secretism upon the clergy and business men of this city and find that this would-be umpire and dictator presents the same imperious front and relentless demands here as at other places. Business men shrink from the encounter which opposition inevitably brings, and the clergymen of this city (with honorable exceptions) cower before it. How men professing faith in Christ and believing in the accountability of man to his Maker, can so far forget their duties to themselves and to those whom they profess to instruct in the way of life as to strike their colors and surrender without a struggle to these anti-Christian, anti-republican, deistical orders is a mystery which I am unable to solve. I have called upon more than a score of persons in the city, nearly all of whom profess sympathy with us and aversion to the lodge, and although many of them are men of wealth, only four become subscribers to the Cynosure. With most who decline it was evident that "prudential considerations" were the principle if not the only reason. I suppose it is true as Bro. Fall remarked in our Convention that "every reform must educate its own members," but it seems a little disheartening when ministers who declare themselves strongly opposed to the lodge and apprehensive of danger from its workings say, 'I have never preached or spoken publicly against it and do not feel called upon to take any active part in the discussion,' and refuse to commit themselves even so far as to read our paper. Have not these men read, "He that knew his Master's will and did it not shall be beaten with many stripes," or, "If, the watchman see the sword come, and blow not his trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand?" Ez. xxxiii. 6.

Is such a course Christlike or at all consistent with the duties, covenant or solemn vows of a minister of Christ? If so, where is the proof? I confess that I have not so learned Christ, or so understood the work of the Christian ministry. Paul could say, when called to preach Christ "I conferred not with flesh and blood," and his ministry was approved in the conversion of multitudes, and his example as well as that of the Master is a constant reproof to all who shrink from duty for fear of consequences. Pres. Finney, whom so many of these men admire and applaud, saw the wickedness and deep-laid snares of the lodge, knew its vindicitive spirit and its power to strike and "conceal the hand," yet for the love of Christ and of souls, he flung off the shackle and boldly renouncing the order fearlessly denounced the whole "system of iniquity." Others have boldly followed and scores of young men have been saved from these Christ-rejecting orders. Had the pastors of this city been true to the Gospel rule, how many of the 128 Knights Templars reported in Roper Commandery might have been saved, and if they perish at whose hands will their blood be required, if not at the hand of the minister who saw the sword coming and uttered no warning?

News from Henry County, Ind.

SPICELAND, 11th Mo., 9th, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

T. B. McCormick, of Princeton, Ind. delivered two lectures here on the evenings of the 2d and 3d of this month, to a full house.

On the first evening he gave us in forcible and well adapted language the general character of secret societies, distinguishing between associations whose bond of union is organized secrecy, and the private family or church organization which very properly may have matters better kept within their own circles than spread abroad to the world; the members of which, however, although this may be the understanding, are under no obligations in the terms of compact or membership, either by oath, affirmation or any means whatever to keep any thing secret—to keep a secret before it is known what the secret is, that is to be kept, as is the case with Freemasons, Oddfellows, etc. He drew a distinction, between what we have actually witnessed and seen for ourselves, and that which we have from unquestionable authority, showing, that notwithstanding the difference, the latter, as the former should be conclusive. The application was, he knew what Freemasonry was from experience—he had taken three degrees in the lodge. Odd-fellowship he did not know about in this way, but he had his authority from seceders of unquestionable veracity, who did know, and therefore he believed it.

How many Masons were present we have no means of knowing, but there was but little if any visible uneasiness manifested when Masonry was under review. Perhaps, as they must have seen he was in, and knew their secrets, they thought their best way was to maintain a stolid reticence in regard to the whole matter. But, not so when Odd-fellowship was exposed. Much disorder and insulting behavior were exhibited, giving evidence of the truth of the adage "Touch a galled horse's back and he will flinch." Doubtless, inasmuch as the lecturer did not profess to have ever been inside of their lodge, they felt at liberty to deny the truth of his statements pertinaciously.

The next lecture was devoted to the religious, benevolent, and to some extent, political and judicial aspects of the question; much better order prevailed. It was evident that the speaker had the sympathy of a number of the audience; they appeared to be well pleased with both discourses. And I trust some eyes were opened, if to no greater degree, to see "men as trees walking" at least. Perhaps by another touch of the salve of truth, they would be made to "see clearly." If we could have some good lecturer—seceding Odd-fellow who knows whereof he affirms, to talk to our people, I think it might do much good.

The Yates City Lodge Troubles.

YATES CITY, Ill., Oct. 24, 1874.

MR. EDITOR:—Being an expelled Mason I am not of course supposed to know anything about what is going on in the lodge. I have, however, obtained some information that may be interesting to some of your readers. About the time I was preparing my appeal to the Grand Lodge, I called on Mr. B. Mason, the man who suspended me in the sham trial before Yates City Lodge, and had some talk with him about my case. Said he, "That transaction which you complained of, and finally exposed, was an outrageous thing; but as long as you could not prove that Ben. stole the blackballs, Masonic charity required that you should keep still about it." It appears that Mr. Mason was not entirely satisfied with the result of my efforts to obtain an investigation, for soon after the Grand Lodge had confirmed my expulsion he applied to Yates City Lodge for a demit or certificate of withdrawal; and the excuse he made for wishing to withdraw from the lodge was that he was getting too old to attend the lodge meetings regularly. Now Mr. Mason is about of the same age as Mr. Nicholson and moreover, he lives only one and a half miles from town; whereas, Mr. Nicholson lives five miles away. But ridiculous as his excuse, was it was accepted by the lodge against the protest of several of its members and he granted a demit. Andrew B. Taylor, and his son Frank, withdrew from the lodge about the same time or soon after, and neither of them were able to give a lawful excuse for so doing. J. H. Nicholson wanted to withdraw, but finally concluded to stay and fight it out.

Just two weeks before the meeting of the Grand Lodge for 1874, Benj. Kersey, and G. W. Pierce applied to the lodge for demits, giving as their excuse for wishing to withdraw that they intended to emigrate to Springfield, Missouri. (Messrs. Kersey and Pierce are not quite as popular in Yates City as they were two years ago.) This was Nicholson's long-looked-for opportunity and he immediately prefered charges against Kersey similar to those presented by me nearly two years ago, except that they were more explicit He in fact charged Bro. Kersey with stealing the blackballs preparatory to balloting on the petition of his son to be made a Mason. and named as his witnesses Bro. W. H. Eastman (Kersey's confederate) and Bro. Thomas Swinney (the man in whose presence Eastman boasted of that exploit.)

These charges took Pierce so much by surprise, that he is supposed to have been sick and was forced to leave the room. He, however, so far recovered his wits in a few days as to be able to appear before the lodge as council for Bro. Kersey, and, as such, he asked the Worshipful Master to dismiss the case for want of jurisdiction. A Worshipful Master (elect or protem) not being responsible for his actions to the lodge over which he presided, the charges were accordingly dismissed. This was only three or four days before the meeting of the Grand Lodge and Ben. Kersey and his friends were confident of his ability to procure an honorable discharged from Yates City Lodge before the matter could be brought before the Grand Lodge.

But in this they were I have good reason to believe sadly disappointed, for Nicholson sent his charges up to the G. L and asked that the matter be referred to a committee for investigation. I have heard that Dr. Hensley, the W. M. of Yates City Lodge, refused to go before the G. L committee on Appeals and Grievances. On Thursday, the last day of the meeting of the G. L., and while Dr. Hensley was yet in Chicago, Past Master Longdon, by consent of the Senior Wardens, opened Yates City Lodge and put the question of Kersey's demit to vote. Some one of the brethren intimated that charges were pending against Bro Kersey in the G. L. But Longdon pretended that he had received word from Bro. Hensley that said charges were dismissed and therefore the lodge could not be interfered with on that account. The lodge finally voted to give Kersey a demit. But at this point Kersey and his friends found another obstacle in the person of Frank Madden, the secretary, who it appears is not quite so pliable as was his predecessor. He refused to give Kersey his demit until he received official notice that those said charges were dismissed or otherwise disposed of. He has not yet received such notice, and I do not think any one except members of the Grand Lodge knows what was done with those charges. In the meantime Tom Kersey is crowding his claim to the 3d degree and his case has been referred to a select committee under some new law or special dispensation, and the probaility is that he will be a Master Mason in a few days.

Our Politics.

I have been much surprised at your Christianity being brought down under law, calling men to political parties, and not to Christ in man the hope of glory. For I have no confidence in man that is born of woman only and alone in him that is born of God. Christ must destroy the works of the devil, no other power can do it. Oh! may the Cynosure call men to Christ and not to political parties or to men.

As ever your friend,

Israel Doane.

Young Hickory. O.

My opinion is that the National platform is loaded with too many issues and that the free-trade-plank will kill any party that incorporates it in their platform. Yours as ever,

Dear Sirs:—My interest in the cause which you represent so well has not abated. But I deprecate the political movement, and can have no part or interest in it. However, I would guard my vote against the support of secrecy in every form, and this question shall have first importance with me. Yours very truly,

OUR MAIL.

John McCullough, Pella, Iowa, writes:

"One has only to go out to get subscriptions for an Anti-masonic paper, to know the influence of Masonry. Many who pretend to be opposed to the system are afraid to take the paper for fear it will injure their business. So you see the great majority of mankind are under the influence of Masonry, directly or indirectly. But we must keep the ball rolling until public sentiment becomes changed. We have a small Baptist church here who have not defiled their garments with secret societies. We have agreed to observe the day of fasting and prayer. Let us look for great results, and may the Lord hasten the day when these societies shall be swept out of the land. I suppose, according to your paper, the commission pays the postage. I will try to send you some more (subscriptions) from time to time, as I want to do something to help on this great reformation. I think from all accounts there is progress making."

We wish all our readers would send in new subscriptions to pay their postage on the Cynosure. The commission on $2.00 new subscriptions, prepays the postage on two papers for one year.

Van R. Cary, Freeport, Ill., writes:

"I cannot do without it, (the Cynosure.) We want a lecturer here some time this winter. I will do what I can."

Jacob Haffner, Donnelson, Iowa, writes about having been swindled in a patent right investment by secret society men, and also about a conversation he had with a man who had been a Freemason for thirteen years. The Mason said that Elder Bernard's book was true to a dot.

Robert Stockwell, La Fayette, Ind., writes:

"I fear that little impression can be made against Masonry here unless some competent man comes here to lecture."

Wm. Oburn, Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"The paper is now first-class; and merits the hearty support of every one disposed to patronize sound literature and to have the morals and politics of the country settle upon a proper basis."

S. R. Overton, Wolcott, N. Y., writes:

"Anti-secretism goes at a discount and secret organizations abound. Wish we were able to pay for lectures through this benighted region."

Theron Palmeter, Clear Lake, Iowa, writes:

"Elder Williams, of Elk Point, Decotah Territory, is a young man about thirty years of age. He had taken three degrees of Masonry and withdrew from the lodge and renounced all connection with it while here on this circuit three years ago. He is poor, and some of the Masons threatened to starve him to terms, and the conference took the same position in sending him to a barren circuit; but he has good pluck and is not easily turned against his convictions of Christian duty."

Will the people allow men who shun not to declare the whole counsel of God starve, while they sustain cringing crowds as their leaders?

L. Sperry, Waupun, Wis., writes:

"I pray the Lord to raise up a mighty host that will sustain you with payers, sympathy and money. I consider myself a life subscriber to your paper, and have the promise of two new subscribers."

Conrad Zorbaugh, Council Bluffs, Iowa, writes:

"I am so highly pleased with the dear Cynosure that I can never do without it. It comes regularly and is full of interest and truth. It has no equal in the world."

Wilson Milligan, Portland, Ind., writes:

"The people are too much asleep to feel the need of reform. But I think the time not far distant when they will be wakened by the thunders of Sinai."

R. Osborn, Eldorado, Kansas, writes:

"I think I shall succeed in scattering broadcast some seed that I hope will bring forth fruit in due time. But I shall wait to see the result. I am very much pleased with the paper and hope the blessing of God may attend your efforts."

H. S. Riegel, Auburn, Ill., writes:

"I wish I could attend the State meeting, but I see no possible chance to get there. I would be glad if something could be done in Sangamon county. It is certainly a hard place for Anti-masons. My heart is with you in the work of enlightening the masses. In the work of rescuing our country from secret society men."

Wm. R. Bundy, Liberty Center, Ohio, sends a new subscription, and writes:

"The man subscribing for the paper is one who has secretly renounced the lodge; and his former brethren in the fraternity simply believe him to be non-affiliating. Yet at heart he feels a loathing for the lodge, but has not the moral courage to speak openly against it."

LESSON xlviii.—NOV. 29, 1874.—THE BETRAYAL.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK xiv. 42-50. Commit 42 50. Primary verse 44.

42 Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand.

43 And immediately, while he yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and the scribes and the elders.

44 And he that betrayed him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he; take him, and lead him away safely.

45 And as soon as he was come, he goeth straightway to him, and saith, Master, Master; and kissed him.

46 And they laid their hands on him, and took him.

47 And one of them that stood by drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear.

48 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Are ye come out as against a thief, with swords and with staves to take me?

49 I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took me not: but the Scriptures must be fulfilled.

50 And they all forsook him, and fled.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if he had not been born."—Matt. xxvi. 24.

TOPIC.—"Betrayed into the hands of sinners."

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

After the supper at the house of Simon, Judas went to the chief priests and sold his Master (ch. xiv. 10, 11). Next in order was the passover (verses 12 21). Then followed the Lord's Supper (verses 22-25.) Then the walk to the garden, and the talk by the way (verses 26-32). Then the agony in the garden (verses 33 41).

What is the first topic? Where is it said they went from supper? (verse 26). What place is named in verse 32? What brook did they cross to reach it? (John xviii. 1.) What is it called in this last verse? How did Judas know the place? (John xviii. 2.) What did they talk about on the way? (Mark xiv. 27-31.) Who went with him into the garden? (verse 33.) How many times did he pray? (Matt. xxvi. 39, 42, 44.) Who came to strengthen him? (Luke xxii. 43.)

What is the second topic? Who led the band? (verse 43.) Who was with him? What weapons did they have? (verse 43.) What else? (John xvi i. 3.) How many things do you know about Judas? What did Jesus do? (John xviii. 4.) How did his words affect them? (John xviii. 6.) Could he have escaped? How many soldiers were waiting his call? (Matt. xvi. 53.) What did Jesus ask or command? (John xviii 8, 9.)

What is the third topic? What token had Judas given? (verse 44.) What was a a kiss the sign of? What did Jesus say to Judas? (Matt. xvi. 50, and Luke xxii. 48.) This was Christ's last word to the traitor. What is said about kissing Christ in Psalm li. 12?

What is the fourth topic? What is said in Luke xxii. 36-38? What in Luke xxii. 49? Who used the sword, and who was smitten? (John xviii. 10.) What did Jesus do? (Luke xxii. 51.) What did he say? (John xviii. 11.) What had Jesus prayed? (verse 36.) Now he would not allow any to prevent it?

What is the fifth topic? How many disciples fled? (verse 50.) Do you think any act like this now? What had they said? (verse 29 31.) Easy to say, hard to do. What have you learned from this lesson? —National S. S. Teacher.

Conversion of Sabbath-School Scholars.

Of late years the churches are pretty successful in gathering the children into the Sunday-schools, but it is a lamentable fact that comparatively few give evidences of genuine conversion. Even when conversion is professed there are many cases where there is not good evidence of its soundness. There are sound conversions among Sabbath-school children, but so many ministers and laymen seem to be satisfied with a slight healing of the wounds of conviction, or with very slight conviction. There is at the bottom of all this a pretty strong degree of Pelagianism. These children need deep conviction and thorough regeneration. Sabbath-schools do much good otherwise, and are instrumental in many conversions; but in thorough conversions they are far less efficient than they should be. Superintendents and teachers ought to be awakened to the solemn obligations resting upon them with regard to the conversion of the Sabbath-school scholars.—Telescope.

Mr. C. B Stout told the Baptist Sunday-school Convention of Vermont, the other day, that "superintendents should, under certain circumstances, ignore lessons entirely, for some of the very best lessons can be had by taking up some great calamity," and cited the Mill River calamity as a subject. But the Standard remarks that, "Mr. Stout ought to know, and may be does, but let us advise the superintendent to be pretty sure what he is about before he tries it. Good horses pull slackly when they expect the harness to break, and good teachers are liable to prepare poorly when there is a possibility that their preparation will be ignored. And besides, while the Mill River flood, Chicago fire, etc, are big things, and serve well as illustrations, the B ble is bigger and contains several unequalled texts."

How can Parents Help the Sunday-School.

1. In attendance:

By requiring children to attend.

By going with the children.

By praying for the school and conversing with the children about it.

By making previous preparation.

By providing their children with suitable clothing.

2 In the study of the lesson:

By adopting it for family worship.

By commenting on the lesson in so simple a manner that the children can understand it.

By inducing them to give some account of the lessons taught in the school.

By a pleasant drill on sacred themes of study, such as Bible geography, chronology, history, &c.

Masonic Obligations.

[From the Anti-masonic Review, 1831.]

How can Masons have taken the oaths as they are revealed? It seems impossible that wise men should have proceeded to engulph one impious oath after another, like the inebriating cup which creates the thirst it is intended to satisfy! Those men who have never taken these oaths, justly require more ample proof of their truth, before they can believe it possible, that our best citizens have assumed, and are still subject to such unhallowed obligations.

Men that are tempted to become Freemasons, and join the lodge, do it soon after they come of age, and before they have acquired experience in life. They see that Freemasonry gives influence and consequence; which youth, at least, are apt to desire. To attain its importance, or power, they must submit to the rules of the secret order; and the first rule of Freemasonry being secrecy, they can only imagine the rest; and thus it is imagined:

"To take an unknown oath is a fearful step; but to attain this influence or object in view, I must take the oath. Washington has done it, and La Fayette; the clergy do it, and no man's warning voice is heard to cry: 'There is death in the pot.' So it must be an innocent oath; and I will submit to the venerable forms of this most ancient and renouned mystery, especially as it was perfected by Solomon, and patronized by St. John."

I confess that this kind of reasoning satisfied the fears, and overcame the scruples of one, so far as to make him willing to submit to the rites of initiation used by this mysterious and respectable society, even to the taking of an unknown oath; and having been misled by example, his example shall not mislead another.

The candidate for Masonry having made up his mind to submit to the initiatory riter, is not surprised at the requisition of a material change in his apparel, or by a hood over his eyes. He was expecting some strange thing; his mind was prepared for it; and, being blinded, he knows not whether it is a rope that is tied around his neck, or an apron string from the loins of the Worshipful Master of the wonderful lodge. He is led from the preparation room to the lodge room, unconscious that he is both hoodwinked and haltered, like a fellon for the gallows. He only finds, as he had expected to find, strange proceedings; and in the midst of Masonic prayer and mummery, and solemnly enacted farce, he is made to kneel and repeat the oath after the master.

Does a scruple arise in his bosom, it is overpowered by the novelty of his situation, and by the confidence he places in the friends around him, and in the good men who have traveled this road before him, without having raised a monument to warn future adventurers. He puts the scruple down and submits to the whole oath with the firm assurance that so all masters and fellows have done before him from the time of king Solomon. Few men, so situated, have a judgment sufficiently prompt and clear to discern the error they are committing; and if they do, cable-towed and blinded, with a Mason on each arm to attend, especially if they prove refractory, it is too late to retreat; the mind of the half-naked and shivering novice is not equal to the effort of resisting such a host of difficulties. He had expected strange things, and he is not surprised to find them.

But in this degraded posture, what unjust oaths does he swear?

At the lips of the "Most Worshipful," on his knees, profanely in presence of Almighty God, he swears "always to hail, conceal, and never reveal any part or parts, art or arts, point or points, of the secret arts and mysteries of ancient Freemasonry." This oath is that by which criminals are emboldened to hail their brethren upon the bench, or in the jury box. Morgan, the Le Roy Convention, the Three Distinct Knocks, Jachin and Boaz, and Carlisle, agree in revealing it as an oath of Freemasonry. [These are titles of distinct revelations of Freemasonry; that by Morgan, and by the Le Roy Convention, is well known. Jachin and Boaz was published in London between 1770 and 1780, I think. The Three Distinct Knocks, London, 1795. Carlisle's, London, 1825.] The harm of it is that it cannot in its strictness be kept. It is too much "always to hail," i. e., to recognize, to acknowledge the presence of a mystic brother by secret signs. Gentlemen seeing these Masonic arts about a vagabond, find it hard to hail them. "Conceal and never reveal any part or parts, point or points of the secret arts." Possibly one cannot speak, or write, without revealing some point or parts of the secret arts of Freemasonry. And so, many conscientious persons dare not speak, when Freemasonry is mentioned, lest they forfeit their peace by a breach of the oath. We commend this fidelity, but it is a misfortune to be called severely to exercise it in so vain a cause.

HAILING SIGN OF DISTRESS.

He furthermore swears:

"Whenever I see the grand hailing sign of distress given, or hear the words accompanying that sign, and the person who gives it appears to be in distress, I will fly to his relief at the risk of my life, should there be a greater probability of saving his life than of losing my own."

This oath is revealed by Morgan and the Le Roy Convention; it is univeral in American Freemasonry of the school of Webb; and thus a Mason in Alabama recently confesses that he used it:—Indicted for an assault with intent to kill, he fled. The sheriff overtook him, and, having no way of escape, he turned upon the sheriff, whom he knew to be a Mason, and gave him the grand hailing sign of distress; upon which the sheriff bade him avoid his sight. And in his confession, the contrite culprit says, under his own name, Henry Blakely, that meaning in future to shun all affrays, he shall have no further use for this secret, and he makes it public for the benefit of the community.

But observe, this oath regarding the grand hailing sign of distress, is not found in the Three Distinct Knocks, Jachin and Boaz, or Carlisle's revelation of Freemasonry. I believe there are those among us who can testify that it was introduced into our lodges by the school of Webb.

A BROTHER'S SECRETS.

He furthermore swears:

"That a Master Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, and I knowing him to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, murder and treason only excepted, and these left to my discretion, when communicated to me to conceal or not."

The application of this oath by those interested in the abduction of William Morgan, has been so faithful, that the utmost efforts of an excited people, and the extraordinary powers of the social commissioner appointed by the executive to investigate his fate, both together, are not sufficient to wring the truth from the clench of this Masonic obligation of secrecy. It is a fearful oath to take in view of our obligations to obey the laws of our country; yet it is found in the revelation of Freemasonry by Morgan, by the Le Roy Convention, by Jachin and Boaz, and by the Three Distinct Knocks.

As revealed by Carlisle, a most important variation exists in this obligation. He gives it thus: "My breast shall be the sacred repository of a brother's secrets, when delivered to me as such, murder, treason, felony, and all other offences contrary to the law of God, or the ordinances of the realm, being at all times most specially excepted, or at my option."—(Republican. vol. 12, p. 110.) So that even by Carlisle, every crime may be sworn to fraternal concealment at the option of the brother. Just men will not keep such an oath, any how; and if wicked men, to make it binding, have only to choose to have it binding, it is easy to see that they will do so; and it is nearly as good for the iniquitous use of bad men, as if no exception of a crime were made in its terms. Any crime may be covered in this form of the oath. Courts of justice are conscious of this. False swearing is usually of a negative character. The witness says: "I do not recollect;" and we are forced to excuse his short memory, which would often be long enough for the ends of justice, provided he could forget the penalty of his Masonic obligations.

OBLIGATION TO OBEY ALL MASONIC SIGNS, &c.

I will obey all signs and summonses, given, handed, sent, or thrown to me from a brother Master Mason, or from a body of a just and legally constituted lodge of Master Masons; provided they be within the length of my cable-tow."

This oath is revealed by Morgan and the Le Roy Convention. The Three Distinct Knocks, and Jachin and Boaz agree to vary the expression thus: "I will attend all summonses sent to me from a lodge of Masters, if within the length of a cable-tow;" which is much less exceptionable. They do not place the Mason at the will of every brother, on every occasion, but only at the will of a lodge of Masters, on every occasion. Carlisle's expression of the oath is still more guarded in these words: I "will answer and obey all lawful signs and summonses, sent to me from a Master Mason's lodge, if within the length of my cable-tow." In this form the oath requires obedience only to lawful signs and summonses from a lodge.

A BROTHER'S ERRAND.

"I furthermore swear that I will go on a Master Mason's errand whenever required, even should I go barefoot and barehead, if within the length of my cable-tow.

No exception is made that the errand shall be lawful, reasonable, or innocent; but only that it shall be a Master Mason's errand within cable-tow distance.

This very exceptionable oath, revealed by Morgan and the Le Roy Convention, which places, in its strict interpretation, the just men of the fraternity at the command of the knaves, leaving them no opportunity to demur on principle, or to escape from the execution of the trust, provided a Master Mason requires the service, is unquestionably an obligation imposed by Freemasonry in this country: but it is not found in Jachin and Boaz, or the Three Distinct Knocks; and Carlisle gives no such expression of words; but this he gives: "My foot shall traverse through dangers and difficulties to unite with a brother's in forming a column of mutual defence and safety;" which is little less exceptionable, than the oath published by Morgan.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOV. 19, 1874.

THERE ARE TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND Scandinavians in Chicago alone, whose religion abhors the lodge. We hope to greet many of these in the Clark Street Methodist Church at the meeting of the State Association on the 18th and 19th of November inst. This meeting will be in session while this number of the Cynosure is on its way to our subscribers. Revolutions ever come from the North and roll on toward the equator. They never go back. And if the twenty-five thousand Norwegians, Swedes, and Danes now in Chicago, and the other thousands coming, can be made acquainted with the anti-secrecy movement, they can, of themselves, by the help of God, produce a religious public sentiment in this metropolis in the which churches with Freemasons in them will seem like houses with snakes and alligators in them, as they are.

"FRESH HANDS TO THE BUCKET."—Messrs. E. D. Bailey, J. H. Snyder, John Williams, Walter Ferris and Cyrus Louis Blanchard, youngest brother of C. A. Blanchard, have been getting up and addressing evening meetings in Du Page county, Ill., preparatory to the county meeting at Downer's Grove and the State meeting at Chicago. We hear some of their addresses were well received. The above are all students in Wheaton College. Rev. A. J. Bailey, Prof. H. A. Fischer and H. L. Kellogg have also attended and spoken in the Du Page county meetings.

OUR NEW MEXICO CORRESPONDENT, whose first letter will be found in this issue, is a traveling artist in New and old Mexico. He is a son of Rev. Mr. Hiester, of Farm Ridge, Illinois, a good man and life-long reformer. The father, when a student in Mercersburgh College, Pa., thirty-eight years ago, saved the Senior Editor of the Cynosure from the grasp of a mob hired by the brother-in-law of James Buchanan to suppress the discussion of slavery in Mercersburgh. That town was taken and partially plundered by the rebels in the late war, in compensation for their fealty to human bondage. The good man, not yet wearied in well-doing, having seen the fall of slavery, who waits to witness the fall of the lodge. His son, our correspondent, has promised to give us pen sketches of that weird land whose natural wonders he is taking with his camera.

THE UNITED BRETHREN: A SAVAGE COMBAT.—We are just now in receipt of a new United Brethren paper, The Christian Expositor, Council Bluffs, Iowa, Rev. T. D. Adams, editor; which we shall notice more at large next week. It is respectibly executed and decidedly Christian in tone. It sustains the anti-secrecy law of its church, and reviews, all too mildly, an editorial in The United Brethren Tribune, started a year or two since, by the money of Freemasons, we have no doubt, to change and bring the Brethren church under the direction and dominion of the lodge; there being no body in the United States which the lodge dreads as it does that large and godly church. This "Tribune" of anything but the people, hid its claws, and talked softly a spell; but now throws off all disguise, and declares such a man as Bishop Edwards to be "a child of the devil." This is lodge language, spirit and all, and shows the savagery and desperation of the order. Extracts next week.

THE POLITICAL REVERSE.

The Republican party is beaten in Illinois by twenty thousand (20,000) majority. In the nation at large it is much the same, not only a defeat, but nearly a rout. Vice-president Henry Wilson and other Mentors of the party are endeavoring to explain the defeat and give comfort to heal its soreness.

But the true explanation yields no comfort for Republicans or Democrats. It is simply this: The slaveholders by the Democrats ruled the country. The abolitionists proclaimed the truth against slavery, and the rage and madness of the slaveholders drove the Whigs (afterward Republicans) into opposition to slavery and the country into war. In the fall of slavery, both parties lost their vocation and exist only as names on tomb-stones, "In memoriam:" and the recent elections were but scrambles between the "Outs" and "Ins." In such struggles, the party in power always loses. For the offices are now filled by the ruling party, and multitudes see promotion in a change. Currency based on coin; non-inflation; return to specie payments as soon as safe and practicable,—both parties agree in these, and in theories of reconstruction and protection of rights for whites and blacks. The Democrats may love and promote their old allies, the slaveholders; but will hardly put their hands in their constituents' pockets to pay rebel debts; and it is even possible that the freedmen will gain by a change of power which puts Democrats on their good behavior; whereas, as a minority out of power, they had nothing to lose by murdering the blacks.

But the sea of power is in motion and may not only grow pure by the agitation, but bring up gold, diamonds, and pearls to the shore. Indifference to the dead parties opens the Ear-gate of the nation to reform. A few who see and say that the lodge has another religion, not that of the Bible, and another government, not that of the United States, still shrink from the political issue tendered by the anti-secrecy reform. And it is true, that men teaching and representing religion, should not be putting into their churches points of conscience which are not points of conscience. We cannot conduct a caucus on principles of church discipline, nor expel from the communion for an honest difference as to political methods and candidates.

But we must not say that adhering Freemasons are disqualified by their sworn foreign allegiance, as jury-men, judges, and legislators, and then go on voting for them. If we do, our actions neutralize our words. We must seize the opportunity given by the swoon of the Republican party to put candidates in the field and vote for them whenever we can. This is the American's right and the reformer's reason. We shall never overthrow the lodge by voting for its members. No; we must take a ballot-box under each arm while we sit down at communion-tables where Baal-worshipers are disallowed. Let the Platform Committee give us at Pittsburgh clear, solid standing-ground for "THE AMERICAN PARTY," or rather for voters who are true Americans whose party is their country, and whose platform its principles. Let the suggestion of Rev. A. Crooks, of the Wesleyan, for "THE UNITED CHURCHES OF CHRIST," excluding idolatries and idolaters, be pressed till the churches which have the oaths, idolatries and blasphemies of the lodge in the lives of their members, shall stand one side of the line, and those that exclude them on them on the other, and "neutrals" be ground up by the fiction of the two. And let the world, visible and invisible, see who are on the Lord's side and who on Baal's. When this was done for slavery it fell. Repeat it for the lodge whose oaths are the manacles of mind, and this more horrible bondage will follow its hateful predecessor.

FREE, IF NOT ANCIENT.

The Masonic "fraternity" of Chicago have a troublesome case on hand. Sometime since a number of Masons in good and regular standing, some glorying in a long line of "degrees," applied to the then Grand Master Hawley to charter for them a new lodge which should honor him by adopting his name; but for some reason the Grand Master refused both the honor and the charter. The lodge was not, however, in a gracious mood. The decision of autocratic head of a despotic body did not shake their purpose. They organized on their own responsibility and were happy as all good Masons are reported to be. They "initiated," they "passed," they "raised;" or, in plain words, they stripped, haltered, blindfolded, lectured, scared and befooled residents of this city and caused them to blaspheme, at the rate of twenty-five dollars a head. They had a degree of popularity and grew from one to four, and a "Grand Lodge" was formed to regulate them. They were, remember, working on the same plan with other lodges, the same oaths, lectures, ceremonies, humbuggery and devil-worship. Only they had no papers of authority from the so-called "ancient" craft, and they gave a candidate three degrees for about one-third the money. Such operations are called "clandestine" by the "ancients," who behold with dismay their awful secrets bartered for such a price. Surely, they may be supposed to say, has opposition done this? Are our degrees so depreciated in value since the Anti-masons arose? But what remains for us to do? Shall we go to law? That would be a scandal on our pretense of brotherhood; besides our secrets would get out, some profane judge might allow a profane lawyer to badger them out of a witness and a profane reporter would give them to the world. Shall we settle amicably with these twenty-five dollar brethren? That would be ignoring the authority of the Grand Lodge, trampling on our ancient constitution, violating the landmarks given us by King Solomon, Anderson, Desaguelier, or somebody. And so they are in trouble. Meantime the "clandestines" are indifferent, so long as they have fees and fun at the expense of the "poor blind candidate." The following sketch of the formation and early history of this movement is from the Times:

"The Rev. Charles Perkins is, and has been for a great number of years, a preacher in the Methodist church. He is a gentleman of advanced age, and has for thirty or forty years taken great interest, and high degrees, in the work of Masonry. He has also for many years prominently identified himself with the orders of Odd-fellows and Knights of Pythias He had been connected with the Masonic fraternity of this city for years, and was, up to a period of a little more than a year ago, chaplain of a regular lodge in the West division. It is asserted that for this work he was paid a consideration, and that some of the members took umbrage at it. He severed his connection with the lodge in question, and expected to become chaplain of a lodge in the South division. He had been given to understand that he was sure of being elected to the performance of these functions, but the result of the election was astounding and mortifying to a large circle of his friends and Masonic brethren, for he was black-balled. There were a number of sore-heads in two or three lodges here, and they came out of the lodges to which they respectively belonged, and joining hands with the personal friends of Mr. Perkins, proceeded to form a new lodge. This was the one which was for a brief space called the James A. Hawley lodge. It is now the Rising Star lodge. This was the only lodge of this independent organization up to April last; subsequently the two others were formed, and lastly the Grand lodge. This gentleman states that the membership of each of these lodges is over one hundred strong, and although they are not recognized by the sovereign Grand Lodge of Illinois, they are to all intents and purposes practically Masons, working in the same ritual and conferring the same degrees. He states moreover that a considerable degree of sympathy is covertly accorded them by many well-known members of the regular organization who do not dare to do so openly for fear of creating more ill-feeling among their own brethren. The 'Free and Accepted' ones claim that they use the same ritual, paraphernalia, and implements as all other lodges, and they announce their intention of speedily starting a chapter."

THE "INTERIOR" AND THE ILLINOIS STATE MEETING.

The above named paper publishes a notice of the Illinois State meeting in Chicago now in session, and asks:

"May we presume in view of our good standing in the estimation of that association, to make a suggestion?"

We doubt not that the convention would respond affirmatively. The Interior having the same opinion goes on to suggest: 1st, That "Masonry is not a treasonable institution." We imagine that the convention would reply to this suggestion that since treason is an attempt to overthrow the government of the State, acknowedged statesmen would possibly be better authority on this subject than a Presbyterian editor. Daniel Webster says "That all secret associations the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another . . are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and good government."

Wm. H. Seward, and others, united in an address to the people of the State of New York in which they say:

"The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

If this friend asked for the testimony of living witnesses nearer home, the convention would doubtless refer him privately to two eminent members of the legal profession residing in Chicago, who would tell him that Masonry has again and again thwarted the administration of justice in cases which have come under their personal observation. At the same time these gentlemen would caution the editor against publishing their names lest Masonry should remove them from their offices. Would he need a stronger argument to show that Masonry subverts government (hence is treasonable) by controling it; by retaining in office only such persons as will be silent concerning the corruptions of an institution which prevents the just execution of law?

The 2d suggestion is "That Masonry is not an embodiment of diabolism" —that is, that Masonry is not an organized representation of the principles that are appropriate to the devil. What are these principles? We understand the principles which constitute diabolism to be hypocrisy, ("Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. 2 Cor. ii. 14.) Murder, ("He was a murderer from the beginning" John viii. 44;) and Lying ("He is a liar and the father of it." John viii. 44.) The convention would doubtless take this suggestion: "That Masonry is not an embodiment of diabolism," give the candid public a careful statement of what the institution is, as represented by authorities which would be acknowledged as trustworthy, and also give the historical record of the order for the last half century in this country. The honest verdict of such a court would be, we think, that the fundamental principles of Masonry are selfishness, hypocrisy, falsehood and murder—viz., the organized representation of the principles that are appropriate to the devil. The 3d suggestion is "That Masonry is not a conspiracy against good order, good morals, education and human liberty." If the two preceding suggestions are not accepted (if Masonry is conceded to be in its nature treasonable and an organized representation of Satan's principles) this would not need an answer. Perhaps the convention might quote concerning the suggestion that Masonry in its nature, is not antagonistic to education, the words of the eminent educator, Dr. Crosby, concerning the effect of a milder form of secret societies on young men in college.

"The lad who receives honors among his comrades because he wears a mystic skull and bones upon his breast, will proportionately lose so much of his zeal for scholarship and all else that constitutes true worth. He has fortune (he thinks) and he does not care for new ventures or investments."

The three-fold suggestion completed the editor states two facts. 1st. Masonry has many good qualities. 2d. It enrolls in its ranks many pure, upright, truthful and God-fearing men.

We believe the convention will concede these to be facts and so believing are glad to know that in the editor's opinion, by admitting these facts, we insure public confidence.

In regard to the fact that Masonry has many good qualities we would say that although the convention will doubtless consider it a fact, they will use it for the condemnation of the institution.

A lamb-skin is a desirable thing when it covers one of those innocent animals, but if it disguises a fox in a poultry yard, the intelligent fowls would doubtless disapprove of that lamb-skin, though of the very best quality. And to the pure, upright, truthful, and God-fearing men in the order we think they will say "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them."

On the same subject a friend hands us the following:

To the unregenerate sinner as he did first to Christ, Satan presents the glories of the world and says, "All these things will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me." But when men have renounced the world and accepted Christ to be their Master, the devil returns, not as to Christ in the form of a raving demoniac, but in some form he returns with this last request "Let us alone."

Knowing that it were useless to ask the Interior to defend Masonry, he only askes its editor to say that its simple, true, and, in his day of Masonic popularity, noble utterance, of July last, "Masons must expect and respect sharp criticism and earnest opposition from evangelical Christianity," did not mean much of anything; that there is after all much good as well as evil connected with Masonry. It may be true that there is some good in it. The same may be said of almost any evil in the world, because,—

> "Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
> That to be hated needs but to be seen."

And if it is true in this case, while the institution is in itself wrong, there is so much more reason for opposition. For the strength of every evil lies in the good connected with it.

The object of the State meeting to be held the 18th and 19th inst., is to remove the sheep's clothing which seems to hang loosely on the institution, and see if there is a ravening wolf inside. To take away the fair exterior of charity and religion and expose, if it be there, the evil which lies concealed. In short, we hope at the State meeting to candidly and fairly consider the many reasons why many who are Masons should not be, and why many who are not should not become Masons.

And we hope the editors of the Interior will be there to help us by their presence and prayers, remembering the injunction, "Fight the good fight of faith. Quit you like men. Be strong."

NOTES.

—The Spencer (Mass.) Sun in a lengthy and flattering notice of a Masonic installation says that a Rev. H. A. Shorey, "gave in his testimony as to the grand doctrines inculcated in Masonry, stating that if a man but lived up to his Masonic teachings in the true, literal sense of the word, that man would lead a Christian life." Could not a Mohammedian or Jew say the same and with as much truth? And if true, why do not this Masonic reverend substitute wholly and openly the lodge for the church. His remark indicates that he pretends to do so in private.

—A slander characteristic of the lodge has been circulated about the ministers of the Second Advent persuasion in Massachusetts, to the effect that they had formed a secret society. When it was remembered that this denomination are almost universally opposed to organized secrecy the animus of this evil report is evident. Elder Hemenway, of Athol, Mass., explains its origin to be an attempt to form a preachers' association in which there was to be nothing secret. But the plan not being generally approved, the society was not even organized.

—The St. Louis "Der Lutheraner," the organ of the German Evangelical Lutheran Synod is an uncompromising opponent of the secret orders. In a recent issue it forcibly contrasts the course pursued by many Americans—their secession from the lodge and openly testifying to its unchristian character—with the conduct of those Germans who, becoming entangled in the net of secretism, renounce the church for the lodge, thus selling their birthright for a mess of pottage. In a conversation a few days ago with a Lutheran minister of Indianapolis, he testified that churches in cities and large towns would be increased two-fold were it not for the evil influence of secret associations.

—A correspondent asks for information about the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia. Gen. Phelps in his work on Secret Societies says (p. 137-9) that in 1845, two bills were introduced by Mr. Bower, of the committee on the District of Columbia, for chartering Grand Lodges; one for Odd-fellows the other for Freemasons. Both were tabled by the decided vote of 133 to 29. The Odd-fellows tried again in 1851 without success. Shortly afterward the Know Nothing party arose and cast an evil shadow over American politics, and at length in 1851 Congress chartered the Masonic Hall Association for operation in the District.

—Some of our friends are still under the impression, although we have endeavored to correct it, that our late minister to Spain, the murderer of Francis Key in Washington before the war, is author of a Masonic Monitor. This is a mistake. Gen. Daniel E. Sickles may be a Mason, but he evidently is not D. Sickels, of the Masonic publishing company of McCoy and Sickels of New York and author of "Sickels' Monitor." This mistake perhaps originated in these columns years ago, and has not been sufficiently corrected. It occurs in Rev. J. W. Bain's work several times.

—Last January the National Grange reported $50,000 in surplus funds. There is now an authorized statement that these funds have increased to $70,000 in United States bonds and $20,000 in cash which is invested and somebody draws interest. The farmers have nursed their worst monopoly.

—With the quotations made elsewhere from the Interior, which fairly represent its position, the following from the same article deserves a place:

"There are many very serious objections to Masonry, all of which will, no doubt, be eloquently urged before the Association. They are sufficient to deter the majority of reflective men from uniting with that or any similar secret order; and they are also sufficient to detach many who are now members from those orders. The Masons answer extravagant and exaggerated accusations with silence. The words of truth and soberness they can neither disregard nor successfullly controvert."

The Clergymen and Freemasonry.

A lady proposes to give us the views of several eminent clergymen on the subject of Freemasonry as expressed in unpremeditated, private conversation. They are men who occupy prominent positions in the pastoral, editorial and educational Christian work of our city. The exact words of the conversations are not given and it would certainly be improper to give the names of these gentlemen. But the ideas are valuable as an index of public sentiment in its various stages of development.

The first person whose remarks we give, was just recovering from sickness, which, perhaps, will furnish a sufficient excuse for the weakness of his views. We certainly hope to hear something more logical from him soon.

"I do not approve of the discussion on Masonry. While allowing those who differ from me full credit for sincerity and fidelity to their convictions, I must say that I do not consider the discussion of the subject the proper way to reach the difficulty. I am not the member of any secret society. I do not approve of a promiscuous, social organization which binds a husband by oaths or strong obligations to conceal from his wife the proceedings of any meeting he may attend and when young men ask my opinion, as they do, about joining the lodge, I advise them not to do so."

Q. Do you approve of the position taken by the Interior, that Masons "must expect and respect sharp criticism and earnest opposition from evangelical Christianity?

"That is merely an expression of opinion.—No, I do not endorse such a view."

Q. You do not then consider Masonry a system of religion, a rival of Christianity? "No, I do not. I wish the women would take up this reform. I will do all I can towards promoting the rights of women. They are daily becoming more of a power in the world and I am glad of it. I wish they would enter into a crusade against Masonry. They might do so most appropriately. They feel the burdens of the system with none of the blessings.

Q. On what grounds would you have them oppose it?

For the reason that it breaks in upon the confidence of the family relation. The only secret society of which I approve is that established by God, the family."

Q. Then you would favor having Christian women enter into a course of opposition to Masonry on the on ground that this system interferes with the Scriptural unity of husband and wife?

"I should not wish to have that reason stated as my ground for opposition to secret societies."

The conversation was here interrupted, but we said within ourselves what reason, then, would you offer sensible women for opposing secret societies that you would be willing to have quoted.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Home Circle.

By the Way.

If we might walk with noble souls,
Along the beaten track of life;
If we could hear but bugle notes
Amidst the thickest of the strife,
And catch the kind, approving smiles
Our souls, in all their struggles, need,
How blest the strife, how short the miles!
And toil for Christ were sweet indeed.

Oftimes we weary by the way;
Oftimes our spirits listless grow;
And over life's fair summer's day
Blow winds as chill as winter's snow,
Caused by some careless look or word,
And we, so loath to bear the cross,
Lie gasping, like some wounded bird,
And Christ's dear cause must suffer loss.

God's love, like balm, about us lies;
His smiles approve the work we do;
But still we turn, with wistful eyes,
To hearts we know are fond and true.
God's angels round us constantly,
To aid us if we faint or fail;
But human love and sympathy
Are needful to us after all.

Lone Sufferer in Gethsemane,
Blessed Christ, who, coming to thine own,
Received but scorn and calumny,
To thee our wants are all made known,
Oh! in the work that we would do,
To spread thy kingdom far and wide,
Grant to us souls both strong and true,
And love and peace with us abide.

—Zion's Herald.

What is Saving Faith.

It does not consist in any degree of intellectual knowledge, or acceptance of the doctrines of the Bible. The firmest possible persuasion that every word said in the Bible respecting God and Christ is true is not faith. These truths and doctrines reveal God in Christ, and teach the soul how to find him, by an act of trust in his person. When we firmly trust in his person, and commit our souls to him by an unwavering act of confidence in him for all that he is affirmed to us in the Bible, this is faith. We trust him upon the testimony of God. We trust him for what the doctrines and facts of the Bible declare him to be to us. This act of trust unites our spirit to him in a union so close that we directly receive from him a current of eternal life. Faith in consciousness seems to complete the divine galvanic circle, and the life of God is instantly imparted to our souls. God's life and light, and love, and peace, and joy, seem to flow to us as naturally and spontaneously as the galvanic current from the battery. We, then, for the first time, understand what Christ meant by our being united to him by faith, as the branch is united to the vine. Christ is then and thus revealed to us as God. We are conscious of direct communion with him, and know him as we know ourselves, by this direct activity within us. We then know directly, in consciousness, that he is our life, and that we receive from him, moment by moment, as it were, an impartation of eternal life. . .

This is saving faith. There are many degrees in the strength of faith, from that of which we are hardly conscious, to that which lets such a flood of eternal life into the soul as to quite overcome the strength of the body. In the strongest exercise of faith the nerves of the body seem to give way for the time being under the overwhelming exercise of the mind. The great strength of mental exercise is, perhaps, not very common. We can endure but little of God's light and love in our souls and yet remain in the body. I have sometimes felt that a little clearer vision would draw my soul entirely away from the body, and I have met with many Christian people to whom these strong gales of spiritual influence were familiar.—*Pres. Whitefield in Scotland.

In the year 1741 Whitfield was invited by the Erskines to visit Scotland. Having preached at Dunfermline, he next visited Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, where great results followed his preaching of the Gospel. "It would make your heart leap with joy," he writes to a friend, "to be now in Edinburgh. I question if there be not upward of three hundred in this city seeking after Jesus." One Sunday in Edinburgh he preached four times—twice in church and twice in the open air. During the week he visited the hospitals and prisons, preached to the children of the city, and one evening in the park addressed about twenty thousand people. Whitefield again visited Scotland, immediately after the famous Combuslang revival. On the day of his arrival he preached three times to large crowds assembled from the surrounding district. "Thousands and thousands," says Whitefield, have I seen, before it was possible to catch it by sympathy, melted down under the word."

On the following Sunday the communion was dispensed, and the number present is said to have exceeded twenty thousand. "Their joy was so great that, at the desire of both ministers and people, another communion was appointed to be held in a few weeks later, when scarce ever was such a sight seen in Scotland. Upwards of twenty ministers assisted on this occasion." Of the blessings attending his labors Whitefield writes, "God seems to awaken scores together; I never was enabled to preach so before. I never met with so much apparent success."

His third visit to Scotland was in the year 1748, and he found on his return many earnest Christians, who dated the beginning of their spiritual life from his former stay in their midst. Of Combuslang he says, "The fruits of the great awakening yet remain."

A fourth visit was made to Scotland in 1750; and in Edinburgh this successful preacher of the Gospel was received with much joy. The sweet and hallowed memories of former blessing, and the renewed expectations of another awakening, brought together large and attentive audiences. "No one," he writes, "can well describe the order, attention and earnestness of Scotch congregations. They are unwearied in hearing the Gospel. The entrance God has been pleased to give me into this country demands the highest tribute of gratitude and love. I have reason to think that many are under convictions, and am assured of hundreds having received great benefit and consolation. . . I shall have reason to bless God to all eternity for this last visit to Scotland."

Two years later he returned from Ireland by way of Glasgow and Edinburgh. Of this occasion he writes to Lady Huntingdon in the following strain: "O Edinburgh! Edinburgh! surely thou must never be forgotten by me. The longer I stayed, the more eagerly both rich and poor attended to the word preached. Perhaps for nearly twenty-eight days together, in Edinburgh and Glasgow, I preached to near 10,000 souls every day. It would have melted your ladyship's heart to have seen us part."

In 1757 he visited Scotland for the ninth time, and as the General Assembly was sitting during his stay in Edinburgh, the services which he conducted were attended by many ministers, although some were very much offended because Whitefield was the guest, on one occasion, of the lord-high-commissioner, Lord Cathcart. In 1786 Whitefield made his fifteenth and last visit to Scotland. His popularity was in no way diminished, and multitudes flocked to hear him. "My journey hither was certainly of God," he writes, "and could I preach ten times a day, thousands and thousands would attend. I have been confined for a few days, but on Monday or Tuesday next I hope to mount my throne again. . . . I am here only in danger of being hugged to death. Friends of all ranks seem heartier and more friendly than ever. All is grace, grace, grace! I go on my old way without swerving to the right or to the left. Providence says every day, 'This is the way, walk ye in it.'"

In Andrew's "Life of Whitefield," to which we have been indebted for the above facts and extracts, one great secret of Whitefield's power as a preacher is said to have been his tender, intense love to souls, which involuntarily led him to weep much when speaking to perishing multitudes. Sympathy is a great power in preaching. How beautifully it is seen in the great Master himself. And for successful labor in the vineyard, whether in preaching, teaching, or in private conversation at inquiry meetings, it is absolutely necessary that tenderness of feeling and warmth of sympathy should be manifest, but by no means paraded.—Times of Blessing.

How did Christ preach the Gospel? He forbade family quarrels. He warned his hearers against the evil practices of the scribes and Pharisees. He bade no one dare to come up to the temple to worship until he had paid his just debts. He not only enjoined upon them not to commit adultery, but told them what was the first step in adultery, that they might shun it. He talked to them about their families and their lawsuits and their habits of borrowing. He told them how they should accost people in the streets, when they should give away, and how they should give it; how they should keep fast day. He told them just how religion bore upon their business and associations. He bade them not to back-bite nor slander. He warned them against preachers who came preaching false doctrine. Common things he discussed in common language, enlivening his discourse with pungent questioning, illustrating it by numerous narratives, and garnishing it with vivid and beautiful pictures, drawn from summer-fields and humble homes. Through it all sang the tender tone of love—pity for the suffering, strength for the weak, trust and comfort for the poor. No wonder the people were astonished at his doctrine, and that when he came down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him.—Ex.

Peter is the apostle of impulse, the patron saint of the earnest, instant, but easily discouraged souls who are giants while they "feel like it," and only then. A long night of labor has brought no fish to the net, and with the morning, tired, sleepy, and discouraged, Peter is willing enough to sit in the boat and listen to the teachings of the Master he loves. He can enjoy that, but when the command comes, "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught," his weariness and discouragement begin to assert themselves. He don't "feel like it," very likely has little hope of catching anything, yet most royally principle, loyalty, gains the victory over impulse, and hear the grand reply: "Nevertheless, at thy word I will let down the net." Let those of us who are of like natural infirmity with Simon, catch his spirit in this, and do all the bidding of Jesus, perform Christian duties always at his word. When we "feel like it," let our service be ready and glad, and when we don't "feel like it," instead of making that an excuse for disobedience, let our song be, "Nevertheless, at thy word I will."—The Fellowship.

To omit prayer is to go to battle having left our weapons in the tent; is to go to our daily labor without the strength imparted by a morning meal; is to attempt the bar where breakers roar and rocks hide their rugged heads without taking our pilot on board. If, from a sense of weakness, Moses on Sinai's thundering, flashing, quaking mount, exclaimed, "If thy presence go not with me, let us not go up," well may we say of the world, its daily trials and temptations, works and warfare, "Unless thy presence go with us, let us not go down." Therefore ought men, unless in very rare circumstances, always, morning and even to pray. Thus, like soldiers on the morning of the conflict, we grind our swords for battle with the world, the flesh and the devil; and thus when the day's combat is over, retiring to pray, we apply a healing ointment, the balm of Gilead to the wounds of conscience, and thus, as a begrimed workman on coming home repairs at eventide to bathe in flowing river or swelling sea, we resort to prayer, to wash away sin's dark stains in the fountains of Jesus blood. —Seletced.

The Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, claiming, as they do, to be the inspired record of God's will, have influenced the conduct and history of mankind more than all other books together. How shall the teacher dispose of that book in his complete course of secular instruction? He may as well teach the elements of Euclid, omitting all the capital letters; he may as well weave without a warp, as exhibit the kingdoms of this world without taking notice of the kingdom of God and of his Christ. The religion of Christ has grasped the world, and penetrated human history through and through. If you exclude these topics, your disciple comes out of your hand a barbarian; and if you introduce them, you are compelled to take a side. For or against Christ the teacher must be, and the scholar too.—Arnot.

The First Continental Congress.

There are fifty delegates present, the representatives of eleven colonies. Georgia has had no election, the North Carolinians have not yet arrived, and John Dickinson, that "shadow, slender as a reed, and pale as ashes," that Pennsylvania farmer who has sown the seeds of an empire, is not a member yet. Directly in front, in a seat of prominence, sits Richard Henry Lee. His brilliant eye and Roman profile would make him a marked man in any company. One hand has been injured, and is wrapped, as you see, in a covering of black silk, but when he speaks, his movements are so graceful and his voice so sweet that you forget the defect of gesture, for he is an orator—the greatest in America perhaps, save only one. That tall man, with the swarthy face and black, unpowdered hair, is William Livingstone, of New Jersey; "no public speaker, but sensible and learned." Beside him, with his slender form bent forward and his face lit with enthusiasm, sits his son-in-law, John Jay, soon to be famous. He is the youngest of the delegates, and yonder sits the oldest of them all. His form is bent, his thin locks fringing a forehead bowed with age and honorable service, and his hands shake tremulously as he folds them in his lap. It is Stephen Hopkins, once Chief Justice of Rhode Island. Close by him is his colleague, Samuel Ward, and Sherman of Connecticut, that strong man, whose name is to be made honorable by more than one generation. Johnson, of Maryland, is here, "that clear, cool head," and Paca, his colleague, "a wise deliberator." Bland, of Virginia, is that learned-looking "bookish man," beside "zealous, hot-headed" Edward Rutledge. The Pennsylvanians are grouped together, at one side—Morton, Humphreys, Mifflin, Rhoades, Biddle, Ross, and Galloway, the Speaker of the Assembly.

'Bending forward to whisper in the latter's ear is Duane, of New York, that shy-looking man, a little "squint-eyed" (John Adams has already written of him), "very sensible and very artful." That large-featured man, with the broad, open countenance, is William Hooper. That other, with the Roman nose, is McKean, of Deleware; Rodney, his colleague, sits beside him, "the oddest-looking man in the world, tall, thin, pale, his face no bigger than a large apple, yet beaming with sense, and wit, and humor." Yonder is Christopher Gadsden, who has been preaching independence to South Carolina these ten years past. He it is who, roused by the report that the regulars have commenced to bombard Boston, proposes to march northward and defeat Gage at once, before his reinforcements can arrive; and some one timidly says, that in event of war, the British will destroy the seaport towns, turns on the speaker with this grand reply: "Our towns are brick and wood; if they are burned down we can rebuild them; but liberty once lost is gone forever." In all this famous company, perhaps the men most noticed are the Massachusetts members. That colony has thus far taken the lead in the struggle with the Mother Country. A British army is encamped upon her soil; the gates of her chief town are shut; against her people the full force of the resentment of King and Parliament is spent. Her sufferings called this Congress into being, and now lend a sad prominence to her ambassadors. And of them, surely, Samuel Adams is the chief. What must be his emotions as he sits here, to-day,—he who "eats little, drinks little, sleeps little, and thinks much; that strong man, whose undaunted spirit has led his countrymen up to the possibilities of this day." It. is his plan of correspondence, adopted after a hard struggle, in November, 1772, that first made feasible a union in the common defense. He called for union as early as April, 1773. For that he had labored without ceasing and without end; now arousing the drooping spirits of less sanguine men; now repressing the enthusiasm of rash hearts, which had threatened to bring on a crisis before the time was ripe; and all the time thundering against tyranny through the columns of the Boston Gazette. As he was ten years ago he is to-day, the master spirit of the time; as cool, as watchful, as steadfast, now that the hour of his triumph is at hand, as when, in darker days, he took up the burden James Otis could no longer bear. Beside him sits his younger kinsman, John Adams, a man after his own heart: bold, fertile, resolute, an eloquent speaker and a leader of men. But whose is yonder tall and manly form? It is that of a man of forty years of age, in the prime of vigorous manhood. He has not spoken, for he is no orator; but there is a look of command in his broad face and firm-set mouth that marks him among men, and seems to justify the deference with which his colleagues turn to speak with him. He has taken a back seat, as becomes one of his great modesty—for he is great even in that—but he is still the foremost man in all this company. This is he who has just made, in the Virginia Convention, that speech which Lynch, of Carolina, says is the most eloquent speech that ever was made: "I will raise a thousand men, subsist them at my own expense, and march with them at their head for the relief of Boston." These were his words—and his name is Washington. Such was the Continental Congress assembled in Philadelphia.—Brown.

Children's Corner.

A Bible Album.

What do you do with all the old picture papers that come into the house? Some of them are saved for binding, I suppose, and perhaps some of you who are kind and thoughtful, send them, after everybody at home is done with them, to the hospitals, where many poor sufferers lie, day after day, with nothing to cheer the tedious hours; or to some friend in the country, or little cousin, or may be to a Sunday-school in a remote portion of the West. But you and I know that after all lots of these pretty papers accumulate and lie about in the way. Bridget takes them to light the fire, Benjamin cuts them up for kites. After awhile there is a great heap of them in the closet, gathering dust, and your mother cleaning house, declares that they must be got out of the way, she cannot possibly have them lying around any longer; so they are bundled up and sent off to the man who buyes old papers.

I'm going to tell you of an excellent way to use all sorts of pictures: Take a blank-book of any size you prefer, then provide yourself with a cup of paste made of flower or starch, and a pair of scissors. Cut out of the papers the pictures that please you, very neatly and carefully, so as to have no rough, jagged edges, and paste them, according to their size and shape, upon the pages. You may have one large one in the middle of a page, or, if you choose, two or three on it nicely arranged; but you must take care to leave all around each, a broad, fair margin, on which to write.

"What must we write?" says a little voice. You must write in a plain, good hand, beside, or on top, or under each picture, any Bible verse that is appropriate. Your pictures need not be chosen because they seem to you sacred pictures. Almost any picture that you can find in the weeklies or in children's magazines, if you look at it carefully, will give you an idea, and you can find a Bible verse to match it. I had in my hands last night a picture of a man plowing, and I found so many allusions to the plow in the prophets and the Psalms and the New Testament, that I was really embarrassed. Another picture, representing a young woman with a plump, rosy face, reading to an old woman who looked haggard and wan, suggested Bible verses about comfort, and about being attentive to the aged, and ministering to those in sorrow. Then somebody brought me a little tinted gem of a picture, in which a dimpled child with one shoulder bare was petting a cat. Could I find verses for that? Yes, indeed; I found four verses about childish innocence, and the love of the Father for little children; and if you will believe me, I'm pretty sure I could have found forty. A young friend of mine, who has the gift of using his pencil adroitly, presented me with a picture of ducks drinking from a pan, to be used in my album. He thought I should find it rather hard to select a verse for ducks; but, as you know ducks are fowls, and you who go to Sunday-school will, of course, think of half a dozen verses about them. "They sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them."

After writing your text, it is part of the plan to write the chapter and verse. That helps you to keep fast hold in your mind of the place where the text is. Sea-weeds, groups of pressed flowers, phantom leaves, autumn leaves, little flat shells, feathers, and a variety of things may be used to diversify the pages. God's great treasure-house will give you something for every one.

The idea of a Bible Album occurred first to a Scotch lady, Mrs. Barbour, of Edinburgh. But the album which I saw, and which has delighted and inspired everybody who has seen it to try to make one too, was made by Lady Juliana Walker, of London. She placed it for exhibition in a large book-store in London, where it was seen and greatly admired by an American lady. The lady wanted to buy it, but the shop man told her it was not for sale; and though she offered a large price, he could not let her have it. But when Lady Walker heard of her desire and her disappointment, she very kindly sent it to her as a gift, expressing the hope that she would show it in America to just as many people as she could, so that young and old might have a new picture, and, above all, get hold of a new way of studying God's Word. I often fell that with all our studying and reading, dear children, we don't study enough and read enough in the old, old story-book which begins with Adam and Eve, and tells of Moses and Elijah and John and Paul, and of our blessed Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. The Bible Alum will put us in mind of the pleasant duty.—Hearth and Home.

Slang Phrases among Youth.—The young misses and ladies whose grammatical inaccuracies and slang phrases, and such as "My gracious!" "Oh, goodness!" are allowed to escape unnoticed at home, must submit to be severely criticised in good society, or else be doomed to constant anxiety in their efforts to play propriety.

The young gentleman who lolls in the easy chair, and invariably takes the coolest corner by the fireside, neglects to take off his squeaking boots when visiting the sick-room of some suffering relative, or to accompany his sisters once in three months to the concert or lecture which they are longing to hear, will never be a perfect gentleman unless some millennial wave rolls over him. As for the poor relations who inhabit the attic chambers, mend the home linen, and serve as a kind of "pin-cushion" into which all the family annoyancies are thrust—what plea shall we offer for them? or what precept enforce except to enforce that "patience have its perfect work?"—Phrenological Journal.

A four-year-old at East Poultney, Vt., recently went to the blacksmith's to see his father's horse shod, and watched closely the work of shoeing until the blacksmith commenced paring the horse's hoofs, when thinking this was wrong, he said earnestly, "My pa don't want this horse made any smaller."

Constitution of the Illinois State Associaton.

PREAMBLE.

Whereas, We believe that the principle of organized secrecy, as developed in the lodge system of the country, is directly inimical to the interests of Christianity, and the republican simplicity which should characterize the legislation and administration of our State and National affairs; and

Whereas, We believe that the advantages now held by the secretists will not be relinquished until the light of truth, shining into the dark recesses of the lodges, shall so plainly exhibit the injustice of this monstrosity that it will become intolerable to the American people; in order to secure this end, we hereby unite the adoption of the following

Beecher's Confession.

[The following is from the pen of a distinguished author; one used to analysis and discrimination. We commend his words to the legal eminent minds em ployed on the case. It is clear and masterly. ED. CYN.]

There has been no analysis of Beecher's letters that connects him with Mrs. Tilton's "secret," such as a skillful attorney will exhibit when the case is tried. Whatever may be the offence, it is impossible to doubt that Henry Ward Beecher is the sinner and Mrs. Tilton the sufferer. This is settled by the necessary construction of his own words. On the last of the three sheets confided to Moulton, usually spoken of as "Beecher's confession" are the following sentences: "She is guiltless,—sinned against—bearing the transgressions of another. Her forgiveness I have. I humbly pray God to put it into the heart of her husband to forgive me." He says Mrs. Tilton "is guiltless—sinned against." It was with Mrs. Tilton—not her husband—that the sin was committed. It was some offence in which there was guilt—sin. She was "bearing the transgression of another." Somebody had been guilty of "transgression" with her, which she: —not her husband had to bear. The only question is, Who was that transgressor? Hear the answer—"her forgiveness I have. He declares that he is forgiven for "sin" and "transgression" and "guilt" with Mrs. Tilton. And then he prays God that her husband might forgive him. It was guilt against a husband as well as a wife, and to this he attaches his own signature, immediately under the preceding words.

The writing shows that the note and signature were written with his eyes open; hence it was impossible for him not to see what he was affirming. He has denied part of these sentences to which he subscribes. Now when it is proved that these sentiments were upon the sheet he subscribed, and immediately over his signature, the denial will invalidate his testimony in any court of justice and be a painful indication that there may be perjury where there has been such evident falsehood.

Fast Day with a Covenanter Church.

COULTERVILLE, Ill., Nov. 7, 1874.

Churchill congregation of the Reformed Presbyterian church to the Christian Association opposed to secret societies, sendeth greeting:

BRETHREN:—We, feeling ourselves in entire sympathy with you in opposing the secret orders of to-day, and feeling our duty to associate ourselves with you in observing a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer, and the session not being united in regard to the Sabbath as a proper day for fasting, thought it best to observe Saturday; which we did. We spent a part of the morning in social worship, prayer, praise and the hearing of the Word, after which our pastor, Rev. J. M. Faris, preached a very appropriate sermon from Eph. v. ii; from which he argued that Christians should have nothing to do with secret societies:

1. Because such societies in their nature are opposed to the kingdom of Christ.

2. Such societies teach to do things in a way forbidden in Scripture.

3. Secret orders are a temptation to evil.

4. Secret societies put their members from under civil and ecclesiastical authority..

5. Such societies expose men to suspicion.

After the sermon we took up a small collection, amounting to $8.00, which I enclose to the treasurer.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Young Men's Christian Association of New Albany, Ind., report 500 conversions through their efforts during the past year.

—The New York Evangelist says that there have been 100 Presbyterian churches built in New York less than forty of which are now used for worship.

—Mrs. Phoebe Palmer, a noted laborer in the Holiness Association of the Methodist denomination, died in New York, Nov. 2. Bishop Janes preached the funeral sermon.

—Bishop Cummins of the Reformed Episcopal church dedicated the Church of the Redemption near Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 24th, and is now actively engaged in visiting and organizing churches in Canada.

—It is reported that the Board of Methodist Bishops, twelve in number, met in Baltimore, Nov. 6, and resolved that there was no authority in the Methodist Episcopal church to ordain women as preachers of the Gospel. This settles the question until the meeting of the General Conference in St. Louis, in 1876.

—Rev. Hugh Pentecost, a Baptist clergyman of Boston, has established an independent organization which he termed the "Church of the People." The question is, does this name indicate a church of Christ, or a body whose principles are of the "broad-gauge" type and framed like those of the lodge to accommodate anybody's religion.

—Dr. Newton, an Episcopal clergyman of Philadelphia, refuses to use the word "regenerate" in the baptismal service, and does not believe the doctrine of the prayer book. An assistant takes up the parts omitted by the rector and the service is formally completed. This is the offense for which Rev. C. E. Cheney was deposed.

—The latest news from the Bible revisers is that the company appointed in England to revise the authorized version of the Old Testament closed their twenty-fifth revision Oct. 7. The work has extended as far as II. Samuel vii., 8. The New Testament company of revisers begun their forty-third revision Oct. 13. They took up the second revision of the Gospel of St. Mark.

—A Methodist journal of New York, in discussing the reasons why so many Methodist ministers have lapsed from the principles of the church, as Collyer and Conway and others, thinks the burden of itineracy is one, but more powerful is the fact that Methodist preachers are poorly prepared to grapple with the theological and metaphysical problems of the age from a defective training. In what way defective it does not say. but we may supply by noting their lodge training practiced in conference and the efforts to rope them into literary fraternities made by Dr. Fowler, head of the Evanston institution.

—Part of the work accomplished by the late Episcopal Congress in New York was the formation of new dioceses in Ohio, New Jersey, Wisconsin and Michigan, was approved; the election of Prof. Seymour to be Bishop of Illinois was not confirmed. A canon was adopted forbidding the elevation of the elements as objects of adoration; bowings, or prostrations to the elements, and providing for the trial of any minister charged with such practice, if he shall persist after due admonition. A revised hymnal was authorized to be used until a better one is prepared. The name of the "House of Cleical and Lay Deputies" was changed to "House of Deputies." A proposition to alter the Nicene Creed was rejected. New missionary dioceses were formed and bishops elected for them in Northern and Western Texas, Northern California, New Mexico and Shanghai, China.

—From the annual report of Rev. J. E. Roy, agent of the American Home Missionary Society in this city, it appears that the contributions from Illinois have been $13,060; the appropriations to the State by the parent society, $12,117, giving a surplus to the credit of the former of $943. The number of home missionaries in the State is fifty; of churches and out-stations served by them, eighty-one; churches organized during the year, four; houses built, seven; churches brought to self-support, eight; churches that go alone by "yoking," ten. An amount from each church equal to a dollar a member will carry on all the State work and and leave an overplus for work in the regions beyond. During Superintendent Roy's service of thirteen years in Northern Illinois, seventy-six churches have been organized, ninety-eight houses of worship have been built, seventy-three of them by missionary churches, and for fifty-three of which he has preached the dedication sermon, besides ten others for which he rendered the same service in the field work. During the same time the membership has been brought up from 4,474 to 13,164.

Many of the most exalted personages of the Empire are implicated, and its ramifications extend to all parts of the country. Over 3,000 arrests have already been made, including many ladies, some of high rank. A Commission of investigation has been appointed by the Government, and it is believed that all the conspirators will be brought to justice.

Temperance.

A Chicago Temperance Meeting.

Nov. 13, 1874.

Mrs. Griffeth and Mr. Murphy addressed a large and appreciative audience at the Chicago Avenue Church last evening. Dr. Miller, of the Mason and Hamlin Organ Company, sang several thrilling temperance songs.

The exercises were opened by singing

"Jesus the water of life will give, Freely, freely, freely."

This water, Miss Frances Willard remarked, afforded the only sure and permanent relief for the drinker of intoxicants.

Mrs. Griffeth urged that we should cultivate public sentiment until the drinking and selling of intoxicating beverages would be considered disreputable. She spoke of the efficacy of temperance tracts in accomplishing this work.

Mr. Murphy spoke of the samples of saloon keeper's work; he said they were to be found in the jails and poor-houses not in the so-called Sample Rooms. He said if saloon keepers could have their places of business surrounded with the victims of their inhuman traffic they could not endure their situation. He then told the story of his own sad life, illuminated (after he reached mature years) only by the constancy of his suffering wife and the love of his innocent children.

A large number of persons signed the pledge at the close of the meeting.

—The New York Evening Post concludes that "prohibition has failed, and had better be laid aside for a more practicable system." In this opinion the Post is in accord with all the liquor dealers of the land. They lose no opportunity to proclaim "prohibition a failure," and yet they are quite as vigilant to secure the repeal of prohibitory statutes where they exist, and to prevent their enactment in States wherein the friends of temperance are trying them. If a "failure," why so much anxiety about them? The Post's ideal of a "more practicable system" is "a stringent license law, with severe penalties for injuries inflicted upon persons or property by sales of liquor." Does not the Post know that that is precisely the experiment the State of New York has for some time past been trying? And will it tell its readers whether, so far as sales of liquor are concerned, it regards the experiment thus far as a success or failure?—N. Y. Witness,

Right at Last.—After a year's consideration and discussion, the American Medical Association, at its recent meeting in Detroit, passed the following strong statement:

Resolved, "That in view of the alarming prevalence and ill effects of intemperance, with which none are so familiar as members of the medical profession, and which have called forth from English physicians the voice of warning to the people of Great Britain concerning the use of alcoholic beverages, we, as members of the medical profession of the United States, unite in the declaration that we believe that alcohol should be classed with other powerful drugs; that when prescribed medicinally, it should be done with conscientious caution and a sense of great responsibillty.

Resolved, "That we are of the opinion that the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage is productive of a large amount of physical and mental disease, that it entails diseased appetites and enfeebled constitutions upon offspring, and that it is the cause of a large percentage of the crime and pauperism in our large cities and country.

Resolved, "That we would welcome any change in public sentiment that would confine the use of intoxicating liquors to the uses of science, art, and medicine."—Watchword.

A wise man hath his foibles as well as a fool; but the difference between them is, that the foibles of the wise man are kept from the world and known to himself; while the foibles of the fool are known to the world, but concealed to himself.

To despond is to be ungrateful before hand. Be not looking for evil.

Home and Health Hints.

Catarrh.—So many of our fellow citizens are afflicted with that offensive and disagreeable disease, catarrh, that the following remedy suggested by Dr. Hogar will be found a real boon: Five parts of carbolic acid, six of aqua ammonia (specific gravity. 96), ten of distilled water, and fifteen of alcohol. Mix together in a wide-mouthed bottle, half filled with cotten or asbestos, and snuff up from time to time. Dr. Brand states that this prescription will shorten the first stage of the disease, prevent the second, and alleviate all the symptoms. He preferrs, however, to apply it by inhalation through the nose by pouring a few drops on porus paper, and holding it in the hollow of the hand before the face, with the eyes closed.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Regular Habits.—Convicts, as kept in our State prisons in the North and in the South of our country, are generaly remarkably free from the outbreaks of disease. Not a few, if I am rightly informed, are cured of dyspepsia and other chronic ailments, by the discipline and regimen to which they are subjected; and this notwithstanding the moral and mental drawbacks that necessarily attend their situation. They are made to go to rest early, rise early, work at regular hours, and eat plain, but sufficient food. We hear of epidemics, such as cholera and dysentery, prevailing in the locality of a prison, but the convict is almost certain to escape. Now all this speaks volumes in favor of temperance, simplicity, regularity and regular employment.—Science of Health.

The danger of shaking your children as a mode of correction, has been exemplified at Sunbury, England. A little girl, two and a half years old, was punished in this way by her mother, and immediately became both speechless and senseless, lying quite inert, but in a semi-conscious state. The parents, becoming alarmed, carried the poor infant to a doctor, who discovered that the neck was dislocated; and the child died a short time afterward. It was stated by the mother, who was frantic at the result that no undue violence was used.

A Suggestion.—Save the tea leaves for a few days, then steep them in a tin pail or pan for half an hour, strain through a seive, and use the liquid to wash all the varnished paint. It requires very little "elbow polish," as the tea acts as a strong detergent, cleansing the paint from all its impurities, and making the varnish equal to new. It cleans window-sashes and oilcloths; indeed, any varnished surface is improved by its application. It washes window-panes and mirrors much better than water, and is excellent for cleaning blackwalnut, picture, and looking-glass frames. It will not do to wash unvarnished paint with it.

Sunshine and Digestion.—Very intimate relations exist between the sun and digestion. Digestion and assimilation become weak and imperfect if the man or animal is not daily exposed to the direct rays of the sun.

Farm and Garden.

Farmers Should Grow in Knowledge.

His eyes should be open. It is the season for the closest observation and study. Not a tree or plant but will repay looking at! and he should see what he looks at. It should teach him something. There should some fact become fixed in his mind with each observation. Every bird that sings and insect that flutters in his path should attract his attention and his thought. It will be promptly answered that the farmer and fruit grower has no time for these observations. But he may have time if he takes it. He will find the habit of observation, if once established, will not interfere with his work. The plants which spring up and thrive under his cultivation are important integers in this sum of observation and growth. Daily life should add to daily growth in the knowledge of everything about us that ministers to our comfort or profit. Too much practical, technical and critical knowledge of the habits, growth, natural history and functions of plants cannot be obtained by the man whose prosperity is dependent upon their successful production. These objects should be as well known as the alphabet—as easily read at the different stages of growth, and their condition as surely interpreted.—Moore's Rural New-Yorker.

Sex in Eggs.—I am not aware of the extent of Prof. Agassiz's knowledge with regard to sex in eggs, but after 30 years' experience with hens, it has been and is now my practice to select eggs for setting. I have never succeeded in raising a full brood, or having all the eggs hatch, but a number of experiments have proved to me satisfactorily that sexes in eggs may be determined by the three following rules, which I always observe: 1st, If an egg is full or has no vacuum in the large end, I never use it for setting, as it will not hatch. 2d, If I want to raise chickens for market I select all the eggs that have the vacuum on or near the end; these are what we call roosters. If I want hens for breeding, I take eggs where the vacuum is on the side or clear from the end, and I seldom fail to get the kind of chickens I want, but I admit there are some that have the vacuum so placed 'tis difficult to decide which sex it is.—Tribune.

Fall Plowing.—It is certain that land ploughed in the autumn will, all other things being equal, yield better than that broken in the spring. This is partly because thorough aeration of the soil is essential to its fertility, partly because the frost has freer action to break up the minute minerals and hasten their disintegration and consequent liberation of mineral elements of fertility, and partly because in the loosened earth, the surplus water drains quicker away, and the warmth of the sun penetrates sooner and deeper. But many fall-ploughed fields are so situated that the surface water collects in hollows, and these nullify all the rest; carefully drawn open furrows for such places should be the first work in spring. In newly plowing land run the furrows in such a direction as to facilitate drainage, and run the shovel as deep (and no deeper) as it can go without turning up the cold unfertilized and lump subsoil. It will pay.

DEFENCE OF JUDGE DANIEL H. WHITNEY,

Master of Belvidere Lodge, before the Grand Lodge of Ill., On charge of Unmasonic Conduct, in bringing Samuel L. Keith the Murderer of Ellen Slade to justice.

If Masonry is, elsewhere, that which, when "the cold winds of death comes sighing around us," will contribute to prepare us to obey with joy the summons of the Grand Warden of Heaven,—I yet love Masonry. But if it is what its controlling votaries make it here,—if no crime is repugnant to Masonry but imaginary or real infringment if its usages, and the refusal to violate the laws of the land and of GOD, to shield a member from the punishment due to crime, then is Freemasonry all that has been charged by its enemies,—the darkest and most damning Institution that has ever scourged the earth and cursed mankind.

But if it awakens the energies of the soul to an attainment of the approbation of heaven, it is well; for then, instead of the awful yet true picture, that I have above presented to the Lodge, we shall see her votaries crowding to the holy of holies by the "benefit" of a pure and blameless life, and with a firm reliance on Divine Providence, and an unshaken confidence in the merits of the Lion of the Tribe of Judah. So I learned, and for this I love Masonry,—would to the SUPREME GRAND ARCHITECT I could say I had so found it!

I now leave the subject with you, my brethren; and if it is your duty to certify to the world that Daniel H. Whitney, W. M., of Belvidere Lodge, No. 60, of F. A. M's., is suspended or expelled "for gross unmasonic conduct," let a candid world judge between me from the foregoing charges and defence, and the Institution of which I have then been, though an honest, a duped, deceived and ignorant member.

This defence I should make orally, were it in my power to attend. I therefore request the Grand Secretary to return it to me by mail, after the Grand Lodge adjourns.

As I have learned and endeavored to teach Masonry, and as I am bound to presume that you have learned and teach it, I am fraternally yours &c., D. H. WHITNEY, W. M.,

Belvidere Lodge, No. 60, F. A. M's.

REVIEW OF THE EVIDENCE CONCERNING THE MURDER OF ELLEN SLADE.

Masonic attempt to clear the Murderer Samuel L. Keith.
The Chicago Journal refuses to publish the Coroners Statement.
Judge Whitney's reasons for renouncing Masonry, etc.

Sep. 16. A. L., 5851*, A. D. 1851.

To C. G. Y. Taylor, Most Worshipful Grand Master, and the members of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of Illinois—In Annual Communication at Springfield, Oct., 1851.

On the 9th of September, 1851, the Circuit Court convened at Belvidere. There was an unusually large attendance of people from the country, and those of our best citizens. There were five Grand Jurors absent, or set aside for cause; and the Sheriff was ordered to fill the panel. He summoned as talesmen, Ralph D. Rix, the Secretary of the Lodge, who is both a Mason and an Odd-fellow, two other Masons, one residing in, and the other near town, one Odd-fellow, and the fifth neither a Mason nor an Odd-fellow, but an ardent frient of Mr. Keith.

The balance of the Grand Jury were, unfortunately, young and inexperienced men.

After the Court adjourned, the following appeared in the Chicago Daily Journal of Sep. 13th, 1851, over the signature of S. A. Hurlbut, one of the counsels:

"EDITORS CHICAGO JOURNAL, GENTS:—As a great deal of excitement was stirred up some time since, by the story of an alleged murder committed in this town with which the name of Mr. Samuel L. Keith was connected by public report, it is proper that the same publicity should given to the justification which that gentleman has at length received under the law. In the time of the excitement alluded to, no pains were spared, here or elsewhere, to give currency to the charges against Mr. Keith, and although in many persons who lent themselves to the feverishness of the day, the excitement was excusable, yet in many others, the occasion was eagerly caught at for gratifying their private hostility, under the mask of a zeal for public justice. It is to the latter class that the sweeping charges of murder, paraded in the newspapers and hawked about the streets, are traceable, and to such, I have no doubt, the recent action of our Grand Jury has proved a wholesome lesson.

At the present term of the Court, a Grand Jury composed of our most noted and influential citizens was empanelled, nearly every member of which was subjected to examination as to his impartiality, and stood the test. After a full and patient hearing of the case, and the production of the testimony, they refused to find any bill whatever, and Mr. Keith was discharged from his recognizance.

Dr. Woodward, whose name has also been mentioned in the same connection, has been indicted for the crime of Involuntary Manslaughter, and will stand his trial at some future term.

By publishing this statement of facts, you will render a service to one who has been cruelly attacked, and whose innocense has now been made manifest." S. A. HURLBUT.

To which the Coroner and several of the Jurors, made the following reply, which the Editors refused to publish:

"Will you do the mass of the people of this county the favor to copy the (above) letter of S. A. Hurlbut, from the Chicago Daily Journal of Sept. 13th, 1851, and also insert the annexed statement of facts?

Ellen Slade was the most beautiful, but orphan English girl, who went to reside in the family of Samuel L. Keith's father, at the age of fourteen or fifteen years, and continued to reside there as we are informed, between two and three years. About three months before her death, it was rumored that she was in trouble; and that S. L. Keith was the author of her ruin and shame. On Friday night, June 20th, 1851, she died at the house of Dr. Woodward, in Belvidere, under suspicious circumstances The same night Dr. Woodward fled the country, (leaving her dead body in the house, with his wife and mother-in-law, and two or three very small children) and was pursued by Mr. Smith, ex-Sheriff, and the Sheriff, and arrested and brought back to Belvidere. F. B. Hamlin Esq., acting as Coroner, held an inquest over the body of Miss Slade on Saturday, and assembled the jury again on Sunday evening, who continued their sesion all Sunday night, and a part of Monday.

The main proof before the Coroner's jury was; That the post mortem examination showd extensive injury, and abortion which produced her death,—and that S. L. Keith took her from her step-father's the Sunday evening previous to her death. After her death, Keith informed one person that on the above Sunday evening, he left her in town on the south side of the river; and he informed another person that he left her on the north side, and informed both that he had not seen her afterwards. Dr. Woodward, after he had been arrested and brought back to Belvidere, went before the Coroner's jury, and testified that, at Keith's request, he visited her at Keith's private room in his store, of which room Keith told him he kept the door locked and carried the key in his pocket; and that on the evening of the Tuesday that he visited her at Keith's private room, she was brought to his, Dr. Woodward's house, where she died the Friday night succeeding.

L. H. Magher, Mr. Keith's clerk, testified that he returned from Indiana on the Tuesday preceeding the death of Miss Slade, and started to go to the private room in the store, when Mr. Keith told him not to go there and that he did not want any one to go to that room; and on the Friday night of Miss Slade's death, Mr. Keith said to him, "I want to see Dr. Woodward, can't you find him?" And that he, Magher, then went on the mound near Dr. Woodward's house, when Dr. Woodward came to him and said, "She is dead." Immediately Mr. Keith came to them, and Dr. Woodward made the same remark to Keith, "She is dead." Keith replied, "It is horrible, how her mother will feel." Dr. Woodward then said to Mr. Keith, "There will be a fuss about this, and I must leave the country to-night; and my family affairs are in a bad fix, and you must let me have a hundred dollars." Mr. Keith then repleid, "that he had not that much by him." They three then went to Mr. Keith's store, where Woodward and Keith had further conversation; Dr. Woodward then told Keith that he would go and get his horse and come back, and that, Keith, must do the best he could for him. After a while Dr. Woodward returned, and he and Keith had another interview, and then Dr. Woodward left.

A lawyer went into the jury room, as the Coroner supposed, (the proceedings being ex parte) to aid in the investigation on the part of the people, and after hearing the testimony against Mr. Keith, left the room, and disclosed the fact that he was counsel for Keith, and Mr. Keith immediately sold out his stock of goods. About three o'clock on Monday morning, it was announced to the Coroner and jury that Mr. Keith had fled; being through with the evidence in the case of Keith, they made out and delivered to the Sheriff a warrant, commanding Keith's arrest, but he was nowhere to be found.

On Wednesday morning, at early dawn, a gentleman applied to Judge Whitney for a warrant for the apprehension of Keith; informing him that one John Allen, residing about eight miles south of Belvidere, went to one of his neighbors in the early part of the night, and informed him that one of Mr. Keith's lawyers had that evening paid him a large sum of money to take Mr. Keith from near Belvidere, and convey him with haste to the Illinois River; and requested this neighbor to aid him, which he refused to do, and immediately communicated this to others.

On this information, Judge Whitney issued a warrant for the apprehension of Mr. Keith, and eight or ten men started in pursuit, and overtook and arrested Keith and Allen toward the evening of that day, toward Paw Paw Grove. They found upon Allen two hundred and thirty dollars, which Keith has since claimed, and, we understand, taken away from Allen.

Allen's wagon was arranged with two wooden sprigs running lengthwise of the inside of the body, on which sticks were laid crosswise, on which were bags filled with hay, giving the appearance of a loaded wagon, and the bags high enough from the floor of the wagon to admit of a person creeping under. Mr. Keith was brought back to Belvidere on Friday morning and committed to Winnebago County Jail, on the warrant issued by the Coroner and jury. Subsequently he was taken out of jail, and brought before judge Henderson on a writ of habeas corpus.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationa ist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abdnction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;' "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

Topics of the Time.

Whatever may be said in favor of abolishing the Grand Jury system, respectable citizens of Chicago are not yet ready for such a reform; and perhaps no community has had such experience of its abuses. The charge of Judge Booth to the jury now sitting we lately noticed. In spite of the States Attorney, who seemed to be retained by the gamblers, the Grand Jury brought in the other day an indictment against McDonald, the king of the faro dens; against Finucan, a murdere; and against Wilbur F. Storey, proprietor and editor of the Chicago Times, for libel. These indictments strike at three of the worst scandals of this city, and if honestly prosecuted will give a healthier moral atmosphere than virtuous citizens have lately enjoyed.

Mr. Etter, superintendent-elect of the public schools of Illinois, has successfully performed the part of sitting on two stools at the same time until the close of the play; and now the curtain is down he may review with complacency the means used to obtain office. Nominated first by the farmer's party, he pulled his wires for the Democratic endorsement, and got it. Of course this policy lost him all votes cast honestly and intelligently in both parties. For he appeared before the people with these principles: expulsion of the currency, speedy return to specie payments, legislative control of railroads, the inviolability of railroad charters, prohibitory laws, and free beer. The mathematics of such a platform are unintelligible to common men. But Freemasonry is patron of the liberal arts and sciences, and Mr. Etter is a diligent student of Freemasonry, whether he is of anything else or no. His ability to seem black and white, to talk with both ends of his tongue at the same time is thus explained, and the ethical impossibility of one moral being believing all Mr. Etter believes vanishes. But whether the school children can be convinced by his logic is doubtful. On this the Tribune pointedly says, "Probably the men who voted for Etter are prepared to explain how a person without principles, or with two sets of opposing principles, can superintend excellently the education of the youth. We should like to have this problem in ethics solved."

A "fundamental issue has at length been discovered for the Republican party by the reclaimed backslider, the Chicago Tribune. After rumaging about in old ante-war records it finds a great issue running through federal history up to 1860, namely, the distinct and sovereign nationality of the United States commanding the allegiance of all the people, opposed by the idea of "State sovereignty." This question was represented on the one side by Lincoln and on the other by Jeff. Davis, and in the struggle led by them its discussion was abruptly closed by the argument of the bayonet. It has not been heard of for ten years, and everybody thought the "last ditch" had swallowed it along with the rotten Confederacy. The Republican party surely acted on the supposition that this, being the immediate issue of the war, had been forever decided by the collapse of secession, and placed the execution of its reconstruction policy in the hands of its carpet-bag representatives at the South. All parties acknowledge its supremacy. Recreant Louisianians become lamblike before it. Twice have Arkansas factions appealed to its authority. South Carolina give it a heartier majority than all the Northern States, whose loyalty no one doubts. Why, then, call back this ghost to reinhabit its bleaching bones? If the Republican party wants principles to preserve life, there are some to be had. But they are unpopular to such a degree that the party which accepts them must become the minority. The Republican party owes its record to just such a course. It may begin again and live, or continue to hug dead issues and become like them.

Freemasonry's Soliloquy.

BY S. H. RANDALL.

My altar lights are never out:
  My jewels always shine:
And e'er my cheated vot'ries shout,
  "Hail! Masonry divine!"

Their souls in things profound delight:
  Their zeal no danger damps;
As "To the East," "In search of light,"
  They take nocturnal tramps.

To home and country they are lost;
  Their manhood they have banned:
But heed no time, nor toil, nor cost,
  When I, their god, command.

With crape and fife they proudly bear
  A brother's sainted bones;
With stars and stripes 'neath plumb and square
  They prate o'er corner-stones.

Where'er their presence "cowans" cuts
  My bib-clad puppets wheel:
And there in gorgeous boot-legs struts
  The Templar's pretty steel.

But soon their warlike toil shall cease,
  Omniscience then they'll dodge;
And gain that realm of jolly peace,
  "The Grand Celestial Lodge."

And this he's earned, the "Mason bright,"
  Because he's learned so well
By damning oaths and blasph'mous rite
  The piety of hell.

The Entered 'prentice, past "the shock,"
  O'er regained breeches gloats;
His gastly slumber visons rock
  Of oaths and slashed up throats.

The Master tastes not death fore'er;
  But wakes to a new life;
And then he's wisely sworn to ne'er
  Debauch a brother's wife.

If 'neath the Royal Arch he'd push,
  A quadruped he crawls,
And hears within "the burning bush"
  The "I AM's" solemn calls.

The Templar's conscience seared and dull
  At crimes fraternal winks,
And from the loathsome wine-stained skull
  "Damnation double" drinks.

My glories hid by lodge-room walls
  Do pimp and sharper share,
And snicker while some Christian drawls
  The Mason's Christless prayer.

How sweetly on this work of mine
  The parson shuts his eyes;
And occupied with things divine,
  Contention loud decries!

I've often on the parson trod:
  He's meaner than a worm;
For though he dares "to kiss the rod,"
  He never dares to squirm.

My beck where blood in torrents flowed
  The victor's charge has barred.
I've honors for the cable-towed,
  But none for battle-scarred.

I legislative halls abash
  That dare my mandates break.
How oft at shaking of my lash
  Do cringing senates quake!

The sentence I from Justice wrench
  The ermine deeply blots,
And on the jury's fragrant bench
  A Mason always squats.

The papers, Freedom's snarling guard,
  Ne'er bark at tread of mine;
But hide their tails from pure regard,—
  Just hear the puppies whine!

The merchant lauds my stories strange,
  And in the dollar rakes.
My healthy looking babe, the grange,
  "Bamboozles country Jakes."

And now to 'stablish firm my reign,
  By measures fair or foul
I'll extirpate my projects 'bane,
  The cursed Artis' howl.

And freedom then will I exile:
  I'll lord it o'er her land:
Her easy, heedless people I'll
  With a square and compass brand.

Nor shall those Christians see a trace
  Of friendship deftly shammed;
I'll spit upon their Saviour's face,
  The wretch I've often damned.

Their hateful conscience I'll impeach;
  I'll curse it with my light,
For boldly I'll my ethics teach.
  Hurrah! for "might is right."

THE ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION.

Addresses of Hon. J. B. Walker and Prof. C. A. Blanchard.

On taking the chair as President-elect, Dr. Walker, addressed the Convention on the comparative morality of Christianity and Masonry. He did not wish to disparage morality as a social principle, but he did wish to show how the morality of the lodge made it difficult for the Mason to abide by the faith of Christ. A Mason may say that he is as good and true a citizen as any one outside of the order. He may feel that he is equal to most and superior to some. But no man can feel that he is equal to the great example of the Lord Jesus Christ. Masonic morality, however good it might be, compared itself with the business life around it, or with the church influence around it, but all moral men should remember the precept of Paul that they should measure themselves, as far as possible, after the standard of the Founder of the Christian religion. Masonic morality prevented men from being repentant, because they did not look beyond human comparisons for the standard of a higher life. While Masonry prevented repentance, it therefore taught immorality. And, in its oath, it taught immorality by teaching the member to keep all criminal secrets, unless murder and treason, in the first three degrees. The counterfeiter, the gambler, the thief, the adulterer, may escape, and their secrets will be kept by the brethren. In the higher orders of the Masonic order it is optional with the members to except murder and treason or not, as they may elect. Therefore, Masonry taught immorality by causing its members to swear an illegal and unjustifiable oath. The institution was evil, but some good men who belonged to it sustained it. If it were all evil, in the line of membership, it would inevitably gravitate toward hell. Were Masonry reduced to evil members alone, its power would be at an end.

Sometimes, in swearing in new members, some passages were omitted from the oath, but the new comer was sworn to keep secret not alone what was then read to him, but also everything belonging to the same oath that may hereafter be repeated to him. Thus the man swore to something he never knew or could not know anything about. How degrading it was to have a minister of the Christian church inducted into the Masonic order. A Masonic minister was led into the lodge with a rope about his neck and one slipper on and part of his clothing laid aside. Think of a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ being led up to take an oath with a rope about his neck! [Laughter.] And after getting into the hall there were some things done,—things so indecent and so revolting that no minister could dare to tell it to his congregation. Many abused the Christian religion by misrepresentation. Some of them said that St. John was a Mason, but well-informed Masons knew better than that. They also claimed that Solomon was a Mason. That the words "Jubela, Jubelo, Jubelum!" which they said was Latin, and which were used, they claimed, in the Temple of Solomon,—a building in which the Latin language had never been heard. [Applause.] The Masons claimed St. John as their patron saint. Did they not know that King Herod swore that he would grant the prayer of the woman mentioned in the Scripture without knowing what the request might be? She said, Bring me here, then, the head of the man called John on a charger; and it was brought. St. John the patron saint of the Masons! No, it was Herod! [Applause.]

Another thing about Masonry was that every man of every known sect might pray in the name of his God, but none could pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. This was terible. It was true that there was a branch of Masonry established recently, and not very recently either, the Knights Templar, that were allowed to pray to Jesus Christ. But the Blue Lodge Masons, and others, were not permitted to do so. The Masons actually mutilate the Bible. In their forms they quote from St. Paul to the Thessalonians, where they left out the name of Jesus Christ, but copied all the rest. Wherever the name of the Lord Jesus Christ occurred in their Scripture readings, the Masons left it out. The Masonic institution was the only anti-Christ that he knew of. [Applause.]

How a Man is Made a Mason

was the subject announced for the address of Prof. C. A. Blanchard, who, on being introduced, spoke substantially as follows:

There are 500,000 Masons in the United States. Nearly all of these gentlemen have mothers, most of them have wives and sisters, and many of them have children. Yet every man was sworn to secrecy under no less penalty than having their throats cut across, their tongues torn out, and their bodies buried in the sands of the sea. If there was nothing dishonest or dishonorable in the Masonic business, then why should the secret be kept from mother, wife or sister? It was absurd. He said that the entrance of a man into a secret order reminded him of the old nursery rhyme:

Open your month and shut your eyes,
And I'll give you something to make you wise.

This was so in Masonry. The man had to enter blindfolded. The child who shut his eyes and opened his mouth sometimes received blackberries, and sometimes dirt. It was so with the man seeking initiation. He must go it blind, and swallow dirt, if it were given him. People might say to him, that, if he was a Mason, he had broken his oath, and advertised himself as a perjurer. Or they might say to him that if he was not a Mason, he could know nothing of the order, and spoke simply in ignorance and in prejudice. He explained the peculiar solemnity of the Masonic oath and the terrible secrecy which it imposed. It concealed theft, because a man although honest on entering, swore to do anything that discipline might impose upon him. When a man was sworn into the Masonic fraternity, he was led in with a rope around his neck, as if he was a blind mule that had to be led around; he had all his clothing, except his shirt and drawers, taken off; he had one shoe on and the other off, so that he was neither naked nor clothed; neither shod nor unshod. Then he had to go through a lot of ceremonies which might be very disgusting to his moral sense. He must be led around the room for the amusement of men in white aprons and red aprons and black aprons, and he submits to degrading ceremonies, and the end of it is that they give him the privilege of carrying a white staff or a black staff, or a Bible on a board, or a sword in processions. It degraded man. Then the applicant was sworn always to conceal and never to reveal anything that had occured or that might occur in the order. He might answer that he swore to assume obligations which he was ignorant of, and to conform to customs of which he knew nothing. Masonry pledged men to partial honesty, partial purity, and partial morality. It swore a man to fidelity to the order, and to be honest toward all Masons, but not to the rest of mankind. Thus, if a man cheats another man, not knowing him to be a Mason, he is compelled, if he discovers his error, to make it all even with the brother Mason, for Masons must meet on the level and part on the quare. [Laughter.]

A Mason was sworn to partial morality. He was sworn not to have illegal intercourse with the wife, sister, or daughter of any other Mason, knowing the parties to be so connected. He was sworn to no such morality with the rest of the world. What would be thought of a church that would adopt a ritual compelling a member to come up to the altar and swear not to have illegal intercourse with any female member of that church, knowing her to be such? It would be branded with everlasting scorn. What kind of order was it that prohibited a man simply from illicit intercourse with the female relatives of brothers of the square and compass, and left them free to prey upon all other females, if he could? Then it banded men of every different calibre together by a band that only death could break. He did not say that all Masons were bad men—he did not believe that. He was told that Dr. Thomas, pastor of this church, declared in giving notice of this Convention, that he was a Mason himself. Then he is under obligation to recognize at all times and in all places the Masonic sign. Let us then suppose Dr. Thomas to receive the sign from a drunkard or immoral man. He must meet such as brothers. Of course there were very good and very bad men in the order. But they all knew each other by signs. A drunkard, a sot, might meet a doctor of divinity in the street and make him a sign. He might meet an eminent man of science in the street and make him a sign. The doctor would be compelled to meet with the sot and they were brothers—a relationship that only death could dissolve! [Applause.] About the ceremonies! If a man should violate secrecy by telling his wife anything of the absurd initiatory ceremonial he would, according to the terms of the Masonic oath, be liable to have his throat cut across, his tongue torn out, his heart and bowels let out, burned to ashes, and scattered to the four winds of heaven! By this time the man, if a common mortal, would be pretty nearly dead. [Applause and laughter.]

And did the Masons dare to override the laws of the State, and of the United States, by murderous executions of men who betray silly secrets? If they did carry out their penalties it must after the French recept for cooking a hare—first catch your hare—they must first catch their man. They did execute one man and suffered for it. For twenty years they were compelled to keep as still in America as fish under a river-bank, and now, if they murdered men at all, they had to do the thing secretly. He did not know whether they murdered men at all or not. If they did not, then they were bearded men practicing child's play, and "full of sound and fury signifying nothing."

The speaker then detailed in a most amusing manner the ritual of the Masons, the mode of entrance, garb, conversation, challenges, answers and prayers. And, after all had been gone through, heaven was invoked to aid the man. There never was a man more in need of Divine aid. [Laughter.] After the prayer, the minister here, the saloon-keeper there, the gambler further on,—all ministers, drunkards, merchants, thieves, and honest men,—solemnly, and in hoarse tones, exclaim, "So mote it be!" [Great laughter.] He mimicked the different oaths, and produced continued merriment. The compass, square, and other paraphernalia of the order received some share of criticism. A friend of his had said to him once that all the light he had ever had was from the three candles representing the sun, moon and stars, which were shown him after his bandage was torn off. This Mason had also said that he did not think there was anything bad in Masonry, but it was fearfully silly. It reminded him of a parcel of calves in a pen sucking each others' ears. [Roars of laughter which were several times renewed.] Such were the experiences of an apprentice of the Masonic order. It was taught him that the twenty-four inch gauge divided his time, and that he could get into heaven by aid of a stone-hammer. [Renewed laughter.] He was subjected to humiliation in every stage. He was partially stripped as an Entered Apprentice; he was still more stripped as Fellow-craft; and he was stripped worse than ever when he became a Master Master. [Laughter.]

But was that the last of his troubles? Not at all. The speaker went on to show a good many more things, which made the audience laugh. A fellow named "Jubelo" asked the word of the Grand Master, and he hit the unfortunate "brother craft" on the windpipe with his square, nearly knocking him down. Then he was met by another party named "Jubela," who hit him a terrible blow on the breast. Then he was passed to "Jubelum," who hit him over the head with a "stuffed club," or something of that sort [laughter], which effectually settled him for the night. There was a friend of his who, in York State, had been knocked down by his preacher, as "Jubelum," on Saturday night, and the same minister, preached salvation to his soul in his church on Sunday morning. [Great laughter and cheering.] This was a part of the ceremonial of a party becoming a Grand Master, under the name of Hiram Abiff, called after one of the supposed founders of the order. The rest of the ceremony was described at some length, and the effort was frequently applauded. Prof. Blanchard said that slowly, but surely, Masonry would go down in the civilized world. [Great cheering.] Masonry was at war with civil government, with Christianity, and with manhood, and that it might go down, God speed the day. [Loud applause.]

Holidays.

BY J. P. LYTLE.

The tendency and result of the observance of religious anniversaries is strikingly and accurately illustrated in the change which, through time, has taken place in the orthography and meaning of the general term used to desiguate them. "Holidays" were originally "holy-days;" appointed as such, observed as such, and spelled accordingly. As these were anniversaries, occurring regularly on the same day in each year, the observance of them soon degenerated, first into formalism, then into superstition, and finally into levity, frivolity, and all manner of excess. The nature of the days being changed, the orthography and meaning of the name underwent a change also; and, instead of the "holy-days" of the ancient chuch, we have the "holidays" of the modern; a term which, as Webster informs us, denotes "a festival, a day of exemption from labor and of amusement." The original idea of the term "holiday" has not entirely forsaken it; it is still in some sense a religious day, but a religious day turned, in the end, into frolic and carousal.

Since the Reformation any respect paid to these days has, by Protestants of the stricter sort, been regarded with disfavor, and as a symbolizing with popery. The holidays which have taken deepest hold on public attention, and secured most general respect, outside of the Church of Rome, are Christmas, Good Friday, and Easter.

Christmas, Christ's Mass, or the masses said in honor of the nativity of the Saviour, was an invention of anti-Christ in the dark ages; but the observance of the 25th of December as the birth-day of the Saviour dates back till some time in the second century. It was first observed in the Western church and thence carried over to the Eastern, which, before its introduction, had observed a day in January. The investigations of learned men have rendered it in the highest degree improbable that the birth of Christ took place on the 25th of December. It is moreover, evident from the uncertainty which hangs over the subject, that God has designedly concealed the truth in the case. The 25th of December was originally a heathen festival, kept in honor of the birth of Sol, i. e., the return of the sun at the shortest day of the year, and as it was found difficult to withdraw Christians from it, it was baptized with a Christian name, and kept as a Christian festival. The observance of Easter was an attempt to carry over into the Christian church one of the institutions of the Jewish—the passover. Good Friday is observed in commemoration of the sufferings of Christ and their good effects. None of these days have any higher authority than that of the church.

There is not wanting evidence of an increasing regard to these days, and others of a similar character, by many who bear the name of Protestants. Religious services are held on these days, their sanctity is made a theme of discussion, and careful preparation is made beforehand that their solemnity should be duly signalized. When a motion to adjourn over Good Friday was negatived in Congress a year or two since, one Episcopalian member protested with a warmth which has never yet been seen in that body on behalf of the Lord's day. Even Roman Catholics have become more shameless in their external regard to these days. On the day which introduces Lent there might have been seen, last winter, on the streets of our principal cities, ladies in the richest apparel and highest style of fashion with a black mark drawn obliquely across their foreheads as a sign of "the mortification of the flesh,' and it certainly had that appearance; and, besides, was excessively mortifying to sensible people who were compelled to witness it. One kind gentleman was on the point of committing the mortifying blunder of stopping one of these ladies to inform her that she had forgotten to wash her face, which must needs have been to the fair penitente mortification extraordinary and supererogatory.

While the ritualistically and superstitiously inclined are found to increase in their admiration and reverence for these days of "man's devising," there is another class who go to what may, at first thought, seem to be an opposite extreme, but which, in reality, is one stage of the journey to the same goal—Rome. This class turns the Romish festivals into days of idleness, mirth, revelry and unbounded excess. The concatenation of causes and effects seen at Horeb has often been witnessed. "They made an idol calf; they worshipped the same; they sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play." While licentiousness is the daughter of superstitution, it at the same time propagates its ancestry. The most licentious people are the most superstitious. Paris contains more sybils than any city on earth. If men will not believe in God he avenges himself by leaving them to believe in the devil. This connection of frivolity and superstition is yearly illustrated on an extended scale in Italy and other Roman Catholic countries, in the easy and natural subsidence of the unbridled license of th Carvinal into the austerity of Lent. Compounding for excessive indulgence by excessive austerity, and procuring indulgence for future excess by self-imposed austerities, is an old trick of the devil's priests and priestesses. "I have peace offerings with me, this day have I paid my vows. Therefore came I forth to meet thee. . . . I have decked my bed. . . . Come, let us take our fill of loves until the morning."

It may be seriously questioned whether the annual observance, even of Thanksgiving Day, tends to the improvement of the morals of the nation. A student at Yale College reports that when he arrived, about eight o'clock in the evening, at a Thanksgiving supper got up by the students, there had been a number of severe fights among the guests, and five or six had been carried home so badly injured as to be unable to walk. Several fights occurred afterwards, but not with such serious results.

The thanksgiving is proper, and the national Thanksgiving eminently so. The evil lies in the anniversary character of it. When men usurp God's prerogative by appointing set times for his worship, evil necessarily follows. Every festival in the Romish calendar came in precisely in this way. The country may congratulate itself that when a proposition was made two years ago, in Congress, to make the Fourth of July, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas and Washington's birth-day national holidays, there was sense enough left to reject it with decided coolness.

There are, no doubt, many who think themselves neither superstitiously nor licentiously inclined. They are masters of themselves. They see neither harm nor danger in paying some attention to church festivals as they come round. They are not going to Rome. Not they. Our fathers, in a reforming age, thought differently. The Psalmist resolved, "I will not take up their names in my lips." But no doubt he was peculiar in this.

The Boston Congregationalist for October 12th, 1866, contained a remarkable article on this subject from the pen of Rev. Jonas King, D. D., who was then on a visit to his native country after forty-five years of missionary labor in Greece. The great change in the religious aspect of the country affected him deeply, and he writes with apostolic unction and tenderness. The article is long and well worth pondering. We subjoin a brief extract or two. The Doctor says:

"In a religious point of view, I see in many things a marked and decided progress. But in some, I am sorry to be obliged to say, I perceive a tendency to that which has been the bane of the churches in the Eastern world—a tendency to forms and ceremonies in the worship of God, to the observance of fast-days, so-called, and of feast days which were never appointed of God, and were not kept by Christians in the first age after Christ—feast-days which have, in the Eastern churches, been productive of great evils by promoting idleness and other vices with which it is usually accompanied."

Then, after referring to Easter and Christmas particularly, and the supposed warrant for their observance, he adds:

'Now, all this had its commencement in a feeling of piety, and was nourished by what, at first sight, would seem to be a pious sentiment. But the moment we begin to depart from the simplicity of the word of God we are beginning to wander from him, and from the truth; and the moment we begin to receive in religion the traditions and commandments of men, we are in danger, and know not to what degree of degradation in religion we may be left to arrive."

Conscience versus Expediency.

The undertone of much of the popular sentiment of the day is, "Away with the old standards!" No matter what standards, if only they be venerable. We have not yet assumed the boldness of the French infidels who paraded the streets in torchlight processions, carrying transparencies lettered, "Down with hell!' but we are emulating that example. When Mr. Tilton, in accounting for his career, declares, "I hate the church, I hate the creeds," he is only carrying one of the transparencies, and hundreds of less courageous folks are filing along after him in the dark.

But the tendency is not only against the old standards of dogma, but almost equally against the old standards of morals. Expediency is usurping the throne of absolute right over the popular life. We are honest because "Honesty is the best policy." Virtue is a better paying stock than sensual indulgence, therefore, as a rule, let us be virtuous. Moses must be revised by Jeremy Bentham. The first, fourth and tenth commandments are chiseled off the ancient tables, and the rest may be broken only with great circumspection. The pure morality enunciated by Christ is the sublime soaring of a moral sentimentalist—the highest poetry of moral, which, however, we should not be expected to render into the prose of daily business and social life. Conscience, we are told, is due to a morbid play of our fears, unduly influenced by the peculiar system of education under which we have been since childhood. But let each man do that which he sees to be individually expedient, and all men labor for the "greatest good of the greatest number," and the result will be the highest right, whether according to our conscientious notions or not.

The danger which inevitably flows from the acceptance of this philosophy is due to the fact that not one person in a million can tell what will ultimately prove to be expedient. Perhaps a wretch seldom goes to his crimes until after he has convinced himself that it is expedient. The young thief is a genuine expediency philosopher. He steals from the money-draw, and says, "See, I gain so much, my employer does not miss it, and therefore knows no loss." Bentham could hardly object to his young disciple's logic, except to ask that it be expressed more vaguely, with more erudite phraseology. A libertine violates the domestic sancity of his neighbor, and, until exposure, excuses himself with the confession of Othello, when only suspicious of Desdemona.

"He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stol'n, Let him not know it, and he's not robb'd at all."

Seneca, the tutor of Nero, gave him this advice: "Amuse yourself, only take care that you injure no one." And while the imperial scapegrace was making that most damning page of history, his own life, he undoubtedly considered himself exceedingly clever and serviceable. He gave society an impulse to pleasure, while he revelled in pleasure himself. How many are to-day, with cry of fear and mutual crimination, trying to scramble back from the verge of ruin, which they feel to tremble beneath their feet, who walked boldly out upon that ledge, fearing no evil, and despising the warning of the old-fashioned moralists, with their eternal prating about obligation to self, and society and God?

And how is it with the inner experience of some? The little lust, when first allowed, was a petty single thread which the spider threw across the corner of the heart. But with that he has filled the heart with his filthy web, catching and killing every pure and sacred desire that tries to fly through it. We thought the first indulgence, though not absolutely right and though we could not say a prayer to Christ while we were yielding to it, was not harmful or inexpedient.

If men had eyesight which could penetrate ocean fogs, and bend with the curvature of the earth, they might safely dispense with chart and compass. So, if we had omniscent forsight of the whole range of causes and effects—most varied and intricate regarding human actions—we might safely do without consciences and follow expediency. But that we peril self and society by any departure from strict justice and purity and truth, is the too sad lesson of daily observation. God is bringing us back to the primary precept for human conduct by teroiqle chastisment. He asks us to read the fearful consequences of walking in our own conceits, which are written in colors of woe all over past history; and is calling to us, "Behold, the axe (of strict justice) is laid unto the roots of the trees; therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire."—Christian Intelligencer.

Reform News.

—Three State meetings in succession have for as many weeks filled our pages with interesting news. Additional word from the New York field holds over in consequence.

—We learn that Bro. Philo Elzea is lecturing with good effect in Walworth county. He lately spoke in the Congregational church in Delevan.

—Bro. Hale sends cheering words from his part of the field. Would there were a thousand such workers! J. C. Graham, of Viola, Ill., announced his intention in the Convention last week to consecrate his time and abilities more fully to this reform. And Bro. Hinman has an excellent and Scriptural idea, that Bro. Graham be associated with him, and thus canvass the State two and two in company.

The Illinois State Convention.

Excepting the general indifference and opposition of the community of Chicago, everything pointed to a successful meeting of our State Association. Able speakers were engaged, convenient rooms were hired, a good programme for business prepared, the Chicago dailies seemed favorably disposed, many of the pastors also were willing to announce the Convention from their pulpits, and the Association had not met for over two years. These were hopeful indications. The committee of arrangements, appointed at a meeting of citizens at the Young Men's Christian Association rooms, were faithful in their duties, and a large committee of ladies, among them Mrs. M. E. Cook, Mrs. W. W. Strong, Miss Frances E. Willard, and Mrs. H. F. Merrill assisted in securing places of entertainment and the co-operation of the pastors.

On Wednesday morning the Cynosure office presented an animated appearance. The friends of the reform naturally gravitated here; among them were representatives of adjoining States who thus showed their zeal by coming farther and with less inducement than the State delegates.

The Convention met in the afternoon in the lecture room of the First Methodist Episcopal church, and was called to order by Pres. Moses Pettengill of Peoria. The delegates and others filled all parts of the hall. The exercises were opened with prayer by Rev. F. Bascom and Elder P. Hurless, and singing.

The President then addressed the Convention as follows:

Members of the Illinois Christian Association opposed to secret societies:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: About two and a half years ago our last State Association was at Normal. That meeting, though not large, was pleasant and profitable.

And now, by the favor of a kind Providence, we are permitted to meet again under far more encouraging prospects and in this great city, renowned the world over for its wonderful growth and its great fires. Friends, it is with feelings of pleasure that I am permitted to greet you, gathered, as we believe, for a most worthy and Christian object. To carry forward the reform in which we are engaged will require the united efforts, wisdom, and patient perseverance of every friend of the cause. It may be asked: "What is the purpose of this meeting, and of our self-denying efforts of time and means?" The reply is, it is to deliver some of the thousands of our fellow men from the shackles of oath-bound secret societies, and to save our young men from devoting their time, talent, and means to an institution, not only heathenish, but anti-republican and anti-Christian. We meet to counsel together as to the wisest and best methods for carrying forward this great and much needed reform; to learn from our friends and our agents what progress is being made in the good work.

The signs of the times are encouraging. Only a few short years since our newspapers and pulpits were silent, muzzled. But now we have several praiseworthy instances where both political and religious publications utter strong words against their vain pretentions and trumpery. And better still, our own organ, the Christian Cynosure, is doing a good and great work.

We do well to take courage and pledge our time, talent, and means to the carrying forward of this cause by the active labors of our agents by circulating tracts, and especially the Christian Cynosure.

In conclusion, I would remark that to accomplish this great work we must not go in our own wisdom or strength, but in His who is able to pull down all the strongholds of Satan.

The following committees were then appointed:

Enrollment—H. H. Hinman, W. I. Phillips, I. R. B. Arnold.
Nominations—A. D. Freeman, J. C. Graham, F. Bascom.
Finance—Hon. J. B. Walker, Philo Cardenter, Geo. Dietrich.
Correspondence—N. D. Fanning.
Resolutions—I. A. Hart, William Pinkney, P. Hurless, and Z. Eastman.

The State agent, Rev. H. H. Hinman, then addressed the Convention on the work of the State Association.

He was followed by Dr. J. B. Walker, of Wheaton, in a brief addres, showing the despotism of the lodge. Rev. J. W. Bain of this city also spoke forcibly on the religious and anti-Christian character of Freemasonry. Brief remarks were made by Sam'l French, of Jacksonville, Bishop Dickson, of Decatur, and J. C. Graham, of Viola.

The committee of finances reported. They recommended that $2,000 be raised by the Association to carry on the reform in the State, and $200 for the expenses of the Convention.

The Committee on nominations made the following report on officers for the ensuing year, which was adopted,

President—Hon. J. B. Walker.
Vice-Presidents—Rev. S. B. Allen, J. W. Bain, F. Bascom, A. D. Freeman, and O. E. Burch.
Recording and Corresponding Secretary—I. R. B. Arnold.
Treasurer—H. L. Kellogg.

H. H. Hinman, J. C. Graham and Samuel French were appointed a committee to recommend the place and time of holding the next annual meeting. After hearing a partial report from the Enrollment committee, and appointing a devotional meeting to be held for a half hour before the evening session, which Pres. Blanchard was requested to lead, adjournment was had to evening.

The evening session was attended by a large audience. The floor of the large and well-appointed auditorium of the building was full and a number were admitted to the galleries. The audience was highly respectable as well as large, and included many ladies. Prof. H. F. Merrill presided at the organ and led the audience in their hymns of praise.

The addresses of the evening were made by Hon. J. B. Walker, the president-elect, and Prof. C. A. Blanchard. They were enthusiastically received and are briefly reported on the first and second pages of this number. Between the addresses a collection was taken up. The secret orders were well represented and were effectually curled up. The bold front put on at the beginning was thoroughly wilted down, and almost every Mason in the room could, ere the close, be detected by their nervous and abashed countenance and the lowly manner in which they slunk down in their seats. Those who were accompanied by their wives were most to be pitied, for the home cross-examinations and "curtain lectures" they had every reason to expect.

THURSDAY'S SESSION.

After an hour spent in prayer and conference, the Convention resumed business. The minutes were read; the committee on next meeting reported in favor of Peoria as the place and the second Wednesday in November the time of the next annual meeting; friends present from other States were invited to take part as honorary members; the committee on resolutions reported, the report was recommitted and Rev. W. E. Holyoke, Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Revs. J. W. Bain and D. P. Baker were added to the committee.

Brief addresses were made during the session by Dr. F. Bascom, Bishop J. Dickson, Revs. H. H. Hinman and W. E. Coquillette and Pres. J. Blanchard. The general report of these addresses will be given hereafter. They were suggestive and must not be lost to our readers. Bishop Dickson said he was raised with considerable information of Masonry, as his father was an active member of the order; and he was not unaware of its evil nature and accessories. He quoted from a Masonic drinking song learned years ago to prove its immoral tendency. He referred to the United Brethren church and its position on the lodge question. Some members were displeased with their rule and opposed its operation but he belonged to the right wing which adhered to the Scripture principles and the long-standing testimony of the denomination.

Jottings from the New York Field.

DEAR K:—After my trip up north I was permitted a short rest, until noon of Oct. 13th, when I received a line from J. B. Hart, president of Groton Association, requesting my attendance at their first annual meeting the following day. Accordingly, 5 P. M. of that day found me on the cars heading for Mc Lean, the place of meeting, where I landed at 8 o'clock and was taken in charge by Bro. Betts, pastor of the Baptist church, with whom I found a congenial home until the opening of the meeting on the following morning.

Bro. B. is a new and promising recruit, a young and growing man, who is destined to make his mark on the body of the modern anti-Christ; one who is willing to leave all and follow the Master through evil as well as good report. God grant that many more such young and vigorous laborers may be called into the vineyard speedily! The morning for our meeting dawned upon us, bringing with it an unpleasant snowstorm which lasted with but little intermission all the day. The steadily falling snow as it filtered through the still green leaves quietly to the ground, had a strange, sombre and somewhat out-of-place look, and doubtless kept many from the meeting. Still we had a goodly number out, who made up in spirit and efficiency for whatever else was found wanting. Spirited sessions was held forenoon and afternoon and evening, which were addressed by the writer. Stirring resolutions were adopted, and four dollars and twenty-five cents raised for tracts, which I sent to your office; but have seen no notice of its reception.

Our Masonic friends remembered my former visit to Mc Lean; and did not seem very glad to know that I was coming again. Indeed, so cruelly unappreciative were they of my labors in their behalf that they were heard to say, "We had rather see the devil coming here, than that Barlow!" Well, that is curious; but "there is no accounting for tastes!' One likes one kind of company, and another fancies and makes a different kind of society more congenial. Perhaps it is not strange that Masons should prefer to see their real Grand Master, named above, rather than to see one who is his avowed enemy. Allow me to hope, however, that such may not eventually be compelled to have more of the devil's company than will be pleasant for them.

The Groton Association is now a fixed fact, with between 50 and 100 members, all determined to "push the battle to the gate." This is, I believe, the first, but I trust will not be the last town organization in the State. Few, however, are aware of the effort necessary to be put forth in order to get one of these societies into active being, in our State especially; but this is a work absolutely necessary to be done, if we would succeed in our conflict with the powers of darkness.

Saturday, Oct. 17th, found me at 10 P. M. in Woodhull, Steuben Co., at the house of your correspondent, Philo Millard. When I reached the house of our friend, I found that himself and family had retired for the night, though for some reason the lights were still burning. As I was not expected, my arrival at that late hour gave the family quite a scare which was not in the least mended by my giving my name—his wife and daughters judging this to be a ruse to draw Bro. Millard to the door, and so get him to run into the hands of enemies. At length Bro. M. came and opened the door, when finding only my harmless self, the fears of the family were dispelled and I was kindly welcomed and hospitably entertained until Thursday following. The reason for the fears entertained by the family, as above mentioned, lies in the fact that Bro. Millard is an active Anti-mason, and has brought down upon himself the wrath of the fraternity by his outspoken opposition to secrecy—his active labor in scattering anti-secret books, tracts, papers, etc., for which he has more than once been threatened with violence. It will be recollected Bro. M. has his residence in the county where Rathbun was so fearfully and nearly fatally mobbed four years ago. The spirit of lawlessness in this direction is not all dead there yet.

Sabbath morning, Oct. 18th, Bro. Millard and myself attended religious service with the Episcopal Methodists, and applied to the trustees for the use of their house of worship, for a course of lectures. Two of the three were in favor of granting our request, but the other objected,—the whole number finally giving as a reason for refusing the house, that they were about to repair it, and they feared that Masons would refuse to help them, if they let me in to lecture! Thus in order to secure a little of the devil's money to repair the house of God, that house must be closed against all warnings to the people, of the destroying devices of the devil! How long, oh Lord, how long!

It was feared that the Baptist house would be shut against us, as they had one member who was a Mason, and beside they had a resolution on their books against such use of the house, but upon application, we were agreeably disappointed by the church granting us the desired permission. In the evening of Sabbath I preached for them, and on the three evenings following to good and respectful congregations, among whom were more or less Masons. I learned from the friends that the craft had been and were much excited about my coming and work; but with the exception of a threat which came to my ears that I "would not get out of the place without a coat of tar and feathers," I was not molested. I gave opportunity for reply, but got none.

On closing my lectures I assured the church of my gratitude for the use of their house; and I felt all the thankfulness I expressed, but I trust the time is not far distant when Baptist and other evangelical churches will themselves be more than thankful to those, who, like myself, are willing to perform the labor of warning the ministry and the people, of the dangers to which they are exposed from the encroachment of organized and oath-bound secrecy. In every place I visit I learn something new respecting this danger and the power it is exercising for evil over the churches; and but for such men as Bro. Millard, and others scattered here and there over the land, whom God has raised up for the work of spreading the alarm, the subjugation of the churches to the lodge would be complete. Thank God for such men. The world and church owe them a debt they will never pay. More anon.

Lively Work in Ohio.

Mallet Creek, O., Nov. 15, 1874

Editor Cynosure:

Last evening I commenced my winter's campaign at Litchfield. I spoke to a fine audience of well-behaved Masons, Odd-fellows and grangers. I treated them kindly and faithfully, and judging from their attention they duly appreciated the effort. To-morrow evening I speak to them again continuing the same subject. Wednesday and Thursday evenings at Berea, O., Friday and Saturday at Strongsville. Next week Monday and Tuesday at Pike Station, Wayne Co., Wednesday and Thursday at Canaan; Friday and Saturday at Burbank in the same county. Farther than this I have no appointments; but if the Lord will give me strength and wisdom to faithfully perform I hope to have appointments nearly every evening during the winter, as I design giving my best services to the cause, hoping, however, to raise some funds for the support of our State agency. And if you choose you may say to our friends in adjacent counties or places whtch I can conveniently reach by railroad, that I am at their service provided they will meet necessary expenses, and where they are able to do so I shall expect them to contribute something to help the cause.

Yours truly,

Samuel Hale.

From the General Agent.

Peru, Ind., Nov. 16, 1874.

Through one of those Divine providences which subsequent events only explain, I was detained in this county over Sabbath. Learning that Isaac Crane living two and one-half miles from this city was a friend to our reform, I made my why to his house on foot, where I met a cordial welcome. Not finding Mr. C. at home I concluded to tarry until his return, which he did at evening. We were soon acquainted and I learned that he is not a man of words only, but a man of deeds as well. He has been zealously at work for some time among his neighbors, and, as usual, his labors have not been in vain. Although the "Patrons" have started a "grange" in the neighborhood, by dint of effort, yet they have thought it wise to leave the school-house and repair to a place better suited to clandestine nocturnal opparations. Many of the more thoughtful and active young men have been saved through the wise counsel of this efficient co-worker.

Arrangements were made for active operations on Sabbath in due time, and notice extended as far as possible. I preached at U. B. Chapel at 11 o'clock A. M. to a limited number, and gave notice of a lecture at Salem Schoolhouse at 8 P. M. Much interest was manifested and the attendance was good in the afternoon. Some of the Patrons acknowledged that what I said of the ceremonies of their order was correct. Several new friends were enlisted and the way prepared. I trust for Bro. Kiggins to visit this along with other points in Miami county.

In circulating notices Mr. Crane met a leading Freemason who informed him that all opposition was useless, as Masonry was so powerful that it runs the Government; still affirming that we (cowans) know nothing about it.

This man was either better informed or more frank in his statement than most of the "Mystic brotherhood." He told a truth, to be taken with a slight abatement, perhaps, which, despite the efforts of the order "ever to conceal," the people are beginning to understand. Those who have given any attention to our courts and political affairs are many of them convinced that judgment and justice are little accounted of in these days, and that Republican and Democratic lodge men in office can be manipulated with equal facility in the interests of the craft. The "party" is only the instrument laid hold of, or the screen behind which the lodge skulks while plying its devilish arts. When the corruption so rampart and unblushing in our Government and courts is tracted to its origin, its foundation will not be located in either of the great political parties, but in the "Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspector Generals;" with Albert Pike, "Most Puisant Sovereign Grand Commander, at its head. Political demagogues may augment the stream, but the prolific fountain is in the lodge, and the people will never escape from this secret tyrannical despotism so long as they elevate to office men whose first and paramount allegiance is to this "Supreme Masonic Council." It is time for the people to awake and sound the alarm when men of the craft say that "Masonry runs the Government."

In this city is a beautiful court-house built by the county and paid for with the citizens' money. Upon its corner-stone are the "finger-marks" of the lodge. Some persons who have carefully scrutinized the court proceedings of Miami county for the past few years have been forced to the unwelcome conclusion that that same "peculiar institution" which laid the corner-stone now controls the tribunal meeting in the completed structure for the especial benefit of such as can give the "hailing sign." If there is any foundation for such conclusions, this can be nothing less than the grossest outrage upon the rights of those who are only American citizens. The time hastens, I trust, when the lodge will not be permitted to control the courts, but the courts the lodge, if indeed the world must be cursed by these cesspools of murder and treason.

J. P. Stoddard.

Buck Creek, Tippecance Co., Ind., Nov. 9, 1874.

Dear K:—I left Indianapolis at 8 P. M. on the 5th inst., at 11 P. M., and reaching La Fayette found comfortable lodgings at the Lake House. After breakfast I repaired to the house of our venerable friend Robt. Stockwell, whom I found deeply interested and ready to do all that the feeble state of his health would permit. Calling upon a number of prominent men and ministers, we found them exceedingly cautious about taking any decisive measures in opposition to these proscriptive orders. I had but little time to spend in the city, and on that account was compelled to omit seeing several persons whom I had hoped to find interested in our reform. The United Brethren have a church in L., but want of fidelity to their rule on secrecy, has placed them in rather unpleasant circumstances. Such instances are occasionally to be found, and should be a warning to all those churches whose disciplines require their membership to disfellowship secrecy. They should forsee the evil and avoid the complication and unpleasantness which must follow. Compromise with sin is a sure precurser of trouble. At the depot I met our good Bro. Lacy, and with him repaired to this place where he ministers to a Wesleyan Methodist class that he has gathered on missionary ground. Bro. L. has taken twenty-eight degrees in Masonry, but now fully in sympathy with the Wesleyan Methodist connection on the lodge question. Knowing the terrors of the lodge he feels it his duty to use caution, but, rejoicing in the progress of our reform he is anxiously awaiting the time when the sentiment of the country will make it safe for a man to disclose and publish the deep, dark doings of the Sir Knights. We met a cordial reception at the house of father Shigley who has long been a pillar of strength in the Christian church at this place; but who, much to our regret, is now confined to his bed by a mild attack of chill-fever. Many friends have called to express their sympathy and show their appreciation of the man who is indeed a father in Israel. May his life be spared, and health restored to many years of useful service!

I preached twice at this point yesterday and listened to a very thorough practical and eminently appropriate funeral discourse by Bro. Lacy. Several having expressed a desire that I should speak here on secret societies, I consented to an appointment this afternoon. The grange has found its way to this place and has, I am told, been in operation about a year. This is the time of expenditure and seed-sowing on the part of the members and of harvest with the managers. Possibly the order of things will be reversed by and by, and some benefit accrue to the members. As elsewhere thy are waiting for the "Good time coming."

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Our movement against the hidden organized bands that meet nightly and swear to ever conceal and never reveal" is onward in this corner. The discussion with the fearful Mormon Mason is over. We proved in this debate that Joe Smith's deacons were sworn to defend him as their prophet and to heed his voice as the voice of God in all things, murder and treason not excepted. This, the great Morman man, who had agreed in a written proposition to defend Joe as a sincerely inspired prophet of God, did not deny. I suppose he was fearful of hurting the tender feelings of his Masonic brotherhood if he should say anything against "murder and treason." I lectured at No. 3 school-house; had a full house and good attention; am strongly solicited to give another lecture; if the Lord will I shall. I have distributed free about one hundred tracts, Anti-masonic Heralds and Cynosures. I am about out; would like to have more, but as I work for nothing and board myself, money is scarce with me now. In the name of Christ I shall canvass White and Hamilton counties lecturing —eggs or no eggs.

Yours fully enlisted,

James Springer.

A New Work begun in Michigan.

Clarendon, Mich.

Bro. Kellogg:—I thought perhaps a few words from this section of Michigan relative to the spread of light against the darkness of secretism, might be encouraging to the readers of your faithful Cynosure.

I came into the town of Clarendon, Calhoun Co., last spring, bringing the Cynosure with me. I found a large part of the people opposed to secret orders, especially Freemasonry, though but a little Anti-masonic literature had been circulated, and no lecturing done. I commenced lending my paper and distributing my tracts, and selling certificates of annual membership in the N. C. A., which led to an invitation to lecture. I consented (though not a professional lecturer) to give two lectures. I had crowded houses and good attention throughout, with one exception, and he soon grew quiet. A member of the order of "Free and accepted," were in each night and behaved very gentlemanly. I think a good impression was left, and we have had a rising religious interest for miles around us ever since. I have tried to obtain subscribers to the paper but failed in that, money is scarce and the interest is not quite high enough. I think if we had a competent lecturer here an organization could be affected, and a good work done. I pray that the blood-stained power of secretism may fall. Yours for the truth,

H. S. Limbocker.

State Lecturer for Michigan.

Pine Run, Nov. 9, 1874.

I see in the Cynosure a motion to procure the servces of D. P. Rathbun as State lecturer. We should have a State lecturer immediately. I have talked with friends in these parts who have heard Bro. Rathbun, and think that he is just the man. We need lectures here by some one who has been in the trap; as the man who now preaches to three Congregational churches, one in this place, is chaplain of the Masonic and Odd-fellow lodges of this place, and member of the Knight Templar lodge at Flint, and is using his influence to draw victims into the lodge telling them that the Cynosure tracts are "unmitigated lies," etc., I think a lecturer might find business in Genesee, Tuscola, and Saginaw counties enough to last two weeks or more. I have obtained consent of all the trustees of the Congregational societies of Pine Run to use their church for lectures. Shall we have them? Several hundred tracts have been distributed in the above named counties and people are wishing for more light.

Yours truly,

Walter M. Beden.

OUR MAIL.

Geo. Leaming, Stockwell, Ind., writes:

"Church members have been running wild as well as ministers on the grange. Many ministers of the United Brethren and the United Presbyterian churches have become apologists for and some of them members of Masons' and Odd-fellows' lodges."

David H. Hobson, Pana, Ill., writes:

"I am well pleased with the Cynosure. You have my most earnest prayers for the overthrow of secrecy."

Mr. E. M. Lewis, Sublette, Ill., writes:

"I will get as many subscriptions as I can find, and send money as fast as I can get it."

Daniel Hartwell, Hadley, Mich., writes:

"I am now eighty-two years old and quite infirm; also my eyesight is dim, and I can read but a very little. But I will say to you that I will try and take your paper for the benefit of my sons. Now I do hope that you will excuse me entirely from all business, for I am not able to perform any more work, although I shall ever turn my heart and hands against Masonry; and I thank God that my sons are not Masons, which is a great consolation to me in my old age."

Certainly we would not put any burden upon our aged friend. If you can send the petition headings to J. W. Pierson, of your place, he may be able to put them where they will be used.

J. G. Tyler, Janesville, Mich., writes:

"I have been and am still opposed to speculative Freemasonry, and have been from my youth until now. I am nearly seventy-five years of age. My good father once said that he did not reveal Masonry but that Morgan's book did."

Geo. Freed, Columbiana, O., writes:

"I am in my seventy-seventh year and have been an Anti-mason since 1826, when they murdered Morgan, and have had nothing to do with rum and weed. . . I will not commune with idolators. Have been a Wesleyan Methodist. Wesley would not have dramdrinking and snuff and tobacco used in his societies."

James Kilgore, Mercer, Pa., writes:

"The more I learn of the principles and workings of the secret orders of the day the more firmly I believe them to be the devil's traps and snares to catch and destroy the souls of men."

S. M. Doane, Granger, N. Y., writes:

"I have let my papers go nearly as fast as I got them. They do not seem to do any good as yet."

"Thou shalt find it after many days."

D. Kirkpatrick, Syracuse, N. Y., writes:

"The cause in this State is progressing slowly but surely. Mr. Barlow is doing excellent service, and I think his labors are productive of good."

J. C. McCoy, Cloverdale, Ind., writes:

"I am pleased with the paper and am in full sympathy with this great reform movement. I have not done all that I could in the cause had I made greater efforts. When I have more leisure I will try and accomplish more. Yours in hope of victory for the truth and light over darkness and superstition."

Wandel Vine, Viola, Minn., writes:

"There are some friends here to strengthen the reform. We have withstood the Good Templar rage without any loss; but when the grange wave came with its great inducements to speedy wealth, it took from us some eight members of our church (the United Brethren in Christ.) Nevertheless, there are fifteen now true, who have their hearts strengthened by one friendly copy of the Cynosure once a week which is so welcome to our table. I have been trying to get more subscribers. I expect to send some two or three more soon. How I would like to have a good lecturer come and give us a course of lectures. You have my hearty wishes for the speedy overthrow of the powers of darkness."

Mrs. Miles, Pleasant Hill, O., writes:

"I should be sorry to do without the paper. It has always been a welcome messenger and so now in my lonely hours. My husband hailed with gratitute the onward march of truth, and did what he could to spread the light on secret orders. He did not forget the same in his will. Judging from what I know of the progress of Masonry in this place, I think it has been on the decline in this place since J. P. Stoddard delivered some lectures here two or three years ago. Good seed will grow though it may be years germinating. I, for one, am willing to put more money, heart and soul into this work."

J. A. Brigham, Mallet Creek, O., writes:

"God bless you and prosper the cause in which you labor."

B. F. Millen, Missouri City, Mo., writes:

"All secret societies are going down here. I will try and get you some more subscribers."

Quincy Fallin, Greensburg, O., writes:

"I have read the Cynosure but six months, still I am fully determined that I will never join the Masons, although I have thought many times that I would. The Cynosure has enlightened me much on Masonry and other evils."

Mrs. R. Rogers, Mauston, Wis, writes:

"I like the paper very much. . . . Mauston is Masonic. Those who are Anti-masonic are afraid to show their colors."

Eli Hoover, Bennet's Switch, Ind., writes:

"I have been taking it (the Cynosure) nearly ever since it started, and I like it better and better."

John Wilson, Ontario, Ind., writes:

"I have sent the Cynosure to many of my acquaintances ten or twelve miles from home in order to let others know its great value. . . I hope it will have a good circulation this coming year. I have a good many names on those petitions you sent me."

Barlow Barto, Alton, Mich., writes:

"I have not time now to canvass, but I intend to circulate that petition you sent me. I am in hopes then to get some new subscribers. The thing moves slow here. I began alone, but now there is a goodly number that will not bend the knee to Baal. If some one of the lecturers could come here, I think there might be much good done."

James H. Berryman, Houghton, Ill., writes:

"If I do not get some new subscribers this month, it will be because trying must fail. I long to see your subscription list doubled a half dozen times. I regret that I cannot attend the convention on the 18th and 19th, but hope God will be with and guide all who attend. I received the petition last week. Have got some to sign it and I expect to get one hundred names and as many more as possible."

If any of our friends can circulate petitions, but have not received them, we will send them if you apply for them.

Lesson for Dec. 6th—The Denial.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK xiv. 66-72.

Commit 66-72. Primary verse, 72.

66 And as Peter was beneath the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest:

67 And when she saw Peter warming himself she looked upon him, and said, And thou also was with Jesus of Nazareth.

68 But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew.

69 And the maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them.

70 And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto.

71 But he began to curse and swear, saying, I know not this man of whom you speak.

72 And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice thou shalt deny me thrice. And when he thought thereon he wept.

I know not the Man, " 69, 71.
The Lord's look at Peter, Luke xxii. 61.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

The name of our lesson "the denial" is given to the account of Peter's fall. The "Golden Text" is a word of warning, the "principal topic" is a word of comfort. The plan of the lesson is to set forth the steps or progress of backsliding, and the power of God to keep and to restore.

What is the first topic? Where was the scene of the last lesson? Between the two lessons we have journeyed from the garden to the palace. Who is the principal actor in our lesson to-day? What warning did Jesus give? (verse 30.) What answer did Peter make? (verse 31.) What kind of confidence did he have? What did Peter do in the garden? (verses 37, 47.) When Jesus was led away, what did Peter do? (Luke xxii. 54.) How did he enter the palace? (John xviii. 15, 16.)

What is the second topic? When Peter entered the palace where did he go? (John xviii. 18.) Who were around this fire, the friends or enemies of Jesus? Where was Jesus at this time? (John xviii. 19-23.) What occurred as Peter sat by the fire? (verses 66, 67.) Here was a bold man frightened by a servant girl. What next occurred? (verses 69, 70.) Here he added an oath to his denial (Matt. xvi. 72.) Sin to sin. When we sit down with the enemies of Jesus we cannot tell where we will be led.

What is the third topic? What occurred after the first denial? (verse 68?) Do you think Peter heard it? Why do we not hear every warning? Was it easier to deny the second time than the first? Why? What did they say to him at the third charge? (verse 70.) Name some of the occasions when Peter had known Jesus (Mark i. 16; 29-31; Matt. xiv. 28-31; Matt. xvi. 13-13; Mark ix. 5-8.) Repeat the golden text.

What is the fourth topic? Read Luke xxii. 61. Who had heard the denial? What kind of a look did Jesus give? What effect did the look have upon Peter? (It quickened his memory and softened his heart.) Do you think Jesus continued to love Peter? What is said about his love? (John xiii. 1; Jer. xxxi. 3; Rom. viii. 35.)

What is the fifth topic? Repeat verse 72. Give the principal topic. What had Jesus said to him? (verse 30.) What had he said before this? (Luke xxii. 31.) What was Satan permitted to do with Peter? What had Jesus done for him? (Luke xxii. 32.) Did Jesus pray that he should not fall? What did he pray for? What promise is included in this verse? What would these words teach Peter? What kind of tears did Peter shed? Where did Peter and the Lord meet again? (John xxi. 7, 15-19.) Name the steps of backsliding; of restoration. Precious words. Jesus loves to the end.—National S. S. Teacher.

APPROACHING DANGER.

He furthermore swears "to apprise a brother of all approaching danger, if in his power." This oath is, like the others, unqualified, by any exception. It is found in Morgan and the Le Roy Convention. Jachin and Boaz and the Three Distinct Knocks, state it thus: "I will give a brother notice of all dangers as far as in my power lies." This is in effect the same, as the expressions used by Morgan. Carlisle, in the parallel passage of the oath, says: "I will not see a brother defrauded of the most trifling amount;" thus confining the obligation to apprise of danger only to frauds upon our property.

No finer illustration of the nature of this obligation as it is understood by the fraternity, can be furnished, than the following, which I report on the authority of Mr. Beach, one of the parties. Some time before the Morgan outrage, a grave was robbed at Rochester, N. Y., with circumstances that induced the trustees of the village to take vigorous measures for the discovery of the robbers; and the better to secure their object they pledged each other to secrecy. As the investigation proceeded, it was discovered, that the guilty had been apprised of approaching danger, and all the signs of guilt had been removed and concealed. Upon this, certain of the trustees were indignant, and demanding who had betrayed them, suspecting badly their clerk, Mr. Beach, my informant. He cleared himself with vehemence, and the matter growing quite serious among the trustees, at length two of them confessed that they had done it, and in excuse plead that they and the plunderer being brother Masons, they were under oath to apprise him of his danger. Where one case of this kind comes to light, a hundred happen.

These oaths require no comment. They are of a character so hardened and wicked, that we can scarcely refuse believing an honest Freemason who hotly asserts "that they are absolutely false, as base forgery upon the pure character and upright intention of the venerable order of Freemasonry."

We mean not to contradict, or to be contradicted; yet if an honorable man, a Freemason, says he never took one of these obligations, we are astonished, and cannot but think him mistaken: for Freemasonry asserts with equal confidence, that her ancient landmarks and customs, her laws and immemorial usages are invariable. "It is not in the power of any man or body of men, to make innovations in the body of Masonry."—(Elder Bradley, p. 219.) If it were so, all Masons must have taken these oaths, for some have taken them. Morgan truly revealed the iniquity of this mystery, or else he is not a perjured knave, as some affirm. His revelation is further sustained in substance, by some hundreds, who are competant from their own knowledge to declare that it is true. It is also sustained by the similar revelations of other years, and other countries, varying enough in showing independence in their source, and sufficiently according, to prove the general truths they agree to assert.

What says Dr. M'Cracken, of Rochester, N. Y? "On a jury, previous to the Morgan excitement, I saw the culprit on trial give the sign of a Masor, which was hailed according to the Masonic oath, by two weak jurors. Making up the verdict, these could not find the prisoner at the bar guilty. Then I took them aside, as a brother Mason, and told them that they carried their Masonic obligations too far. This was sufficient to shake their confidence, and they yielded to the evidence of the prisoner's guilt."

John R. Mulford, of Bottle Hill, N. J., says: "I have seen a grand jury selected by a Masonic high sheriff, with an express view to prevent an indictment against a brother Mason. I have seen a Mason brought up to be tried on an indictment, and observed him make the Masonic signal of distress, and another sign to the jury, which latter sign of the hand drawn across the throat, two of the jurors answered, and these same jurors, when out, refused to convict on a clear case of guilt. I have also seen Masonic signs exchanged between the bar and the bench."

The history of the Morgan trials is full proof to establish the fact, that the oaths of Freemasonry corrupt the fountains of justice, and impede the execution of the laws. Mr. Whiting, the public prosecutor of the trials at Canandaigua before the appointment of Mr. Mosely, and since Mr. M's appointment, his constant assistant, is a Mason. He declares that the opportunity he has had to see the evil workings of the system, is enough to make him pronounce it dangerous and corrupt. So say many of our best men, who do not yet feel it a duty to speak out publicly.

I turn back to the oaths. "I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister, or daughter, I knowing them to be such, nor suffer it to be done by others, if in my power to prevent it." This obligation is the pride of many advocates of Freemasonry, it is revealed by Morgan, Carlisle, and the Le Roy Convention; and is not in Jachin and Boaz, or the Three Distinct Knocks. But what does it mean, "I will not have unlawful, carnal intercourse with the wife, sister, or daughter of a Master Mason," says Carlisle. So a Mason is solemnly sworn to respect the chastity of a brother Mason's wife and sister; but the cousins of the Mason, the wives of the neighbors not Masons; they are free. A Mason would not be expelled and published for unworthy unmasonic conduct, debauching a brother Mason's cousin. It is Masonically legal to do that. It is Masonically legal to indulge in unlawful, carnal connection with any, except those excepted, the wife, sister, daughter, and Morgan adds mother, of a brother Mason. This is Masonic morality.

We have not time to give all the iniquitous points in the oaths of Masonry; and I notice but one more. It is found only in Carlisle, but it is certainly sometimes given in the lodges in this country, and is precisely in the selfish spirit of the last, and in the true spirit of Freemasonry. It is this: "I will also prefer a brother Master Mason in all my dealings, and recommend him to others, as much as lies in my power, so long as he shall continue to act honorably, honestly, and faithfully towards me and others." Prefer him in all my dealings: i. e., trade with him as a merchant, council with him as a lawyer, employ him as a mechanic, and vote for him as a public officer, in preference to another, who has not learned, with a halter about his neck, to pronounce "Shibboleth." I have not mentioned this in way of remonstrance to a great number of brethren, but I have named it to wise men among them, and invariably they have pronounced it no cause of complaint that men should prefer their brethren!—"Say you so? —Then you Masons continue to prefer one another, and we that are not Masons will prefer one another."

This proposition made, the brethren see at once it would be a losing game to play; the whole sport is, to make sure of the Masonic interest, and obtain as much more as possible; and so soon as they are confined to their own limits, they give up.

How easy it is to enlarge upon the subject already open, every one can see; but yet I have not touched the obligations above the third degree: and the oaths get worse, as we advance in this scheme of iniquity. But we must leave the obligations to look at the penalties attached to them; these are invariably the same in spirit in all the different revelations that have been made, from Prichard's in 1730, to Morgan's in 1826, and I never heard any Mason dispute them, though many may do it with the same propriety they dispute the obligations of the oaths I have cited. This is a horrid part of the subject, but fidelity to the cause demands that we be attentive here.

CARLISLE'S PENALTY OF THE ENTERED APPRENTICE'S OATH.

"My throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the root, and buried in the sand of the sea, at low water mark, or a cable's length from the shore, where the tides regularly ebb and flow twice in twenty-four hours, or the more efficient punishment of being branded as a wilfully perjured individual, void of all moral worth, &c. So help me God, and keep me steadfast in this my great and solemn obligation of an Entered Apprentice Mason."—(Republican, p. 15.)

JACHIN AND BOAZ'S ENTERED APPRENTICE'S PENALTY.

"To have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the root, and that it be buried in the sands of the sea, at low water mark, a cable's length from the shore, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours. So help me"———

Three Distinct Knocks is in the same words with one slight variation, which I name, not for its worth, but for the sake of indisputable precision. (and that it be, reads "and that it be buried in the sands" &c.)

Prichard's Masonry Dissected runs thus:—"to have my throat cut, my tongue taken from the roof of my mouth, my heart plucked from under my left breast, they to be buried in the sands of the sea, the length of a cable rope from shore, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours; my body to be burned to ashes, my ashes to be scattered upon the face of the earth, so that there shall be no more remembrance of me among Masons. So help me———."

Morgan's, "to have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea, at low water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty four hours. So help me——.'

The penalty of a fellow-craft's obligations we omit from brevity's sake.

CARLISLE'S PENALTY OF A MASTER MASON'S OATH.

"To have my body severed in two, my bowels torn thereout and burnt to ashes in the center, and those ashes scattered to the four cardinal points of heaven, so that no trace or remembrance of me shall be left among men, more particularly among Master Masons. So help me God, and keep me steadfast in this grand and solemn obligation, being that of a Master Mason."—(p. 110.)

JACHIN AND BOAZ'S PENALTY OF A MASTER MASON'S OBLIGATIONS.

"To have my body severed in two, the one part carried to the South, the other to the North, my bowels burnt to ashes, and the ashes to be scattered to the four winds of the heavens, that no farther remembrance of such a vile wretch may exist among men, (and in particular Masons.) So help me——."

Three Distinct Knocks is precisely in the same words.

Morgan's, "To have my body severed in two in the midst, and divided to the North and South, my bowels burnt to ashes in the center, and the ashes scattered before the four winds of heaven, that there might not the least track, or trace of remembrance remain among men or Masons, of so vile and perjured a wretch as I should be, were I ever to prove wilfully guilty of violating any part of this my solemn oath or obligation of a Master Mason. So help me———."

Let no man doubt with this mass of evidence before him, that the oaths of Freemasonry are substantially revealed. And taking them in their best operation, they are like an Indian's knife, equally convenient to cut his bread, or to slay a deer; equally convenient to bring fire from the flint, or the blood of life from his enemy. They ared angerous oaths in the keeping man; of any they are peculiarly fearful in the keeping of the ignorant, the vicious, and the designing: and now they are in this country intrusted to 150,000 men, they must be in many bad hands; they are a just object of jealousy and dread.

The penalties of these oaths contain the true reason, why Freemasonry has been kept amystery, and why men who shrink from its polluting spirit, are yet content to be silent under its obligations. They also, by their manifest wickedness, justify me in pointing out to the watch and to the execration of my countrymen, a system, which makes itself familiar with assassination, impiously in God's name, which binds its members by secret oaths, that befit only a band of highwaymen; and which profanely requires men to forswear their lives to its honor.

WE MEAN to put valuable and important information on the sixteenth page. Do not fail to read it.

OUR STATE MEETING IN CHICAGO.

This has been one of the best meetings yet. For its getting up we are indebted to the sound judgment, good taste, and unwearied toil of Mrs. E. A. Cook, Assistant Secretary of the National Association, aided by other ladies and gentlemen of Chicago whose benevolence, like sunlight, cheers and warms us. Some days before the meeting the following indorsement of the discussion was widely circulated:

The undersigned (and many others) having learned with pleasure of the meeting of the Illinois State Association opposed to secret societies, for the discussion of the relation sustained by Christianity to Freemasonry, will attend its sessions if consistent with our various engagements, and will extend the notice of the convention: Rev. J. E. Roy, Prof. Geo. N. Boardman, Prof. F. W. Fisk, Prof. Samuel C. Bartlett, Prof. Theodore W. Hopkins, Prof. James T. Hyde, Rev. E. J. Goodspeed, Rev. L. T. Chamberlain, Rev. G. W. Northrup, Rev. Edward C. Mitchell, Rev. J. W. Bain, Rev. E. P. Goodwin, Rev. H. W. Thomas, Rev. W. W. Everts.

The attendance was fully equal to our expectations. The President of the Association, Moses Pettengill, Esq., delivered a neat and appropriate opening speech. The papers read by Mr. Hinman, agent for Illinois, were sound, and elicited the approbation of the press, and Mr. Stoddard was unwearied in his attention to the business details of the meeting. Prof. Charles A. Blanchard, of course, drew the largest crowd, and, though worn with a hard journey and hard speaking, fully sustained his reputation as a popular orator. Bishop Dickson, of the United Brethren church, Dr. F. Bascom, well known and widely respected, and Rev. W. E. Holyoke, late pastor of one of the Chicago Congregational churches, were with us, for the first time, and took an interested part in the exercises.

The remarks of Hon. J. B. Walker (author of several popular books) carried great force with them, and he was elected President of the Association for the coming year. Upwards of a hundred delegates were in attendance, and Mr. Carpenter's countenance was full of joy at these visible fruits of his sacrifices and patient and wise labors. The speech of Rev. N. D. Fanning, of Marengo, on Thursday evening, was a master-piece of oratory and argument. Although Mr. Fanning was one of the two ministers at whose suggestion the first convention was called at Aurora, seven years since, this was his first appearance among us; and he had the coveted advantage of surprising as well as delighting us. His style was elegant and scholarly, his ideas perfectly transparent, his logic irresistible, and his invective terrible from its fairness and truth. With such powers slumbering in him, we marvel that we have not heard from him before.

So much is due to the instruments; what to the Almighty Giver? The richest part of the feast was the conversation and prayers of the godly men and women, whose faces shine brighter as they draw near home. They are the prophets of the age and nation; and, coming together in this holy cause, they see in the near future the lights and shades of an American landscape freed from the curses and stain of demon-worships. And though, like Moses in Pisgah, they may only see the land they may not enter, it will be because God gives them the shorter road to that "better country," of which our saved and purified country, like Canaan of old, will be but the outward and material type.

God was surely entreated of us in our day of fasting and prayer. Let us pray for the meeting in Peoria on the second Wednesday of November next

THE UNITED BRETHREN; THEIR PAPERS.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton, Ohio, the mother paper of the United Brethren denomination, has, perhaps, the most enviable record of any print in the United States. During our long and bloody national agony with slavery, from first to last, it sustained the discipline of the church in excluding unrepentant slave-holders. From the first, too, it has withstood secrect societies, and especially their chief, Freemasonry. And it is noteworthy that the lodge made no formal attack on its rule excluding Freemasons, till lately, when the spirit of God had "lifted up a standard," and a movement was inaugurated in the country at large against the lodge. Then its anti-secrecy rule was attacked, because it was making the church unpopular, at the very time when the rule was making their church popular with multitudes of good people who were rising up against the lodge!

While the brethren held a quiet, unaggressive testimony against the orders, the enemy lay low and relied on the silent, crawling process, to change, and finally to control the church and dictate to its pulpit. But when it was proclaimed that the lodge was idolatry, "a false religion, concealed under the tools and terms of a handicraft;" and when an onward movement was sounded, the order then took the field for an open, stand-up fight. It failed at Lebanon, Pa., in General Conference, being beaten by a vote of 71 to 26, the minority declaring themselves as much opposed to secret societies as the majority.

A year or two since the United Brethren Tribune was started in Harrisburg, Pa., as the organ of that minority. It said but little at first about the secret society issue. But Freemasons and secret society men befriend it. It pretended to ask only a modification of the rule; but now throws off the mask of moderation, and discourses in this style:

"The minister who is willing to obey such a law, and to enforce it, is no man at all. His work proves him to be the child of the devil instead of a minister of Jesus. The Bible demands no such hellish work as the expulsion of his children from the church. Bishops and editors may debate as much as they please with regard to the way in which the law is to operate practically; but for ourselves, we take the position that the law is a fraud and an outrage, without the least authority from God's Word."

This is the language of the Tribune editor, a minister of the United Brethren church, who, when licensed to preach, promised to obey the discipline of the church, the anti-secrecy rule included! And this is the "modification" of the rule which this shameless lodge-hireling demands! He puts forth nothing in its place, but simply denounces the law as an "outrage," and such men as Bishops Edwards, Weaver, Dickson and Glossbrenner as "children of the devil."

When Satan had stolen into Eden and was found by Ithuriel—

> "Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve
> Assaying by his devilish art to reach
> The organs of her fancy;"

his position resembled this Tribune in its origin, veiling its real sentiments, and gaining by low hypocrisy the ear of the church. But, touched by the Ithuriel spear of discussion, the editor blazes up into a devil, his true nature, and follows that primal rule of the Jesuits, to give to others the name which belongs to himself. And this rule, forsooth, excluding Masons, he has discovered to be without the least authority from God's Word." Let us see.

God's Word forbids swearing. The lodge swears every Master Mason nearly thirty, and each Royal Arch Mason above sixty times, without authority or warrant from church or state, and so by profane swearing.

Again, this editor pretends to find authority in God's Word for excluding deists, rejecters of Christ; and the lodge rejects Christ to take in his enemies, the Jews. Again, Christless worships is idolatry, and God's Word commands to "flee idolatry." The lodge-worships are Christless. Again, God's Word "forbids swindling, cheating, defrauding; and every person initiated is a swindled person. His money is taken on the false pretense of giving him secrets which are not secrets.

It is a matter of joy that the new United Brethren paper at Council Bluffs, the Christian Expositor, which has just reached its sixth number, takes open ground for the Saviour whose example forbids all concealed religions; and for the church which follows that Saviour. May God give it great success against "The unfruitful works of darkness."

READ THE sixteenth page. It contains a special message to all friends of this cause.

THE AMERICAN HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—This Society was the first of the great national organizations whose Executive Committee excluded slave-holding churches from aid, thus making slave-holding anti-Christian. Rev. Dr. Badger, long its able secretary, was a decided and consistent Anti-mason, and said to me awhile before his death that he should like a tract against secret societies to send to every missionary in their employ. Dr. Roy, the Superintendent for Illinois, is openly hostile to the dark orders. We hope he will carry out Dr. Badger's wish concerning the tract. The facts and figures furnished by Mr. Roy of the Society's work in Illinois, published last week, are of national importance in themselves, and are of special interest from his relation to the anti-secret reform.

A SENSIBLE EDITOR.—We clip the following from the Southbridge Journal, Mass. We hope by this time he "disbelieves" in secret societies:

"We have our opinions and mean to independently express them when we see fit, but to any one who differs from us we are always willing to give the same right to our columns that we ourselves have, in which they can say what they please as long as they are courteous and as concise as possible. This is our ground in the discussion on Masonry going on in our columns. We do not disbelieve in secret societies, but as long as there are those who do, and we control a newspaper, they can have their 'say.'"

NOTES.

—Some of our readers, who heard the addresses before the Illinois State Association last week, may be disappointed with their appearance in print. Speeches delivered without notes always fall short of their original effect when reproduced in condensed form. The synopsis of the addresses of the first evening, given elsewhere, will not, however, be found lacking in pith and merit. Next week we shall publish others.

—The present number of the Cynosure will reach the homes of many readers on Thanksgiving day. In anticipation, the "Home Circle" and "Children's Corner" are filled with choice reading for the evening fireside. They will be found helps to thankful hearts. There is necessity of continual warning lest this day, from its being made an anniversary, a set day, will degenerate into frivolity and sinful formality. A continual remembrance and instruction in the religious principle underlying the day should be the duty of every household.

—The late day of fasting and prayer was quite generally observed by Christians opposed to the lodge, and its effect upon the reform we believe will be great and increasing. While praying for its destruction, we must also remember gratitude for the success attending the reform during the year past. Public meetings are more frequent, churches are taking up the discussion anew, the tone of the press is greatly modified, seceders are greatly increasing, and on all sides are proofs that God's truth is conquering and to conquer.

—We recommend to the careful examination of every reader the article on "Holidays" on the second page from the pen of J. P. Lytle, a United Presbyterian pastor of Sago, Ohio. It presents carefully and forcibly the evil tendencies of the semi-religious anniversaries observed in this country.

—The grangers of Missouri have fallen into their own net. To assist in a general deliverance from the "middlemen" they appointed one of their own number to be purse-holder middleman. He proves to be no better than the rest of the fraternity for it seems he has appropriated the entire funds of the State Grange, some $20,000. Put this down alongside like experiments in California and Iowa.

In connection with the correspondence last week on Yates City Lodge it will be of interest to know that the eminent and worthy Masons, G. N. Pierce and Ben. Kersey, were each presented with a Past Master's jewel and apron on the occasion of their leaving the lodge. Dr. J. D. C. Hoit, read gushing poem on the occasion full of "poetical license" in regard to the true character of these parties.

—The Religious Telescope in an excellent remark on the church rule of the United Brethren against the lodge says: "Our provision to grant six months to church-members having entered secret societies is a provision of mercy, and should be ample to settle the question of their futher membership. It must be remembered that our rule on secrecy was not made to keep the members of secret societies out of our church, but to keep our members out of those societies. If we do not deal fairly with recreant members and erase their names at the end of the six months, as they certainly expect, other members will be encouraged to go to the lodges in defiance of the law, or rather in consequence of its non-enforcement. It is better to deal promptly with one defiant member than to afford an excuse to others to go counter to our law."

—Bro. Samuel Hale sends additional facts regarding Oren Cravath, lately deceased. He was born June 12th, 1806. He united with the church in Homer, N. Y., while Father Keep was its pastor. He had been an invalid for several years before his death. Ten days after his death, a son, Owen Birney Cravath, died at St. Charles, Minn., of pneumonia. He was in the prime of life and left a wife and two children.

The Petitions.

A friend writes: "Send me four or five more petitions for legal voters, and explain why you have two petitions."

We publish the answer for the benefit of any others who may not understand why.

Our reasons for having one petition for legal voters and another those who are not, are as follows: 1st. All citizens, whether voters or not, have the right of petition in cases where they are interested, and as witnessed in petitions signed exclusively by women have been received with powerful effect and acted upon by State Legislatures. 2d. We deem it wise to have the two petitions because a petition by legal voters carries most weight, and to have all sign the same petition would give the enemies of the reform opportunity for charging that it is the petition of women and children only. 3d. It is not possible that the petition of half a million legal voters could be weakened by the additional petition of the same number of citizens who are not entitled to the ballot-box. 4th. Since women suffer more than others from the cause of secret societies and can do something for their overthrow, it seems unjust to the cause and to them to deny them the opportunity of doing so. Have we made it plain? If not please write us the points you wish explained.

A generous rivalry is springing up in the circulation of these petitions. Friend Chalfant, of York, Pa, says:

"I have forty-nine names on my two petitions now. If any one can beat this, let me hear who it is, through the Cynosure. I will have many more by Feb. 1st, if nothing happens to prevent."

Clergymen and Freemasonry.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

The clergyman whose views were quoted last week impressed me with the feeling that his convictions were right and that he wanted women to change public sentiment so that it would be safe for him to express them. The next gentleman surprised me by saying "I know of no reasons why any man should not join the Masons. They are talking of making the Prince of Wales, Grand Master of Masons and I know of no reason why he should not accept the position." He was a religious teacher and was responsible for though not the author of sentiments like this: "These ceremonies (at the laying of the corner-stone in Chicago) and symbols prove that Masonry is a system of religion. . .

It very clearly teaches the attainment of immortal life through the practice of lofty virtues and obedience to a system of pure morals. . . . . .

It is undeniable, and, so far as we know, not denied, that Masonry holds out to its membership the promise of a blessed immortality as the reward of obedience to its maxims and the practice of its virtues. This excludes salvation through the atonement of Jesus Christ.

The Masons are entitled to as respectful treatment as any other religious system, and must expect and respect sharp criticism and earnest opposition from evangelical Christianity. It is true that some members of that order honestly disavow any claims for their organization as a religious sect, or any rivalry with religious denominations. We accept their disavowals as sincere and yet dispute the truthfulness of their opinion on this point. The facts are against any such view; and it is due to all parties concerned both in the Masonic bodies and the Christian churches, that their natural and necessary relations to each other should be fully understood."

Quoting from the above, we asked do you not endorse these sentiments?

"I do not wish to say that I do not endorse them, at the same time I do not regard the system as antagonistic to Christianity. I do not approve of making an issue on this question as the United Presbyterian church does. No atheist can be a Freemason and so far the system is good.

Does not Masonry interfere with the administration of justice? "I presume it does some times. The inefficiency of our officers during the first year or two of the war, I think, was largely owing to Masonry. Still there are many instances recorded in which it has done good. I never belonged to a secret society, but I do nor see any reason that should detet me from doing so. I confess that I know very little about Masonry; I must post myself."

The next gentleman was one who in the days of slavery was opposed to that institution and yet would not take grounds with the abolitionists for prudential reasons. He said, turning his mild bright eye upon us, "I do not approve of the discussion of Masonry. It rouses so much hard feeling. I have been opposed to secret societies from youth. One social organization, the church, is enough for me. I especially disapprove of Masonry on account of its extrajudicial oaths. Oaths are legitimate only in properly constituted civil and ecclesiastical courts. I took occasion recently, much to the annoyance of some of my friends to preach very pointedly against their use. I introduced the subject during a series of discourses on the ten commandments; oaths coming appropriately under the third. I did not say Freemasonry, but spoke very plainly against extra-judicial oaths. Thus I accomplished the good without stirring up the antagonism which would otherwise have been aroused."

Alas! had Nathan the prophet used this man's wisdom, King David would probably never have been convicted of his sin, which unrepented of would have shut the gates of heaven against him.

The next gentleman said: "I consider all gentlemen's clubs injurious and use my influence against them. Freemasonry never seemed to me to be a good institution, although I have regarded it as somewhat beneficial to travelers. Other secret societies I have considered harmless, and while there are so many positive evils to contend against I do not wish to oppose doubtful ones."

The next clergyman was a high Mason but had not attended the lodge for years. "No man," said he "can pursue an active, laborious and useful calling and at the same time maintain his standing in the lodge. However, Anti-masons make altogether too much of Masonry. It is pre-eminently silly and trifling in its nature; but is not worth the grave considerations which some reformers give it."

The next gentleman was a clear-headed sincere Scotchman. He knew nothing about the National or local associations organized for opposing Masonry. "I have always" said he "regarded Masonry as an insurance company, not as sustaining any moral relation to society."

Masonic writers regard Masonry as a system of religion. Masons even go so far as to baptize infants, said we.

"Indeed, I did not know that fact. I shall study this subject, however, and if I find the system anti-Christian I shall oppose it certainly; and I shall commence an investigation of the subject immediately."

The next gentleman, the President of a flourishing college, said: "I am fully aware of the evils of secret societies. Their secrecy is at variance with the true social and civil interests of this nation. Their oaths are profane. Their customs barbarous and demoralizing. I have only one difficulty concerning them. I know not what to do with the upright, with the good men who belong to them.

The effects of secret societies in colleges I regard as damaging and hope that in time they may be rooted out.

I was acquainted with Dr. Colver and sympathized with him in his opposition to Masonry. The subject was brought up at the late Evangelical Alliance in New York, but as it could not be discussed without treading on many sensitive toes it was ruled out. I confess I do not know how to grapple successfully with this evil."

Spiritual, honest, self-denying people make similar pastors. These gentlemen are mere reflections of the sentiment of different classes of people. Clergymen, in an important sense, do not lead the people. The people direct the clergymen. To all people, Christ says, "Be ye therefore perfect."

The customary time for making presents is approaching. Could you spend two dollars in any better way than to make your pastor, your father, your mother, or some other friend or relation a present of the Cynosure for a year?

Soldiers.

In time of peace soldiers man forts and appear on parade, but in time of war the play is transformed into the life and death contests. Let us hope that all the future contests in our beloved country shall be only those at the polls or by the printer's types. The flag under which the Cynosure is enlisted tells its own story. We say that every good thing should be given to the whole race, and in that lies the charm of Him who spake as never did man. We are enlisted in the war against limitation of good, against sworn secrecy under the pretense of securing selfish benefits and against the false worships of men. There are many things necessary in such a contest. We need large supplies of patience and such virtues. We need sympathy and encouragement from those who approve our principles. We are willing to be the soldiers in the field, or to hold the besieged fort, but for such services we need supplies. Will our lecturers be handsomely supported and their numbers increased? Will subscribers be added to our list? and will these subscribers get others? All this ought to be done. And our convention, during the winter, will not neglect to adopt the best means to promote the great end of these gathering together. Let every one who is opposed to Freemasonry come, send, or contribute in aid of his views. Now is the time. Freemasonry is a bondage amid freemen, a limitation of individual right to proclaim one's convictions of truth or duty. It has sanctioned forms of worship approved by pagan Momammedan or professed Christian, containing sentiments necessarily at variance with Christianity. It has a false religion, a false worship, and a false standard for its votaries. Christ is not their captain, is not supreme. His will is not as such, their law. Therefore Christians should not be Freemasons. Who is on the Lord's side? "Come ye out," etc. H.

Thanksgiving.

BY PHŒBE CARY.

O men! grown sick with toil and care,
Leave for awhile the crowded mart;
O women! sinking with despair,
Weary of limb and faint of heart,
Forget your years to-day, and come
As children back to childhood's home!

Follow again the winding rills,
Go to the places where you went,
When climbing up the summer hills,
In their green laps you sat content;
And softly leaned your head to rest
On Nature's calm and peaceful breast.

Walk through the sere and fading wood,
So lightly trodden by your feet,
When all you knew of life was good,
And all you dreamed of life was sweet;
And let fond memory lead you back
O'er youthful love's enchanted track.

Taste the ripe fruit of orchard boughs,
Drink from the mossy well once more,
Breathe fragrance from the crowded mows,
With fresh, sweet clover running o'er;
And count the treasures at your feet
Of silver rye and golden wheat.

Go sit beside the hearth again,
Whose circle once was glad and gay;
And if from out the precious chain
Some shining links have dropped away,
Then guard with tenderer heart and hand
The remnant of our household band.

Draw near the board with plenty spread,
And if in the accustomed place
You see your father's reverend head,
Or mother's patient, loving face,
What'er your life may have of ill,
Thank God that these are left you still!

And tho' where home hath been you stand
To-day in alien loneliness;
Though you may clasp no brother's hand,
And claim no sister's tender kiss;
Though with no friend nor lover nigh,
The past is all your company—

Thank God for friends your life has known
For every dear departed day;
The blessed past is safe alone—
God gives, but does not take away;
He only safely keeps above
For us the treasures that we love.

Paul Gerhardt.

Many years ago, when Paul Gerhardt, a Lutheran minister, was in Brandenburgh, in Germany, he loved to preach from his heart what he saw and believed in the Word of God; but the great Elector of Brandenburgh did not like his preaching, and sent to say to him, "Paul Gerhardt, if you cannot preach differently from that, you must leave this country." Paul Gerherdt sent back a message, that it would be very hard to leave his country and his livelihood, but he could only preach what he found in God's Word, and as long as he lived he would preach that. So he had to go into banishment with his wife and little children. At the end of their first day's journey they came into a wood, and rested at night at an inn they found there. The little children were crying and clinging to their mother; and she too, who had kept up all day, began now to weep. This made Paul Gerhardt have a very heavy heart; so he went alone in the dark wood to pray. While he was in the wood this text came to his mind and comforted him: "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass."

"Yes," he said, "though I am banished from house and home, and don't know where to take my wife and children for shelter, yet God, my God sees me in this dark wood. Now is the time to trust in him. He will show me the way through; he will bring it to pass." He was so happy that he remembered that text, and so thankful to God, that he tried to make the text into a hymn as he passed up and down beneath the trees. When he went into the house he told his wife about the text, and began to repeat to her the hymn. She soon dried up her tears. The children had already gone to sleep, and she became as hopeful and trustful as Paul Gerhardt himself. They knelt down together and prayed, and determined to put their whole trust in God.

They had scarcely retired to rest when they heard a great noise at the door. It seemed as though some important personage was knocking there. When the landlord opened the door, a man on horseback said aloud:

'I am a messenger; I come from Duke Christian of Merseburg, and I am in search of Paul Gerhardt. Do you know whether he has passed this way?"

"Paul Gerhardt?" said the landlord, "yes, he is in this house; but he has just gone to bed. I cannot now disturb him." "But you must," said the messenger. "I have a letter for him from the Duke; let me see him immediately." So the landlord went up stairs and told Paul, who came down to see what it could be all about. The messenger handed to him a large sealed letter, and, to Paul's great joy, he read in it that the good Duke Christian had heard of the probable banishment of himself and family, and said: "Come into my country, Paul Gerhardt, and you shall have a church and people, and house and home and livelihood, and liberty to preach the Gospel to your heart's content." Paul went up and told his wife, and they praised God for his love, and the next morning they started off with light hearts and quick steps to their new home, rejoicing in God to whose care they had committed themselves, and who had proved a present help in time of need, a refuge in the hour of their distress.

Content with Little.

The other day we sat by a beautiful lake hidden away in the surrounding hills conversing with a gentleman familiar with foreign lands, and especially with the picturesque scenery of England and Scotland. "This is as beautiful as Windermere," he said, "and yet few tourists visit the borders of this lake. The English make the most of their scenery. That cataract of Lodore, near Keswick, for instance, concerning which Southey wrote, is no larger than one of our mill streams, and in dry weather there is no cataract at all. One cannot have a Niagara every day, and I think the English are wise in appreciating to the utmost the romantic scenery of their little island." Is there not in this a lesson for us all? Few of us but have a bit of woods, a green field, a patch of blue sky, a running stream of water or a still lake that we may not magnify and dwell upon until communion with these various forms of nature gives calmness and repose and peace to our lives. Oleanders and cape jessamines are gorgeous and beautiful and fragrant, but so are wild roses and apple blossoms and blue violets. One sweet blooming rose on the window seat may fill the house and the heart with suggestions of Eden, if that heart is in tune; all tropical luxuriance is thrown away on him who has no eye to see, no heart to feel its beauty. We grasp after so much—wealth, learning, fame, travel—thinking by and by, when this point is reached, that elevation is attained, the life-long aspiration is realized, we shall be happy; but genuine happiness comes soonest to those who sift from the passing days every element of enjoyment and are chronically and resolutely thankful for what we have. "Let a man count himself worthy of hanging," says Carlyle, "and everything except the rope will be received with gratitude." We count ourselves as entitled to so much prosperity or good fortune that too often we overlook the diamonds and sapphires that sparkle in the dust at our feet. Every fair morning the sun rises in glory and sets at eventide in splendor. Do we enjoy it? The apples are swelling and reddening in the orchard, the forest is crowned with summer foliage, the clouds assume innumerable fantastic shapes, and all Nature rejoices in the vivifying beams of the sun or reposes at night beneath the glowing stars—how many of us open our hearts to all these influences and let them work upon us their legitimate results? It was this that made Wordsworth a classic.

One sorrow dwelt upon may darken all our lives; even so a single joy may be made to expand and grow and increase till it shall brighten all the soul and throw its radiance out on an ever-enlarging circumference. This way of taking life will not quench our aspirations or retard our pursuit of knowledge or make the shining temple of our hopes in the far-distant horizon less alluring; it will rather smooth our pathway, make us unconscious of a thousand ills that would otherwise torment us, and keep us from wasting in worry and dissatisfaction the strength we need to conquer fate.

If the time squandered in vain regret and sorrow over the past, in unreasoning apprehensions concerning the future and in the indulgence of dissatisfaction with the present—if all the time thus worse than wasted were diligently employed in gathering, like the bee, honey from every opening flower around us, thistles and brambles and even night-shade and cypress would add to our stores no less than roses and carnations.

We often fancy that brows radiant with crowns of earthly glory belong to those who have naught to do but enjoy. How often when these crowns are closely scanned are they found to be composed of thorns. Indeed, the crowns of glory in this world are crowns of thorns. The struggle against poverty, obscurity, adversity, accepted and rejoiced in, has made many a man a hero. Content with the little for the time, making the most of present opportunity, extracting from every opposing circumstance the nutriment of virtue and the wine of joy, rejoicing even in tribulation, he both wins and conquers peace. Contentment rarely comes of itself. A few happy temperaments enjoy life no matter from what quarter the wind blows; but the majority of those who are uniformly cheerful in disposition and happy in their surroundings exercise persistently the virtues of patience and hope, philosophize away the ills of life or draw from religion the peace that passeth understanding. Not even godliness is gain without contentment, counting only this world. A merry heart doeth good like medicine. There is nothing better for a man than that he should eat and drink, and that he shou'd make his soul enjoy good in his labor. This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God.—N. Y. Tribune.

By the Wayside.

Two aged men entered a street car a few days ago, in a neighboring city. One of them, who was paralyzed, said, in reply to a question of the other as to his welfare: "I have a very large interest in the next world." When asked, "How are you off for this world?" he replied pleasantly that he had enough to meet his wants while he lived, and then again he added, "But I have a very large interest in the next world." The conversation attracted the attention of other passengers, and one of them who narrated it, said that those words kept ringing in his ears all the rest of the day. He could not get rid of the deep impression made by the singular earnestness and happiness of the old disciple.

Surely this is the beauty of old age, its joy and blessedness, the calm assurance of a portion beyond this life in "the inheritance of the saints in light."

Little, too, did the veteran think of the power of his reiterated sentence upon the hearts of fellow-travelers, who did not even know his name. Yet these wayside utterances of warm-hearted Christians are often the most eloquent lay-preaching, both to unconverted people and to believers who happen to overhear them. Our unconscious influences are frequently the best or the worst that we exert.

But the best of all is when the pilgrim life draws near its close, and when the staff and sandals are so soon to be laid aside, to feel that our best and largest "interests are in the next world." That treasure grows at more than compound interest. Its value increases as the vision of it widens like the firmament. These riches cannot "take to themselves wings and fly away." It is a life interest for eternity, and faith only asserts its own divine prerogative, "while we look not at the things which are seen, for the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal."

The Four Precious Things of the Apostle Peter.

1. "Precious blood," (1 Peter 1. 19) —Precious, because he who shed it is the mighty God and the sinless man, because without it, sin could never be forgiven, lost sinners never saved, and God never reconciled, precious, because its voice, both within the veil and in believing hearts, ever whispers peace. Precious, because every soul sprinkled with it shall be eternally safe from the glittering sword of God's vengeance. Of its preciousness the white-robed multitude will ever sing before the throne of God.

2. "Precious Jesus," (1 Peter 2: 7) —Precious, because he is the brightness of his Father's glory; because he is "bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh;" because that all the majesty of Divinity, all the tenderness of perfect humanity, meet him; because in his person and in his work there is exact suitableness to meet the need of ruined souls and trusting saints. He is the "one pearl of great price"—the "chiefest among ten thousand," the "altogether lovely One." His holiness, his power, his love, his grace, are precious. His living, his dying, his interceding, his second coming, are precious. So exceeding precious is he to believing hearts, that to all eternity they will gaze upon it, and tell it out, and yet leave its depths unfathomed.

3. "Precious faith," (2 Peter 1. 1) —Precious because it is the hand that clings to a precious Christ—the eye that gazes upon him through the mists and vapors that darken this veil of tears. Precious, because it draws the soul into communion with its risen Head. Precious, because it rests on the sure foundation of the truth of a covenant-keeping God. Precious, because it looks "not at the things which are seen," often so troublesome and so dark, but "the things which are not seen," "the fulness of joy," which is at "God's right hand forever more."

4. "Precious promises," (2 Peter 1. 4). Precious, because they are very many; and their clusters are very sweet. Pardon for the guilty, strength for the weak, comfort for the mourner—yea, every good and perfect gift that weary, hungry, thirsty souls can need, is wrapped up in these "precious promises." They shine forth through the Word, as brilliant stars shine out at midnight. They rejoice the heart as fair flowers charm the weary wanderer over a desert way. Precious, because they are "yea and amen in Christ Jesus." The believer's heritage of promises, in all its rich, unfailing abundance, can never be forfeited.

The world's gems tarnish; earth's fairest flowers droop and die; but these precious things of the apostle, possessed by the soul, make it rich and joyful forever.—Selected.

Business and Prayer.

If a professed disciple would not have his secular business become as a millstone about his neck to drown him in perdition, he must be a man of prayer; he must daily secure spiritual communion with God. If he suffer his business to consume his time and spirit, so as to deprive him of opportunities for prayer, reading the Bible, and real communion with God, he must decay in piety, and his service of mammon eats up his service of God. No one who believes that God answers prayer will think of omitting either secret or family devotion for want of time, even when business is unusually urgent. Which is worth more to your family, an additional period of your own personal labor—or the blessing of God on your efforts, won by spending that time in pleading with him in prayer? The plea of want of time is essentially atheistical; none should urge it but those who regard prayer as an empty mockery that never receives an answer from the Lord. Let the day begin with communion with God, let the disciple pass the whole day in the spirit of prayer, and all its scenes will be inscribed with "Holiness to the Lord."

And this must be real communion with God, and not a mere formal prayer. Many morning prayers are a sort of paying compliments to the Most High. A Frenchman, it is said, visited his chapel in Paris, to pay his devotions, but he found no priest in attendance, and the building undergoing repairs. He walked up to the altar, laid his card on it with a low bow, and withdrew, well satisfied with the homage he had paid the Lord. Are not too many of the morning prayers of the closet and the family little more than laying a card upon the altar, a complimentary presentation of respects? But nothing less than such communion with God as touches the heart and draws forth the earnest desires, can be any safegard to us in the busy scenes of the day. Hence it were well if every Christian would make and keep the resolution by which some have been profited, to have so many seasons of prayer, and continue them so long as to keep the heart in a tender and lively and spiritual frame, so as never to leave the closet without some melting of the heart, some manifestation of God's love.

This point may be best enforced by the words of a devoted disciple of Christ. He said, with great earnestness and simplicity: "I have made a discovery this summer which I regard as of great value. I used to defer my morning devotions till after the first work of the morning. But this summer, immediately on rising, before doing aught else, I pray; and I pray till I feel God's presence. Then I read the Scripture till breakfast, when I find my heart warm and ready to engage with interest in family prayer. At noon the hay wants turning; but I push on to spend a season in prayer; and the heart having become warm in the morning, it needs but little to restore its fervor, and I am soon at work again, with a lively sense of God's presence. When all is done, I look back on a day spent with God, and give thanks for all his mercies, commending myself to him. And now [he added with the greatest animation] I can commend the plan to all Christians. It has carried me all through haying and harvesting, and in the busiest of it all I have had as much enlargement of heart and spiritual joy as ever in my life."—Selected.

A loving heart and a pleasant countenance are commodities which a man should never fail to take home with him. They will best season his food and soften his pillow. It were a great thing for a man that his wife and children could truly say of him, "He never brought a frown or unhappiness across his threshold."

Dr. Johnson used to say that a habit of looking at the best side of every event is better than a thousand pounds a year. Bishop Hall quaintly remarks, "For every bad there might be a worse; and when a man breaks his leg, let him be thankful that it was not his neck." When Fenelon's library was on fire, "God be praised," he exclaimed, "that it is not the dwelling of some poor man!" This is the true spirit of submission, one of the most beautiful traits that can possess the human heart. Resolve to see this world on its sunny side, and you have almost half won the battle of life at the outset.

A Sermon for Little Folks.

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."—John xiii. 17.

I. "These things;" that is, your duties. You have duties, wherever you are:

1. At home, obedience and respect to parents, and kindness to brothers, sisters, and servants.

2. At school, respect to teacher, faithfulness in study, and fairness in play.

3. At church, be quiet, listen, worship, and give your hearts to the Saviour.

4. On the street, good manners, modesty, kindness, minding your own business.

II. How should you do your duty?

1. Not for pay. That is a low motive. Some always ask, "What will you give me?"

2. But from love. So the Saviour did when a boy at Nazareth. So the angels do God's will—which is only another name for duty. This will make you do it cheerfully.

3. Better every day. By trying to do your duties, you will become more skillful. So you improve in reading, writing, and music. Peter says, "Grow in grace."

III. Doing duty makes you happy. Sin did not make Eve happy, nor Cain, nor Judas. Disobedience at home does not make you happy; idleness, unkindness, bad manners, no kind of sin can make you happy.

But happiness comes from doing your duty. That is God's reward. This is the promise in the text. Think of this every day for just one week, and see how true it is.

Try, then, to know your duty. Be faithful in duty, in doing it for love to God and man; then you will be happy in heaven.—The Myrtle.

First Thanksgiving.

"Well, Sammy, do you know what day to-morrow is?"

"Yes, sir; it's Thanksgiving Day, and we are going to grandpa's to have a real good time, and eat such a good dinner!"

Mr. Mills could not help smiling at the boy's earnest announcement of the "good dinner;" but he said, "Do you know, Sammy, why we have a Thanksgiving dinner?"

"No, sir, unless it is because the Governor appoints one and tells us to keep it.

"Why do you think the Governor wishes us to keep it?" asked his father.

"I heard you read it, and Mr. Andrews in church on Sunday."

"Yes, he did; I am glad you noticed it, my son; but if you can't tell me about the first Thanksgiving, perhaps Abby can."

"It was in the time of the early settlers of this country, wasn't it, father? and didn't a ship come from somewhere with food for them that made them keep the Thanksgiving?" said Abby, looking up, quite interested, into her father's face.

"Yes, my daughter; you have part of it, and I will tell you the parts that are wanting in the story. In the year 1629, a large company of men, women and children came over from England, and arrived in this country in June, They settled in Boston, Charlestown, and in the neighborhood of Boston. The voyage from England was a tedious one, and many of the settlers were sickly. They could not raise crops and build houses, and prepare themselves for winter. So, when the cold, snow and ice came, it found them unprepared to withstand its inclemency. I sometimes wonder that they lived, any of them, for they were not used to any hardships, such as they were called to endure in living in a new country."

"I think the cold weather is real fun," said Sammy; "and I don't know but it is better than summer."

"You may think so, Sammy," said his father; "but if your home was in a log-house, without any lath or plaster, I think you would think our New England winters rather cold. Well, when winter came, many of them were frozen to death, many died from disease, and worst of all, their food began to give out."

"It must be hard to be hungry," said Sammy. "Didn't they have plenty of bread and milk?"

"No; they had corn, which they made into meal, and even that gave out, so that they had to eat acorns and ground nuts; and as they were so near starving, they appointed the 6th day of February, 1630, as a day of fasting and prayer."

"But, papa," interrupted Sammy, "that is not what we do on Thanksgiving?"

"No, my son. I will tell you how it turned to a Thanksgiving day. On the 5th of February a ship was seen coming up the harbor of Boston, and she proved to be the ship Lion, which had been sent to England for provision, and so their sorrow was turned to gladness, their hunger was satisfied, and the day of fasting turned into Thanksgiving, and that was the first Thanksgiving held in this country.

Give me the boy who rouses when he is praised, who profits when he is encouraged, and who cries when he is defeated. Such a boy will be fired by ambition; he will be stung by reproach, and animated by preference; never shall I apprehend any bad consequences from idleness in such a boy.—Quintilian.

[CONTINUTD FROM 4TH PAGE.]

At the close of Mr. Coquillette's remarks, a Masonic Episcopal clergyman, McMurdy, of Hyde Park, a suburban town, received permission to ask a question, which was granted. He then proceeded to make further remarks, advising the Convention in pompous style to make war on such bodies as the National Congress and the Episcopal Conventions which have secret sessions, and refusing to give his name when asked by the chairman. He stated also that Grand Lodges were not secret bodies, which was denied by several and the denial proved by the city papers; whereupon he loftily proposed that the Convention place some of its members at his bidding to produce documents to prove his statement, and left the room with lordly indignation amid calls for his name. This was the only Masonic demonstration of the meeting.

In the afternoon, Dr. J. B. Walker, Dr. F. Bascom and Philo Carpenter were appointed a committee to prepare articles on this reform at their discretion for publication in the religious and secular papers. This was one of the suggestions of the State Agent in his address of the work of the Association. The resolutions were again reported, and after some general discussion were adopted as follows:

Resolved, That obligations to keep secret or obey unknown laws, imposed by oaths and promises, imply an abrogation of the rights of conscience and of God's authority over it.

Resolved, That, while secret orders, based on such obligations, are as numerous and flourishing as they are now in this nation, the correction of political abuse, or preservation of political equality or a pure administration of government is an absolute impossibility.

Resolved, That the impunity of great criminals, the reign of terror in the South, and the unprovoked, unpunished murders of the last ten years, are the natural outgrowth of secret associations.

Resolved, That the ritual of the principal secret orders of our time are disclosed with such clearness of evidence as to leave no room for rational doubt of the truth of the disclosures.

Resolved, That the important parts of these rituals are the oaths and obligations, and that these oaths and obligations are of no value but to enable a man to enslave his fellows, as voters, witnesses, jurymen, sheriffs, judges, governors, presidents, ministers of religion and brother secretists.

Resolved, That the claims of Masonry as set forth by their highest authorities, wherein it is declared that "whosoever is a good Mason is thereby prepared for heaven independent of the Gospel," the atonement of Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit's work, and that it is the only true reformitory institution in existence, stamps it as anti-Christian and blasphemous.

Resolved, That Masonry at the present day receives its most efficien support from its kindred associates, such as Odd-fellowship and grangerism; that, therefore, these institutions are to be viewed as highly objectionable by all true Christian philanthropists.

Resolved, That, the frivolities of the lodge ceremonies called by Washington "for the most part mere child's play," and its other objectionable features, deemed by him as dangerous to the Government, and the millions of money it extorts, and the tremendous power it exerts, admonish us to a more earnest opposition to this and all other like fraternities.

Resolved, that all friends of the Divine and open methods of truth in opposition to the guileful and secret methods of error, should speak, act, give, vote, pray and labor by all honorable and Gospel means in their power, to hasten the complete overthrow secretism, and above all things we move they do this in a spirit of meekness and love for all men, with no sinister purpose, but with a supreme desire to honor Christ and save men, temporally and eternally, and that all this be with single reliance on the pow and help of God.

An effort was then made to raise the amount estimated as necessary to carry on the work in the State, which occupied the last half hour of the afternoon. The amount required was not fully raised, but nearly so. An effort by the friends in the State will fill up the gap; $150 more are needed.

In the evening, after a half hour in prayer, Vice-president Freeman took the chair. The audience was much less than the previous evening on account of a pelting snow storm, but was fully as attentive.

Before the addresses were announced Bishop Dickson presented the following which was adopted:-

Resolved, (1) that it affords us much pleasure to see so many from the noble army of seceding Masons with us in our Convention.

(2). That having thus for conscience' and truth's sake renounced the follies the depotism and the immoral tendencies of lodge association they deserve our highest esteem, and shall have our warmest sympathies and prayers in the obloquy they may have to bear or injuries they may suffer for the stand they have taken. We bid them be firm, assured that their numbers shall multiplied as truth and righteousness prevail."

Prof. C. A. Blanchard introduced the following which was unanimously passed:

Resolved, that the heart felt thanks of this Associat are due and hereby tendered to the organist of this church, Prof. Merrill, and also to the people of Chicago for their hospitality on this occasion.

The audience then united in singing "Coronation," Prof. H. T. Merrill leading with the great organ.

Elder Parker Hurless and Rev. N. D. Fanning were the speakers of the evening. Their able arguments received the unwavering attention of the audience and frequent applause.

Brief remarks were made by Linus Chittenden and W. E. Coquillette, seceding Masons, at the close of the addresses. The statement of speakers on both evenings on the character and work of Freemasonry was corroborated.

The following resolution commendatory of the city press was presented by Pres. Blanchard and adopted:

"Resolved, That we have noticed with pleasure and gratitude a marked improvement in the tone of the public press toward the attempt to awaken the American people to the anti-Christian and anti-republican nature of secret societies."

The Convention then adjourned.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Disciples of Christ have gained a considerable foothold in Great Britain. In England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales they have 109 churches. Five evangelists were employed, who reported a prosperous increase.

—The Moravian missionary churches in Antigua, West Indies, have received during the past century 6,101 adult members and 3,921 boys and girls. They have now 464 communicants and 884 candidates and baptized children.

—A Baptist missionary in India proposes that men and women who go out as missionaries shall enlist for ten years only. He thinks by this plan the missionary service would be more effective, as many missions are ruined by sick men hanging on, and by the retention of men too old for hard service.

—It will be remembered that the Bishop of Lincoln recently denied the right of Wesleyan ministers to be recognized by the title of Reverend by the church of England. The Queen, the head of the church, has recently settled the question adversely to the Bishop's views by addressing the President of the Wesleyan Conference, Dr. Punshon, as Reverend, in a letter in reply to the address of the Conference.

—The London Missionary Society recently dedicated the South Memorial Church of Madagascar. It is erected near a precipice where, twenty-five years ago, eighteen native Christians were burned, and in other ways put to death. According to the latest statistics of this mission, it has now in Madagascar 31 English missionaries, 50 native pastors, 3,170 native teachers, 67,000 church members, and 280,000 native adherents. It has also 804 stations and 576 schools. Dr. R. Kestell Cornish and ten assistants have recently been sent by the church of England to the Island to found a diocese there. The Jesuits also have missionaries in Madagascar. The latter now claim 74 places of worship and 44 priests.

—In the Fiji Islands, where forty years ago the people were so debased as to drink blood from human skull, strangle widows and children, bury alive the helpless and the aged, etc., 10,000 people now sit under the Methodist ministry alone, 25,000 attend the class-meetings, and 53,000 children are in the Sabbath-schools. A gentleman relates the following incident: I was taking tea with the missionary and his wife in the lone island of Kandavu, in the midst of 10,000 of these Fijians. As we were at tea the bell rang. The missionary said, "That is the signal for family worship. Now listen; you will hear the drums beat;" and immediately they began to echo to each other around the shores of that southern sea "There are 10,000 people on this island," said he, "and I do not know of a single house in which there will not be family worship in the space of half an hour from this time."

—The action of the western conferences of the United Brethren in Christ on their test rule is an encouraging mark of steadfastness to the Scripture land-marks. The Wisconsin Conference resolved, "That this conference is in full sympathy with our rules on the Christian Sabbath and secret societies, and we believe that the faithful practice and enforcement of these rules on the part of the ministry and laity of the church would give us greater moral power and influence." The Southern Illinois Conference took similar action. In the Rock River Conference a case of discipline occurred under the rule. A member joined the grange, and after disciplinary steps had been taken and he yet was incorrigible, it was resolved that he should be considered expelled unless he withdrew from the order within a limited time. Among the resolutions adopted were these: "Resolved, 1. That we recognize in the National Christian Association a powerful agency for the advancement of the anti-secrecy reform, and assure its friends that, in the name and strength of our God, we will stand against those secret foes of Christ and vital Christianity until they are swept from our land.

4. That every preacher in charge of a field of labor be required to lift a collection at each appointment before January 1st, 1875, and forward the same to the delegate elect to defray his expenses, and should the amount raised exceed the expenses, the surplus shall go into the missionary treasury." T. F. Hallowell was elected delegate to the Pittsburgh Convention and R. Hurless, alternate.

News of the Week.

The City.

The lecture season opened last week with Senator Carl Schurz and Prof. Swing. The latter's performance is described by the Times as "Verbal Swash" which opinion is corrobated by an intelligent gentleman who heard it. ——The action of the Grand Jury against the gamblers has aroused the police and, for the first time since the People's party have ruled here, a den was "pulled" last week. ——A mass meeting in behalf of the Industrial and Educational Aid Society was held in the M E. church block last Friday, addressed by Dr. Thomas, Robert Collyer, Mrs. Swisshelm, Miss Hulett and others. Discordant opinions were expressed on the dignity of kitchen work.

Patton, that it was well known among a number of Congregational clergymen that Mr. Beecher was guilty, alleging that Mrs. Henry C. Home and Health Hints.

Dried Beef.

The most favorable season for drying beef is November or December; but if neglected then, it may yet be done in early spring, furnishing the nicest relish for breakfast or tea. We have also known persons of weak digestion to partake of it, to the great increase of their strength, when hardly able to take any other nourishment whatever. For this purpose select the round of a full-grown, well-fatted beef. Cut it into pieces of convenient size. Rub well into it on all sides a little pounded saltpeter and sugar mixed. Put it in a brine strong enough to bear an egg, in which, however, let it lie only three days. Furnish it with string, and hang up where you can smoke until it is dry enough to chip. It may be eaten raw, chipped very thin in small bits, or is still better boiled in a little butter. Veal and mutton are very nice done in the same way, the latter bearing a close resemblance to dried venison, and being quite as good. It is better to sew up tight in a cloth or bag before the fly makes its appearance.

Keeping Firkin Butter.

The diary product of butter, outside of the districts of country around our cities and large towns, available for daily marketing, must necessarily be put up, or packed in tubs made of white oak, holding 25, 50, or 100 pounds weight. The packages are known in the market as tubs and firkins. The value of this butter depends upon the care taken to free it from the buttermilk, and the knowledge and taste required to flavor it, by the proper use of salt, and the neatness with which the whole process of making it is characterized.

The consumers of butter are obliged to pay from twenty to forty cents per pound more for butter brought to their cities and large towns weekly than the average market price of our country-made and packed butter—this, too, when its intrinsic value is no more.

This is owing entirely to a want of proper knowledge of the mode of preservation after it comes into possession of the family by whom it is used. The country-made and packed butter is kept in the dairy, cellar, or springhouse from the date of making until sent to market, retaining all the qualities as when first made.

This is done by excluding the air by the simple process of keeping the package covered with brine made of pure salt, strong enough to float an egg. When sold, and as soon as it is to be delivered, the brine is drained off entirely by reversing the package and leaving it bottom up for twelve or twenty-four hours. It is then headed up and goes to market without the brine. The consumer is interested in getting possession of his supply as soon after it leaves the dairy cellar as possible.

He should first take out the head, driving the hoops back to their place, and then make a brine with pure water and Ashton salt, and cover the butter with it, and keep it covered until the last pound is used. The butter kept just covered is easily cut out of the size required for use, and if then held under the hydrant or pitcher, and water poured over it freely, it will be fit for the table, and the last pound will prove as good as the first.

No fear need be entertained that the brine will impart its taste to the butter. The office it performs is to prevent the air from contact with the butter. The writer knows that firkin butter has been kept a year by this simple and inexpensive process as sweet and with all the flavor it possessed the day it was made and packed.—V. E. Piollet, in Country Gentleman.

To Exterminate Rats.—A correspondent of the Tribune says: Take copperas, the quantity to depend upon the number of buildings or places infested, pulverize it very fine; and be sure and sprinkle some in all the buildings— in a word, whatever they congregate—and in a few days all the rats will be gone.

This is a very simple and easily tried, and has proved completely successful several times at different places. No rat has been seen three days after a thorough application.

Temperance.

Causes of Drunkenness.—So long as the houses of the poor are wanting in all the requisites which go to make life healthy or decent, it is of little avail to attempt to improve the condition in other ways. As the connection between mind and body has been better understood, we have learned that it would be as reasonable to look for grapes from thorns as to expect sobriety and energy from men who habitually breath air which, if they were not acclamatized to it, would at once generate low fever. Acclimatization is not a process which can be undergone without paying the penalty; and familiarity with unhealthy surroundings, though it may act as a safeguard against acute disease, must tend to produce a general depression of system, which is hostile alike to either bodily or mental activity, and naturally attempts those who suffer from it to seek a momentary stimulus in gin. —Cornhill Magazine.

We often hear of drunken Scotland. We are happy to quote the following paragraph from the correspondence of the Christian Union;

"I have always heard of Scotland as a great whiskey-drinking country; but the friends of temperance here have really been doing a great work all over the country. Both here and in Glasgow some of the largest and finest hotels are temperance, proclaiming the fact on their signs; and a great many restaurants have up the temperance sign. We were all out sight-seeing the other day, and stopped at one of these restaurants for dinner. J——— has to have a glass of porter with her dinner every day, so we inquired on going in if they kept porter; the keeper said No —this was a temperance restaurant. Father told him that a lady of our party required porter for her health, and asked if he would object to our getting some and bringing it in to take with her dinner. He said it was a matter of principle with him, and he would prefer to have us go to some other restaurant, which we did. Was not this real Scotch firmness? There does seem to be a solid strength in Scotch character that is admirable; they do not know how to prevaricate or flinch."

Softening of the brain is a disease always connected with the use of nervines in some shape. Tobacco is a powerful agent in its production. Trembling is one of the usual symptoms of acute, and a common result of chronic nicotism. The minister of Public Instruction in France issued a circular to the directors of colleges and schools, forbidding tobacco to students, as injurious to physical and intellectual development. Tobacco and insanity are closely connected. It is stated upon the best authority that of those who become insane from the supposed use of spirituous liquors, eighty-seven per cent. also use tobacco.

—It is stated that nearly five hundred of one of the tribes settled in Idaho have heartily embraced the gospel. A still more noteworthy fact connected with these Indians is, that they have decided to give up the use of tobacco. Though very fond of it they affirm to have discovered an abomination against the habit in the Scriptures, where it stands written: "If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off." An exchange from which we learn the incident very pertinently observes: "Such an interpretation of the Bible, and such a carrying out of the self-sacrifice which these Indians believed it to teach, by the whole Christian church, would double the efficiency of all missionary institutions in the world."

Facts and Figures.

The annual report of the third assistant Post-Master general shows that during the last fiscal year there were issued to post-masters for sale to the public 632,733,000 adhesive postage stamps of the value of $17,275,242; of plain stamped envelopes about 65,000,000, valued at 1,972,952; of stamped envelopes bearing a return request 52,000,000, valued at $1,733,738; of newspaper wrappers some 19,000,000, valued at $220,000; and of postal cards 91,000,000. The increase of values in the ordinary issues over the preceding year was $1,668,448, or over eight per cent. These figures represent the cost of manufacture added to the postage value. It is estimated that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, there would be required to defray the cost of adhesive postage stamps $149,764; of stamped envelopes and wrappers $446,520; of postal cards, $159,806, and of advertising $115,000. The number of stamps issued each year increases at a uniform rate of about 10 per cent per annum, but in consequence of more advantageous contracts having been affected the estimate for the above items is some $31,000 less than the amount appropriated for them for the current fiscal year. The Dead Letter Division received during the past year 4,601,673 letters, representing an actual or nominal value of $4,637,429, exclusive of jewelry and other property, which classes of enclosures is treated as possessing no money value that can with correctness be determined. One million, three hundred and ninety-two thousand, two hundred and twenty-four letters, representing $3,909,868, were delivered to the owners or writers, including 225,893 foreign letters, which were returned unopened to the countries whence they came. Of the remainder, some 2,600,000 were either worthless, containing circulars, etc., or could not be delivered and were destroyed. The rest are filed for reclamation or in the hands of postmasters for delivery. The Third Assistant strongly recommends that provision be made by law for furnishing to post-masters throughout the country indelible ink and other requisites for effectually canceling postage stamps, and for post marking. None of the post-offices are now furnished by the Department with any such articles for the protection of the Government. Mr. Barber estimates that the proportion of washed stamps used again in payment of postage is five per cent of the value of all the stamps sold each year, causing an annual loss of $1,000,000 to the revenues of the Department.

—The Chicago Public Library was founded in 1871, immediately after the great fire, and was established by liberal gifts from sister cities and foreign countries. It is supported by a tax of one fifth of a mill, which produces an annual income of $65,000. There are now about 40,000 volumes in the library, and it is rapidly increasing.

—In a single county in Vermont there are ninety five farms vacant, and one hundred and thirty-six abandoned farm houses. Lack of railroad facilities is the cause assigned for this whole ale exodus of farmers.

REVIEW OF THE EVIDENCE

CONCERNING THE MURDER OF ELLEN SLADE.

—‡o‡—

Masonic attempt to clear the Murderer Samuel L. Keith.
The Chicago Journal refuses to publish the Coroners Statement.
Judge Whitney's reasons for renouncing Masonry, etc.

—‡o‡—

Judge Henderson, on the same testimony, held Mr. Keith to bail in the sum of two thousand dollars. With the Grand Jury we have nothing to do, but with the same testimony as was given before the Coroner's jury, we will venture to say that there cannot be fouud twenty-three candid, respectable and intelligent men in the world who would not have found an indictment; what the testimony was before them, we do not know. The foregoing are the main facts and we forbear making any comments on them, and leave the candid to judge whether under this state of facts the people were justified in endeavoring to arrest Mr. Keith, or whether, as Stephen A. Hurlbut, one of his counsel claims, "he has been cruelly attacked."

That "the occasion was eagerly caught at for gratifying private hostilities, under a mask of zeal for public justice," is a charge against all and every one of this community; uncalled for and unjust. After Mr. Keith's arrest, all excitement subsided notwithstanding it seemed the desire and determination of his friends to provoke and keep it up, to give color to the cry of persecution, and to enable them to draw upon public sympathy, and manufacture public opinion. F. B. Hamlin, acting Coroner, Henry L. Crosby, F. B. Bement, S. Terwilliger,, D. E. Ellis, D. Ransom, S. Avery, Samuel Powell, N. C. Amsden, Daniel Reed, Leonard N. Lake, Jurors. D. Leonard, one of the jurors, was absent, and the other one, S. C. Gooding, the above was not presented to.

I forwarded my defence to the "Most Worshipful Grand Master, or the Grand Secretary," September 16th, 1851 and abont ten days after we received intelligence of the death of M. W. G. Master Taylor.

The Lodge assembled the first Monday in October, and appointed a committee consisting of Lieut. Gov. McMurty, Rev. C. Howard, and Judge Caton, to repair to Belvidere, Nov. 10th, for the purpose of investigating the difficulties existing between Belvidere Lodge and their W. M. Nov. 10th, at 9 o'clock, P. M., the committee of the Grand Lodge, viz: Hon. Wm. McMurty, Rev. C. Howard, and Rev. Wm. B. Linel, substitute for Judge Caton, appeared at the Masonic Hall in Belvidere, and organized by reading their appointment.

They then ordered the original charges and my letter to the Grand Master read; after these were read they announced that they had also my written defence, and that it was to be made a part of the proceedings against me.

To this I objected. 1st, Because it was such as I should have delivered orally, had I attended the Grand Lodge. 2nd, That it was my private property, and the Grand Secretary should have returned it to me as I requested him to do. 3rd, Because if so unfair and unprecedented a course was adopted to make my defence the basis of new charges against me I should never know when I was through. 4th, Because it was well known to the committee that I was under recognizance to appear at the Kane County Circuit Court on Thursday morning, as a witness in the case of the People vs. Wm. Woodward, and that I should have to leave early on Wednesday morning, leaving us but one day, which would be little time enough in which to investigate the original charges.

I then stated that there was nothing in the defence that I wished to conceal from the Lodge, and that for the satisfaction of the brethren, I was perfectly willing it should be read. The committee then requested me to come forward and read it. I consented to do so, if it was decided that it was only for the information of the brethren, and not to be made a part of the charges against me. The chairman said, "the committee had so decided." I then went forward and read the defence. We then proceeded to argue and settle preliminary questions. The committee announced, 1st, That none but Master Masons would be admitted within the Lodge Room to give evidence. 2nd, That it is a well-settled doctrine among Masons, that A MASTER MASON'S WORD WAS TO BE RECEIVED AND HELD by all Masons, of as much FORCE AND VERITY AS AN OATH. 3rd, That the written statements of "outsiders" would be received and given such weight as the committee thought proper, but that the form of affidavit would give no additional force to such statements, as the oaths would be extra judicial. To the 2nd, I objected, as grossly absurd and dangerous to every right and interest of the community at large. And to the 3rd, that though consonant with the spirit of the second, it was unfair and preposterous; for the word of a Mason which Mason's hold of absolute verity, is given under the Masonic obligation, which is not only extra judicial, but seldom administered by those authorized to administer oaths. The committee overruled these objections, and adhered to the rules above laid down. I do not pretend here to give the tithe part of what transpired, but only such as seems to me of most public importance. By the time we have proceeded thus far, it was plainly manifest that to have a fair investigation of the foregoing matters was no part of the business of the committee. Every possible effort was made, and every word watched, and every idea caught up and distorted for the purpose of endeavoring to place me in a false position. The two priests who were on the committee, I freely acquit of a shadow of hypocracy; they frankly manifested that the throne of the Deity they then worshiped, was neither the habitation of justice nor fairness, nor yet a gentlemanly deportment, or common courtesy. Mr. McMurty was more affable, courteous and wary. Again the committee adverted to my defence before the Grand Lodge. I objected to embarrassing the proceedings with that defence; as they had once ruled it out.

The committee remarked that it contained grave charges against the brethren of Belvidere Lodge.

I then stated that the defence was written in explanation and justification of my course, and the letter I had written to the Grand Master; and not as a formal complaint against the members of the Lodge; but if they would give me time, after disposing of the complaints filed against me I would substantiate every charge contained in that defence. It being now about 1, A. M., the committee adjourned until 9 A. M.

TUESDAY, Nov. 11th, 9, A. M., the committee met, pursuant to adjournment; and A. C. Fuller, S. W., volunteered to aid me on the defence. Again the committee called up the subject of my defence before the Grand Lodge. To this brother Fuller objected, and after discussing the subject for some time, the committee decided to lay that subject by for the present; and then for the first time informed me that there was another catalogue of complaints in their hands against me. and which they ordered read. I then requested a copy; and after a long consultation between the members of the committee they decided that I might take a copy, as the Grand Master Taylor had furnished me a copy of the first charges. These charges were without date and are mostly different changes rung on the former charges, and containing in addition to them (1) a charge of falsehood, (2) having renounced all jurisdiction of Belvidere Lodge in a letter to the Secretary. (3) and charging that I had stated that Grand Master Taylor had recalled the Charter of the Lodge on account of the unworthiuess of the members. These charges were signed by Stephen A. Hurlbut, Simon Bassett, Wm. T. Burgess, S. C. Gooding, H. I. Doolittle, John Curtiss, Joel Florida, Asa Williams, E. A. Woodruff, Orrin Miller Sr. S. Longeor, A. E. Jennee, L. H. Magher, and Cephas Gardner.

It was now late in the morning, and all knew that I was obliged to leave for Kane county, distance 50 miles, early next morning, and as it appeared to me that the committee and by accusers in perfect concert, were acting against time, Mr. Fuller and I agreed to submit to a trial upon any charges that they would put up in tangible form, and they made the following.

1st, of falsehood, in stating that the Lodge refused to pay him $18, they were indebted to him.

"Plead not guilty of falsehood. and would justify as to the charge that the Lodge refused to pay." &c.

2d. Has renounced jurisdiction of Belvidere Lodge.

"Plead guilty and justification."

3rd. Has stated that Grand Master Taylor recalled the Charter on account of unworthiness of the members of the Lodge.

"Plead, do not know of making such statements, but give notice that I will prove that Grand Master Taylor so declared in open Lodge."

4th. Has improperly alluded to the obligations of a Master Mason.

"Plead, not guilty."

5th. Has without cause repeatedly attacked the character and standing of members of the Lodge.

"Plead, not without cause, and will justify."

6th. Has charged that Masons of this Lodge consider themselves bound by obligation to protect a murderer.

"Plead, not guilty as charged, but that members of this Lodge consider themselves bound to screen, aid, and protect a brother guilty of crime, at all hazards, except in murder and treason, and that at their own election; and will justify."

7th. He does not possess one particle of prudence, and is likely to utter the secrets of Freemasonry when excited in debate.

"Plead, if the secrets of Masonry be to conceal the crimes of its votaries, and a duty to violate the laws of the land and of God to shield them from punishment, I am guilty, and shall continue to be, and will justify by showing that it is only such secrets as the above that I have uttered and denounced."

8th. He made arrangements with outsiders to watch the lodge.

Plead, the lodge was watched by outsiders, on the night of my meditated assasination with my knowledge, and I did not try to prevent it; and will justify."

9th. He has become the head authority of Anti-Masons.

"Plead, not guilty, as I know of, and await the proof."

And now commenced the most ridiculous farce ever witnessed in any proceeding in the least analogous to a judicial one. The subject was taken up without system, and sometimes several would be speaking and giving their versions, their, "I guess," and "I think," and "I understand," and "I have heard," &c., at the same time; and when anything came out that did not accord with the notions of the committee, they would take the witness in hand, and without difficulty get it to their satisfaction; and to cross examine the witnesses was nearly impossible; especially if I attempted it, the priests, more particular, Linen, would take the witness as soon as I had propounded a question, and whenever the tendency was to elicit a justification, they would contend that I had plead guilty to that, and that was the end of the matter; but Gov. McMurty, having more sense, or more fairness, probably both, would generally decide that I might take the witness again; and scarcely could I propound a question before my accusers would take the witness in hand, and I must then wait until they got through. Late in the evening, my complainants gave notice that they rested for the present. Brother Fuller and I then looked over to see how the matter stood.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;' "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage, 3 cents per 100 Tracts. Tracts Free.

Publisher's Department.

Will the Cynosure be out of Debt by the first of January?

If all our readers who have a "4" on their labels will send us their renewals and pay what they owe; if our friends send us all the renewals and new subscriptions they possibly can, we think the Cynosure debt will be canceled by the first of January.

One warm friend in Peoria says that for every subscription he can obtain in that city of one dollar, he will pay the other dollar and have the paper sent for one year. This he does for the sake of having the paper widely read, and put on a paying basis.

A Mason (who was better than Masonic principles) said to Mr. Sam'l French, of Chapin, Illinois, that he would give one dollar towards sending the paper to a man in the grasshopper region if Mr. French would pay the other. The offer was accepted and the subscription in this way renewed.

No one can appreciate the value of the Cynosure more keenly than an honest, Christian man who has been swindled and degraded by the false and sinful institution of Freemasonry. Hence we hope to find many friends like this one entending the circulation of the Cynosure.

Who will be the next to send money to pay for some subscriber who is struggling against poverty as well as against sin.

Please work in every honorable way to free the Cynosure from indebtedness and to enlarge the subscription list.

Write! Write! Write!

This is the last number of the Cynosure that we send to November subscribers who have not renewed their subscriptions or written that they wish to have their papers continued. But if you write immediately your letter will be received in time for us to send you a copy of the next issue. Please write whether you wish to have the paper continued or not, and if possible, send us another subscription if you renew. We thank many of our subscribers who have already responded promptly.

Does your subscription expire in December? Will you not send your renewal now? It would save us trouble and expense should you do so. If you cannot remit the price for a year now, send what money you can, that is pleasanter than to have a large arrearage account to settle.

Do not forget to send for extra copies of the Cynosure for canvassing purposes. They are sent free. Are you at work for the paper? Remember what a blessing good literature is in families. Ask God's blessing on your labors and then go to work.

Shall we have a good Report to Give?

We intend to give our readers, in the Cynosure that is issued on the last day of this year, December 31st, 1874, a report as to the number of subscribers on the list; the relative standing of the States where the Cynosure goes; and the state of the Cynosure cash book.

You have four weeks to work for the paper before that report is made out, will you not prayerfully, carefully, courageously, perseveringly and promptly commence your efforts to make that report what it ought to be? Do not sit at home and speculate about what your neighbors will do, saying, "It is of no use to call on Mr. B. or Mr. M., but go to them, tell them of the great value of the paper, ask them for their subscriptions, and let them speak for themselves. If they say, "call again," consider that half a promise to take the paper and be sure to call. If they are not at home, write down their names and be sure to see them again.

Pittsburgh is the place of our next National meeting, we hope our friends in Pennsylvania and adjoining States to be peculiarly earnest in obtaining subscribers, so that people may be informed concerning the objects of this Association before the meeting in Pennsylvania.

Postage on the Cynosure.

After Jan. 1st, 1875, THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. The postage on the CYNOSURE is 20 cents a year.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 year a we cannot do this.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscriber for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES.

No commission is allowed on club rates. Club rates are intended for those who wish to give the commission to subscribers.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Note if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Bills.—We send out this week bills to those friends who have asked us more than two months since to continue sending them the Cynosure promising to renew their subscription soon. With a few of them, some special arrangement perhaps has been made to pay hereafter. If so, do not grow angry with us for forgetting it, but send us a postal card telling us what this arrangement is. Remember that we need the money VERY MUCH, and send a part of the mount due if you cannot pay the whole.

Will you write to us immediately after receiving the bill whether able to remit or not? We hope you will appreciate our need of funds and make a special effort to settle your account.

We hope all whose subscriptions expire in December will begin to canvass for new subscriptions now. So that you will have a good list of new names to send in with your renewels.

Topics of the Time.

Governor Osborn of Kansas cannot contemplate with any degree of satisfaction the work he is assisting others to undo. In the early fall while Minnesota and Nebraska called for help to relieve the suffering sure to follow the plague of locusts, and apprehensions were felt for Kansas which had equally suffered, her chief executive said to the world, Kansas can take care of herself. His legislature made a pitiable failure in attempting to aid the sufferers, and now at length when those "soulless corporations," the railroads, have taken hold of the matter in earnest and a State Aid Society has been formed, Governor Osborn endorsed its object in a humble way. From the unquestioned news now slowly creeping eastward from those desolated praries, aid must be sent without delay and without stint. Governor Osborn cannot be too earnest in helping them and undeceiving the public whom he has misled, perhaps through a mistaken zeal for the honor of his State, and incorrect information The real estate speculators, whose mercenary letters have contributed to the general ignorance of the condition of Kansas, must also be held largely responsible for the wretchedness which the winter is already bringing. How they can answer their consciences before the present facts, we do not attempt to say.

We should like to question some student of ecclesiastical history on a feature of modern religious journalism, namely, the ridicule of conscience. One can rarely take up an advocate of modern broad-gauge religion without finding a fling at the religious customs or convictions of the passing or past generation. Just what such jesting is supposed to effect is hardly understood. No one can suppose that a man who has convictions will part with them for a joke; he will hold them more firmly. It seems altogether probable that such ridicule is to cover up the frailties of argument. The Alliance (Prof. Swing's paper) has the following illustration of this style of theology: "It has been quite a number of years since the Old School men of the Presbyterian ministry and eldership had had a good general fight all along the whole line. What little flogging they may have done at home among the children, and what little pious wrath they may have found use for in the way of knocking around a few girls that may have danced at a party, or by way of rebuking some old woman for gathering eggs upon Sunday, had not been satisfactory, but had left on hand no little amount of fighting-vim, that was only spoiling by being so long bottled."

In a letter published in the biography of the late Lord Palmerston, that worthy furnishes an illustration for Mr. Murray, late pastor of Park Street Church, Boston: "Our new gardner does pretty well, and understands the theory of his department, but he is a Methodist, and goes preaching about the country every Sunday, and I fear he thinks too much of his sermons to be very successful in his garden." The writer adds gravely, "I must try and put a stop to his preaching." Mr. Murray was, in his own estimate, overworked, and after asking for an associate took a six months vacation while his $6,000 salary went on. He found no associate when he returned and resigned. The church was willing, for he has a lecture tour every season, and a 300-acre farm at Guilford, Conn., with costly stables and a number of racing horses with a half-mile track for practice. It was evident that he needed an associate pastor, for the church alone was as much as one man could well take care of. But New Haven has a church which offers $8,000 for Mr. Murray's peculiar services, and New York bids $12,000, as if he were a horse himself, at auction. Peter or Paul would be little accounted of as competitors of this horse-racing pastor.

The papal crusade against the Freemasons of Brazil is experiencing its anniversary revival. A year ago the Bishops of Para and Pernambuco, in enforcing prelatic punishments on refractory lodgemen, encountered the government. The Emperor decided against them, and imprisoned the Bishop of Pernambuco to the great indignation of the Catholic rabble, who raved through the streets crying, "Down with the Masons." The two Bishops have been at length convicted for violation of the laws, and the publication of their sentence last week was the occasion of a renewal of the disturbances in the provinces of Parahiba and Pernambuco. The papists, headlong, unreasonable and ignorant, have probably jumped to a right conclusion: that the fountain of their sorrows issues from the lodge. And the devil, artfully to confuse the ideas of men, pushes them on to violence, while the lodge assumes the virtuous and proclaims itself the victim of Anti-masonic persecution. But this effort of the Arch-deceiver to confound issues and principles cannot avail. Protestant Anti-masonry—nay, Protestant Christianity, sees in both these factions those dark spirits which once slew her Saviour, but which shall ere long both be utterly destroyed "by the brightness of his coming."

In their war on the gambling dens the Chicago authorities have been ably supported by the Tribune; and when a few graceless politicians tried a year ago to get a license for the "social evil" system here, the same journal was foremost against them. In its position on the temperance issues, crusading, prohibitory laws, etc., it has helped the liquor dealer with sympathy and argument, when any was to be had. The Tribune is not opposed to the suppression of low groggeries, but wants those of stylish appearance, and that have money, to be untrammeled by law, and thus reduce the system of dram-drinking and intoxication to an act of refinement. This course has been bad enough, but if any hoped for a change for the better under the new management of that paper, they have been disappointed. Mr. Medill upholds continental temperance. In his letters from Europe he wrote at length of the virtues of Switzerland, which he described as a nation which had learned how to drink intoxicants without getting drunk. In a late issue of the Tribune, the Methodist Episcopal Conference is taken in hand for resolving against the rum traffic and recommended to let the liquor seller alone and preach to sinners. Now wherein is the consistency? Why do "sumptuary" laws restrict "personal liberty" more than laws against gambling and the brothel. The appetite and lust of the individual is restrained by them all, but is not the objective point of either. The European argument, which the Tribune adopts, is the result of monarchial training. Liberty, in the cramped morality of the emigrant, means license; and such liberty he supposes to exist here; the welfare of the community subordinate to that of the individual. Hence the flood of intemperance and crime is gorged with foreigners. If the Tribune is partizan let it be consistent If it opposes the faro den or the bagnio, let it treat the saloon alike; for of the three, its curse is heaviest and farthest-reaching.

Why Trade is Dull.

BY J P. STODDARD.

From a recent number of the Official Reporter published by order of the "Machinists and Blacksmith's International Union," Cleveland, O., I learn something of the working plans and the condition of this obsequious offspring of "Hiram Abiff."

After speaking of the danger to the craft from defected members "blabbing the business of the Union," whom the editor calls "perjured," he adds: "If this nasty business is persisted in, we say by all means give us an iron-clad oath to make our members live up to their obligation." He does not speak directly of the death penalty, but says these men "are of no earthly benefit to respectable society," leaving his readers to draw the very natural, if not inevitable inference that the sooner they are "lost to society," as Masons said of Morgan, the better. These Internationals through their Official Reporter are beginning to clamor for another inquisition in the interests of restricted liberties and suppressed speech.

This paper contains reports from seventy-nine lodges, scattered through seventeen States, and shows a very prosperous state of affairs under the regimen of this aspirant to dictatorship. Forty-six unions report "Trade is dull, or very dull;" six report, "Trade is improved;" two "fair;" two "good, but no vacancies." Chicago reports No. 3., "Trade is no better than last reported; if anything it is worse." And no wonder! Sagacious men hesitate to invest in business controlled by secret, irresponsible combinations, or to subject their interest to the uncertainty of a system employing secret spies, and intrigue, by which to crush those who refuse to concede to their demands.

In giving instruction to the members of different Unions the editor says, "All vacancies should be secured for members of our organization, and in case a member cannot be had in the immediate vicinity of the city or town in which the vacancy occurs, a telegram should be immediately sent to the executive department, stating wages paid and kind of work wanted."

The inevitable result of this rule is tersely expressed in the forty-six reports, beginning, "Trade dull, or very dull." Where reward of merit and skilled labor is supplanted by intrigue and favoritism, trade will be dull, and men of brains and means withdraw their funds from such hazardous investments. What the capitalist needs, what the mechanic needs, what the poor need, what the country and what we all need, is less intrigue, deception, under-handed combination and more open, honorable competition, where integrity and skill are allowed to seek and secure that reward to which they are entitled on the score of real merit.

Beecher's Pastoral Counsel.

BEECHER TO MRS. TILTON, PUTTING HER IN THE HANDS OF MOULTON.

BROOKLIN, Feb. 7, 1871.

My DEAR MRS. TILTON:—When I saw you last I did not expect ever to see you again, or to be alive many days. God was kinder to me than were my own thoughts. The friend whom God sent to me—Mr. Moulton—has proved above all friends that ever I had, able and willing to help me in this terrible emergency of my life. His hand it was that tied up the storm that was ready to burst upon our heads.

I am not the less disposed to trust him from finding that he has your welfare most deeply and tenderly at heart. You have no friend (Theodore excepted) who has it in his power to serve you so vitally, and who will do it with so much delicacy and honor. I beseech of you, if my wishes have yet any influence, let my deliberate judgment in this matter weigh with you. It does my sore heart good to see in Mr. Moulton an unfeigned respect and honor for you. It would kill me if he thought otherwise. He will be as true a friend to your honor and happiness as a brother would be to a sister.

In him we have a common ground. You and I may meet in him. The past is ended. But is there no future? No wiser, higher, holier future? May not this friend stand as a priest in the new sanctuary of reconciliation, and mediate and bless you, Theodore and my unhappy self. Do not let my earnestness fail of its end. You believe in my judgment. I have put myself wholly and gladly in Moulton's hands and there I must meet you.

This is sent with Theodore's consent, but he has not read it. Will you return it to me by his hands?

I am very earnest in this wish, for all our sakes, as such a letter ought not to be subject to even a chance of miscarriage.

Your unhappy friend,
H. W. BEECHER.

ANALYSIS.

"Did not expect to be alive many days—but God kinder than his own thoughts." What does that mean? Did he think to kill himself, or did he expect in a few days his thoughts would kill him?

"Moulton's hand tied up the storm that was ready to burst upon our heads." Not Tilton's head or Beecher's head alone; but upon his and Mrs. Tilton's heads. It was a storm that had not yet burst. The storm Mr. Beecher speaks of as taking place in his mind about Tilton had passed long before. This threatened Beecher and Mrs. Tilton, but Moulton had tied it up so that it had not yet burst upon them. What does this mean?

He wants to persuade her to trust Moulton, and therefore says Moulton respects and honors her. This would influence her of course. But why does this minister endeavor to get one of his church members, who, he says in his first statement, is a woman of "devout habits, to put herself into the hands of a heathen" and a friend of Mrs. Woodhull. A pastor leads a lamb of his flock into the hands of such a man, where Beecher himself was to meet her, as an association best for both of them! What does this mean? He says "I have put myself gladly and wholly into Moulton's hands, and there I must meet you." Think of that. Poor woman!—Must meet Beecher, the pastor, in the hands of Moulton, the "heathen." This is the pastor—this the lamb of his flock—and this the fold. And yet the Plymouth people rally to hear this man lecture and preach as a certain class of Bostonians rally to hear him and Mrs Woodhull and gives them the largest houses and pay of the season.

Finally, "In Moulton, we have a common ground, you and I may meet in him." That is—Moulton, like your husband, believes in free marriage. They can, therefore, honor and forgive and aid such as practice accordingly. There we can meet. I am in—you must come in at the door of the wolf fold.

KRITOS.

Work for the Truth.

How very many of our brethren be long to some secret society; and how faithfully they will work for it. The query has been in my mind for some time, why they cannot bring that same zealous spirit into the church and work for its advancement. Why can't we have that same fellow-feeling between church members as there is between lodge members. I once heard a brother say that if a man were sick his lodge would visit him, and care for him, but his church would do nothing for him. Ah, this is too often the case; but is it right? No; certainly not. But where is the fault, and where the remedy? Our brethren are not as interested in their church as in their lodge.

If they are called upon to lead a class or prayer-meeting, they have not the power to do. Their excuse is they cannot talk like such a one, mentioning someother member. Still these men can hold the highest office in their dear society, because it is their duty to keep it up, of course, even at the expense of letting the prayer-meeting go down. Then we often hear them urging some companion to join them, telling them the necessity of joining Christ's free society; thank God free for all.

Are these "secret societies" born of God? Are they instrumental in advancing his cause? Oh, let me urge upon you the necessity of working for him who is able to abundantly bless. You say you are pledged to work for your lodge. Is that vow any more sacred than the one you made to God when you joined his people, and promised to use all your mind and strength for him? Away, then, with such inconsistency.

Christ never taught us of "secret societies," and his servant Paul commanded us, "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the honor and glory of God." O brothers and sisters, let us work for our church, as we would for our family, and God will reward us in the life to come, and may he add his blessing to these words.—Methodist Home Journal.

Ten Arguments against Christmas.

In an editorial published in the American Wesleyan, Dec. 24, 1874, are found the following reasons against the popular celebration of the 25th of December:

1. But the idea, now growing in the nations of religious people that it should be observed as a day of special religious ceremony on account of its supposed connection with the birth of Christ, is a Roman Catholic fiction. They use it as do many Episcopalians, as the occasion of special services, and equivalent, as a sacrament, to the "Lord's Supper." But since Christ instituted the "Lord's Supper" as a sacrament, and did not Christmas, should the two be held in equal reverence? And would it be proper to weaken our solemn fidelity to the former, by putting it on a par with a man-invented scheme, and call "Christmas a sacrament of the church?"

2. The term Christmas is derived by compounding the words "Christ" and "Mass." But Christ never had a "Mass" until it was invented by the Pope of Rome.

3. Any one who will take the trouble to read the article "Christmas" in Appleton's New Encyclopedia, or any other standard authority, will discover that Christmas is a pure invention, and might as reasonably have been fixed on any other day of the year. In the Eastern churches this "birth-day" of Christ was commemorated upon various days of the winter, was at times confounded with the Epiphany, and at other times was held during the month of April and even May.

4. In the 4th century Pope Julius I, by an order, fixed the day upon the 25th day of December. This again was changed when the reckoning of the years was changed from the "Old Style" to the "New Style."

5. Then, all things considered, we stand only one chance in three hundred and sixty-five of having the right day. If we celebrate the birth of Christ we would prefer a day not fixed by a pope, and not reveled in with the unbridled license of the broad-road travelers. The reader of history will discover that it has for ages been a time for burlesqueing sacred things, and that nine-tenths of those who have given it attention, have been the gay and rude, who have reveled it away without a thought of the dear Christ who died for them.

6. Christians should dissuade its observance as a day more holy than any other. And should deny the claim that it is sacred because ancient. As well might Pontius Pilate be claimed as a saint, because his name occurs in the Apostle's creed.

7. As Christ did not fix the day of his birth as a holy day, but as Pope Telesphorus by letters of decretal did, the question arises whether we should be found like the ancient Pharisees, "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

8. Christ could easily have fixed the day in universal remembrance, as he did the Christian Sabbath. But as there was no salvation in his birth, he brushed it from universal memory, as for similar prudential reasons Moses was buried in an unknown grave. Otherwise to much worship would have been bestowed upon non-essential things.

9. Christ's infinite display of love to our race centers about his death. His birth, education and domestic history are simply incidents. His death is where the grandeur of his mission touches the case of men. Was he born? So are all. Did he die for all amidst unutterable pangs, to save a guilty world? None but he can do that. Then how much more glorious and worthy of universal praise his death than his birth. Well may we commemorate his death in memory of his agonies and bloody sweat. Not as the Catholics and Episcopalians celebrate it, in the observance of Lent, (which we deem far more fitting than the observance of Christmas,) but as a sacred Sacrament in the "Supper of the Lord."

10. And since Christ never instituted a "Mass" for himself, nor directed his apostles to do so, is it not better to hold ourselves to the strict letter and spirit of the Word of God? Is it best for Protestant Christians to continue a Catholic invention, and put Christ on an equal footing with the other saints of the Romish Calendar, who have especial "mases" added to their names, and who are worshiped instead of our only Divine Head.

REV. JAMES BICKNELL, Westmorland, N. Y., pastor of the Baptist church, in the eightieth year of his age, sends his renewal for the paper and writes: "I read it, I think with a prayerful heart for its success. . . You take the course that heaven approves and it will prevail." He quotes the following precious passages of Scripture for our readers:

"And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose

For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first born among many brethren.

Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?

He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?

Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth.

Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us.

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, nakedness, or peril, or sword?

(As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter.)

Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us.

For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come,

Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.—(Rom. viii. 28-39.)

I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course. I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.—2 Tim. iv. 7, 8.

There is, perhaps, no human organization that assumes to itself so much of good that it has done and will do, as the institution of Freemasonry. It sails under a fair exterior, and proposes much; but were its deception, its deeds of crime and hypocrisy, its dark, bloody, selfish, revengeful, cruel workings fully disclosed, no honorable community wou'd give it longer tolerance. Yet, it sets up its pretenses to the noblest brotherhood in the world, and as approved of God.

The present farmer's movement against corrupt rings and monopolies, is not yet proven not to be the greatest ring and the most powerful monopoly of all. It may yet prove itself the thief employed to catch a thief, and those farmers uniting with this movement may find themselves in the position of the Greek soldier who caught a Tartar by leaping on the Tartar's horse; and while the Tartar, with spurs to his horse, rode into his own camp, the Greek soldier continued to exclaim, "I have caught a Tartar."—Correspondence of Christian Family Companion.

He is a wiser man who sees his own imperfections than he who discovers a planet, or is able to plan a campaign or build a fort. He is more a conqueror who quells the baser passions within and brings the animal nature into subjection to the moral, than he who subdues the world. He is a stronger man who moulds society mentally and morally, who is able to direct the forces of the mind and soul, than he who successfully fights with bul's and bears or overcomes a giant in mortal combat. He is more a brave man, a hero, who dares to do right, to brave popular indignation, than he who stands unappalled at the cannon's mouth; the one is as far above the other as the mind and soul are superior to the body.

What Should be the Attitude of the Christian Church toward the Lodge.

ADDRESS BY ELDER P. HURLESS BEFORE THE ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION.

Whatever may be said of the general principles of Freemasonry, will apply with nearly equal propriety to all secret combinations of men; as the minor orders are its descendents of the first and second generation.

The attitude that an institution of God should maintain towards a man-made order, can best be ascertained by a careful examination of the principles which underlie the latter, a few of which only can be noticed at this time. Freemasonry claims great antiquity of origin, while its opposers reckon its age to be considerably less than two hundred years. Both parties are entitled to a hearing.

The golden calf of this age around which many thousands dance, assumed its present form in 1717, but the elements of its composition are as old as the pyramids of Egypt—aye, as old as idolatry itself. To make it seem respectable in the eyes of Christians, a few ornaments, highly colored, have been added; yet it is doubtful whether a single Christian element enters into its composition.

A prominent Masonic writer stated in 1867 that "Isis discovered the model of Freemasonry among the nations of Tartary." Webb, in his Freemason's Monitor says: "Our records inform us, that the usages and customs of Masons have ever corresponded with those of the Egyptian philosophers, to which they bear a near affinity."

Isis, the reputed discoverer of this "model," was the founder of sun-worship; and a high compliment is paid to him and other heathens in every degree of universal Masonry, by associating with the altar the image of the sun. The Blazing Star is one of the ornaments of the lodge; but on account of its connection with the wise men of the East, who sought the place of our Saviour's nativity, "it interferes" says Albert G. Mackey, "with the universal character of Masonry."

The Masonic altar in the Blue Lodge is the Mason's religious home. Before it they kneeled and repeated the covenant as it dropped from the desecrated lips of a Worshipful Master of a Worshipful Lodge. As he swore perpetual adherence to that religion which is the antipode of the Christian religion, he virtually absolved himself from every other covenant that conflicted with the Masonic obligation, and implying,—in the language of one of the apostles of Masonry,—allegiance to the order when "in the senate, at the bar, on the bench, and at the sacred altar."

Universal Masonry has but one altar as the center of a great brotherhood. Masonically, one strictly adhering Freemason is as good as another, whether they be infidels, idolators, or professors of the Christian religion. In defining "brother," Mackey says, "Freemasons are brethren, not only by common participation of the human nature, but of professing the same faith, as being jointly engaged in the same labors, and as being united by a mutual covenant or tie, whence they are also emphatically called "Brethren of the Mystic Tie."

To the altar of this common brotherhood all heathendom may come so far as religion is concerned, without sacrificing their principles. The followers of Mahomet, with all their superstitions and traditions which were established by the sword amongst the Turks and Persians as a religion, are invited; the Buddhist with his practical atheism, for he believes in the eternity of matter and deification of saints, is welcome; the Parsee, whose religion was similar to the fire-worship as taught by Zoroaster, has a place there; the Crufucian with his offerings of pigs and rabbits may come without hindrance; the Jew, with his hatred to the New Testament and Christian religion, acknowledging no crucified, risen, and exalted Mediator, is assured that his feelings and dogmas are in harmony with the principle of the brotherhood; but when the Christian comes he is compelled to approach the altar without his Christ.

"Prayer in the Masonic lodges," says Webb, "should be of a general character, containing nothing offensive to my class of conscientious brethren. In theory, the whole world of Masons is supposed to be present at every meeting of every lodge, and the instruction, moral and religious, should be directed accordingly."

This item of fundamental principle accounts for the Christless recitations, in guttural tones, called prayer, which are addressed to the Grand Architect of the Universe,—whatever that may be. It plainly follows that the altar of Freemason is heathen, and as unlike the Christian's mercy seat as heathenism differs from true Christianity.

"It is the bond that makes the Mason," says a popular member of the order. Here follow some of the parts of the bond of a Master Mason, selected from more than a dozen:

To fly to the relief of a brother that gives a sign of distress. This duty is enjoined at the risk of life; while any brother in real distress from any cause whatever, is competent to make the appeal; to refrain from speaking evil of a brother Master Mason before his face and behind his back, but warn him of approaching danger under strict obedience to the Grand Lodge of the State; to obey signs and summons handed, sent or thrown, from a brother or the lodge; go on a brother's errand, even barefoot and bare headed, to save his life or relieve his necessities. To keep invoilable all the secrets of a brother communicated as such, murder and treason optional. Any man's life directed by this covenant must conflict with duties to the family, society, law, Christianity.

The marriage bond and the bond that makes the Mason are at variance. The marriage relation is entered by solemn vows to God, and engagements to each other and the civil government. The husband's vow binds him to love and honor his wife as himself. The inspired book says: "Let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself." He, as her protector, is to "give honor unto his wife as to the weaker vessel;" to love her as Christ loved the church for which he gave his live. Rob. Morris says in addressing the craft "At home and in your neighborhood you are to act as becomes a moral and wise man, particularly not to let your family, friends and neighbors know the concerns of the lodge; but wisely to consult your own honor and that of the ancient brotherhood, for reasons not to be mentioned here." "He is also to divert a discourse and manage it prud ntly." In all in which the honor due to his wife conflicts with his own honor or that of the lodge, he must discriminate against his wife. These obligations are diametrically opposed to each other. Freemasonry as an institution espouses every interest of its members, and, by virtue of his wife's relation to her husband, she is connected with all his interests, yet with their joint earnings the husband purchased in the very first step a degree which obligated him to "always hail, ever conceal and never reveal," what, as his partner, she is honestly entitled to. The breach thus made between the man and his wife widens as he plunges deeper into the dark mazes of the order. His heart is a depository of Masonic secrets, locked against his wife, and the communion that God designed to have existed between the married pair, is sadly interrupted. . . . . .

If a body of able-bodied men of various characters were to adopt, as a confession of faith, the religion of any of the prominent secret societies of the day and call such an organization a church, what, think you, would be the attitude of every ecclesiastical body in the land, toward that brotherhood? In their conferences, associations, synods, &c., they would cover that systematic humbug with shame, by condemnatory resolutions; whilst the churches represented in it, would at once withdraw their fellowship from such members, and have no more to do with the so-called church than with any other idolatrous institution. Freemasonry, for instance, is a compound organization, one of its parts being a plainly defined religious system I subjoin a very brief synopsis of its religious outlines.

The foundations of its theology—if we may use that term—consists in a belief in the Supreme Architect of the Universe, whatever that may be.

The material of the system is drawn from those who are morally, mentally, physically and pecuniarily sound.

The necessary preparation is not of the heart, but consists in a change of toilet, including a remarkable neck-tie.

Its altar gives not repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, but a sacrifice of manhood, and loading of the conscience with horrible oaths and barbarous penalties.

Its prayers do not embrace a single item of the model given by our Saviour, but are Christless and senseless abominations.

Its songs—not of praise to God, or for making true melody in the heart—are full of selfishness, many of them untruthful, some low, and all breathing a spirit of laudation to the order.

The experience of its members does not embrace the beams of Divine light shining more and more unto the perfect day, but consists of contradictions, duplicity, and conscience searing.

The work of the craft is not for enhancing Christian virtue, building up broken manhood, or saving deathless souls, but a ceasless effort at self-aggrandizement.

Some secret societies are more influential than others and reduce its members to greater slavery, yet the heart of each beats in harmony with all, and in our oppositions to organized secrecy, we must follow the principle on which all are found to the end. This was the position of our best abolitionists. They argued against the crime of slavery as a system, not for a mere modification of the leading principle of the vile schemer. They did not only oppose the extension of slave territory, or ask that the shackles be removed only from the body of the slave; but they contended for a freedom which accorded with Christianity. So must we labor and pray for the freedom of the churches,—in pulpit and in pew, until Freemasonry and all its progeny be driven to its native hell.

Freemasonry a Fraud.

ADDRESS BY N. D. FANNING BEFORE THE ILLINOIS CONVENTION.

The only report to be had of this excellent address was taken at the time. The following is prepared with the assistance of reporter's notes in the daily papers.

Some years since, said the speaker, an ardent supporter of the Masonic fraternity had placed in his hands a small volume called "McCoy's Masonic Manual." It was made the text for all the Masonic brotherhood, and it had been weighed in the balance of the order and not found wanting. It was, therefore, a fit book for reference, the speaker thought, and its contents could be taken as the basis for any remarks he might have to present. He looked at Masonry in reference to its vast antiquity, and also because of its self-styled divine origin. It was said to be divinely inspired. It was the basis of the morality of the system. The book claimed to have, in the order of Freemasons, the traditions which had outlived the city of Solomon, and had existed amid all the changes of the ages. The various degrees were shown to have a very wide and extended signification. The order contained much antiquity, many grand rites and ceremonies, much that was pleasant; it had in it things that were said to be beautiful, and it was the public boast of the order that it was the most cosmopolitan organization of its character in world. He would pass on to the second division of his theme. Did the order merit the high opinion which it took to itself? It reared no hospitals; it did not aid the poor. A so-called co-operator of education, it never reared a school or assisted science in its investigations. Its work was that of ceremony and self-laudatory twaddle. It rung in dead-beat leaders, and made well-fed clergymen famous by giving them little white aprons. It had subsidized the press and muzzled the pulpit, so that both were silent in this great contest. In its forms and ceremonies we saw that the most sacred things were, to say the least, blasphemous. There were those who personated the Jehovah, and their blasphemous orgies were engaged in by many unworthy, and the disgusting ceremony indulged in by drinking libations out of skulls and other things of the kind. He did not know how any one could pass through these orders and retain his purity, and his patriotism, and his Christianity. Here was a man swearing away his liberty of his conscience, and yet the institution lived. They knew what was the nature of oaths, because persons who had become members of the order had revealed them. They had made such confessions under oath, so that if any of the minions of the lodge desired or were able to deny the allegations, they could have done so; but they did not, and the qustion of perjury was not pushed. He would say to the young men who were now in the order, "Come out from among them, and be separate."

The existence of this heathenish institution was an insult to the Christian community. It was a constant threat to American principles, and even to the existence of the American Government itself. [Applause.] Should it, then, be tolerated? They were only the foremost rank of a grand army that was marching against the hosts of Belial. The cloud of opposition was still small, but it would spread over the American sky, and darken the faces of the American people against the infamous Masonic society. He was proud to be in the van with his brethren, and there he should remain until the grand work was accomplished. That might be sooner or later, but come it would, for common sense and truth were leagued against the cause of error and of darkness. Masonry more than any other cause in the world had by its exclusiveness and chicanery, helped to destroy man's confidence in man. The order was born in iniquity, and ought to be the abhorred of all good men.

I will close, he said, with an illustration drawn from Shakspeare—with the words of King Richard to Gloster, "Thou wert born with teeth in thy mouth to show that thou wouldst bite the world." [Applause.]

Notes of the Late Chicago Convention.

Beside the more lengthy addresses of the State Convention several brief speeches were made containing pointed argument or apt illustrations which should not be lost. Among these are the following.

Mr. Stoddard told of an excellent pastor he found in Indiana who joined the Knights Templar, and who was shocked by their ceremonies. He partook of the sacramental wine, and, after drinking the fifth libation from the cup formed of a human skull, the Knights drew out their swords, and said that they were drawn to defend the obligation taken, or to avenge with death the violation of the initiatory oaths. That man worked against the society in secret, but was warned that, if he persisted, or revealed the secret workings, his life would be surely taken. This made him careful, but he prayed daily that the hour might come when Masonic tyranny could be overthrown, and when he could come publicly forward and renounce his terrible and sacrilegious oaths.

Rev. F. Bascom, D. D., said that Dr. Quint, accounted an orthodox Congregationalist, was a leading Freemason in New England. He told a brother clergyman that he prayed in the lodge in the name of Christ just as anywhere Yet Dr. Sturtevant, Jr., said that once when he assisted at a Masonic funeral in his church he was privately advised not to use the name of Christ in his prayer, as it was contrary to the rules of the order. The question is, How shall we get the church on the right ground. They say you are a little insane, are riding a hobby. There are wealthy and influential Masons in the church who must not be offended, and ministers do not want to create a sensation or arouse discussion which will drive away converts. How shall we stir up this apathy?

Rev. W. E. Coquillette, who had taken sixteen degrees, said the law against admitting cripples was not universally carried out. In Canada there were Masons with the right hand gone who could not give the grip; one leg was gone and could not give the proper step. When he was Master of the lodge, he ruled with an iron hand professing to hold the power of King Solomon. If a member appealed against his decision he could gavel him down, or order him out of the lodge. He could prevent the opening of the lodge or close it when he pleased.

Temperance.

The Chicago Woman's Temperance Union.

For some three weeks this society has been holding mass meetings in the various churches with excellent results. At the business gatherings numerous plans have been suggested for the furtherance of the work; among them are, the holding of ladies' meetings in the different divisions of the city, with the hope of interesting larger numbers and the forming of "Bands of Hope" among the youth and children.

The ladies of the West Side have revived their meeting, and hold them for the present, at the residence of Mrs. Case, the president, 580 West Adams street, at half-past two Tuesday afternoon.

On Monday, the 23d, the Union began a series of Gospel temperance mass-meetings, held every evening at the Clark Street M. E. Church, addressed by Mr. Francis Murphy, of Portland, Me., and others. Mr. Murphy is a reformed inebriate and liquor-seller, whose thrilling life experiences are full of important lessons. Hundreds have signed the pledge at many places when he has spoken in the city and suburbs.

M. A. B.

The National Woman's Temperance Union met at Cleveland week before last, and held an interesting and useful meeting. The following among the many ways suggested for pushing their work:

1. Frequent temperance mass-meetings.
2. Careful circulation of temperance literature in people's homes and in saloons.
3. Teaching children in Sabbath-schools and public schools the ethics, chemistry, physiology, and hygiene of total abstinence.
4. Offering prizes in these schools for essays on the different aspects of the subject.
8. Seeking permission to edit a column in the interest of temperence in every newspaper in the land, and in all possible ways enlisting the press in this reform.
9. Endeavoring to secure from pastors, everywhere, frequent temperance sermons and special services, in connection with weekly church prayer-meetings and Sabbath-schools, at stated intervals, if they be only quarterly.
10. Preserving facts connected with the general subject and with our work in temperance scrap books, to be placed in the hands of a special officer appointed for this purpose.

The formation of branch unions in every town, temperance coffee rooms, anti-treat leagues, juvenile temperance societies, etc., is recommended. All needed information will be given to any lady applying to the secretary, Miss Francis E. Willard, of Chicago.

The Chicago Union has issued a strong appeal to their sisters from which the following is taken:

OF THE PLEDGE.

If nobody would drink, then nobody could sell.

1. We intend to circulate the total abstinance pledges as fast and as far as our facilities permit, seeking to secure signatures "for life," but taking them for any length of time, however brief.

We have a special pledge for women, involving the instruction and pledging of themselves, their children, and, so far as possible, their households; banishing alcohol in all its forms from the sideboard and the kitchen, and enjoining quiet, persistent work for temperance in their own social circles.

OF THE ANTI-TREAT LEAGUE.

"Come, let's take something together," has been to thousands the key-note of destruction. We are laboring for the organization of a league which shall enroll as members those who, though not yet ready to sign the pledge, are willing to refrain from "putting the bottle to their neighbor's lips" by pledging their honor that they will neither be "treated" nor "treat."

We would hereby announce that our Union has been, and will gladly be, a medium of communication between people in the country and their friends in the city, who drink or who are inclined to form the habit of drinking, by means of which good influences, set in motion by the former class, may reach the latter. Also, through the woman's unions now organized all over the country, we will try to help those who need help, in other towns and cities, if their names are sent us, with a request to this effect.

Home missionary work, preaching the Gospel to the poor, private visitation of those who drink and those who sell, we have engaged in to some extent, and contemplate still further, our aim being to go in a spirit of prayerful and helpful kindness.

We are profoundly convinced that there is one basis only on which we can safely rest our cause; that this basis is the people's consciences, and that, to this end, those consciences must be active and enlightened. We have neither observed nor experienced anything so effectual in securing this result as the Gospel of the world's Redeemer, brought into vital contact with men's hearts. We are, therefore, most of all intent upon a deeper Christian experience for ourselves and for all round us. We pray, and we will labor most, for a general revival of religion, knowing that in this is to be found the sure solvent alike for indifference and opposition. To this end we shall hold meetings for prayer at frequent and stated intervals, and we shall accompany our plans and work in all of their details by earnest petitions for divine help and guidance.

Miss F. E. Willard is president of the Chicago Union with head quarters at 148 Madison St.

Jottings from the New York Field.

Dear K:—On Monday, Nov. 2, I left home for Pittston, Pa., on my way to Wilksbarre, to attend the meeting of the North-eastern Pennsylvania Association. Resting with some relatives at Pittston, until Wednesday morning, I then went on to Wilksbarre, where I met those true and tried friends of our cause, A. L. Post, the two Callenders, S. E. Miller, J. W. Raynor, McDougall, W. B. Bertels, and others, who had come up to assist in forming a State organization. Our meeting was held in the Free Methodist Hall, commencing at 2 o'clock, of Wednesday. The afternoon was devoted to the work of the N. E. Association,—appointing committees, hearing reports from various parts of the State represented, These reports showed that work was being done in various directions, and that the dense darkness was in many places receding before the light our friends were disseminating. We had delegates from the northern part of the State, from near Philadelphia, and from as far west as Pittsburgh. In the evening I spoke of Masonry as a modern anti-Christ to an attentive, but not very large audience. The craft was represented, but listened in silence to the evidence drawn entirely from their own authors, of the heathen and anti-Christian character of the loved institution. from which I deduced the proposition that no man could be intelligently a Mason, and at the same time a Christian. Given the facts as to the teaching and tendencies of speculative Freemasonry and the above proposition calls for no proof or argument.

On Thursday morning, after an hour spent in devotional exercises, the question of organizing a State Association came up for consideration, when after a general expression of opinion, it was unanimously resolved to enter upon that work; which occupied the most of the remainder of the day.

Rev. A. L. Post, for many years the able and efficient President of the Free Mission Society, was chosen to preside over the infant Association. Vice-presidents were appointed for some fifteen or twenty counties, as represented or heard from. Bro. N. Callender was made the Corresponding Secretary; Rev. J. W. Raynor, Recording Secretary; and W. B. Bertels, Treasurer.

After this work was done it was resolved as soon as possible to put a State Lecturer into the field, and before I left for home two-fifths of the sum required was subscribed, and on or before the first of January I think Pennsylvania will be up and dressed for hearty co-operation with the States already at work.

Thursday I again took the stand and gave to a good audience satisfactory reasons why a Mason intelligently adhering to his oaths cannot be a good and safe citizen in a republican government. I had the closest attention of my hearers, and believe conviction was fastened on many minds, hitherto ignorant of the nature of Freemasonry.

The Free Methodists in whose hall we held our meetings are a live body of Christians who are making their mark in that secrecy-bitten city; and are growing, notwithstanding the radical position they have taken against sin's popular and unpopular. Bro. Bertels is their leading man, and, though perfectly fearless and outspoken, is doing a magnificent business, and making money which he uses freely for God's cause. I spent one night in his hospitable home, and was delighted and refreshed with the spirit of genuine piety so manifest in his household.

At the close of our Thursday evening meeting we separated, feeling, as we gave the parting word, it had been good to be there. The Association of North-eastern Pennsylvania still lives as an efficient auxiliary to the new State organization. I spent the Sabbath with Bro. Nathan Callender, preaching for him twice, and much enjoying my visit to this Anti-masonic church which has done and suffered so much for our cause. Attending their covenant meeting on Saturday afternoon, it was my privilege to rejoice with them in the act of restoring to their fellowship, at their own request, of a deacon and his wife, who had gone out from them on account of the position taken by the church against secret societies. Thus is God blessing and vindicating the church for its noble stand against the lodge.

Monday, Nov. 9th, late in the evening I reached home to snatch a few hours of rest; but 6 o'clock on Tuesday morning found me leaving the Central Depot en rout for Pendleton, Niagara Co., to attend and address the Niagara Co. Association. I arrived in good season at Lockport, where I was met and cared for by Rev. D. B. Douglas, president of the Association, who took me in his buggy, some four or five miles or more to the house of a Bro. Dunkelberger, who with his wife and family made me feel at home with them. Evening found us at the Free church, a mile and a half away, where a goodly number of the neighboring friends were met to give us a greeting and a hearing. As usual, quite a sprinkling of secretists were present, who listened to my remarks. The day following, the forenoon was occupied in devotional exercises and the business of the Association, which now has nearly 200 members, who by their quarterly meetings, and in other ways, evidently "mean business." But few were present from abroad, which was perhaps well, as in our evening meetings but few more could have found a place, and it was a local hearing we most desired. I spoke again in the afternoon and evening to congregations whose eager attention is so delightful and encouraging to a speaker who feels that he has something important to say. Many young men were in the house on both evenings, and the breathless attention they gave me augured ill for the success of Masonic effort to entrap them in the jaws of the lodge.

This meeting was felt by the brethren to be a success, though so many were missing we had hoped to see. This body is a live one and is doing much good in its locality. After closing up its business, the Association adjourned to meet in the city of Lockport, in February next, giving the writer a unanimous invitation to meet with and address them again.

While waiting for the cars in Lockport, I called at a barber's shop, and while being shaved learned that our tonsorial friend had formerly lived in Batavia, and had well known Mrs. Morgan, after her husband's abduction. While sitting there an old gentleman came into the shop, who was introduced to me as a Mr. Richardson, who sat as a juror on the Morgan trials. In the short time I had with him I drew from him some reminiscences of those times which were quite interesting. He was a personal friend of Sheriff Bruce, and often visited him while in jail. Should I visit Lockport in February, I hope to see more of these old veterans, for there are more of them there. But I must stop now. J. L. Barlow.

Samuel Hale at Berea, O.

Berea, Cuyahoga Co., Ohio, }
Nov. 21, 1874. }

Dear Cynosure: Mr. Samuel Hale, of Mallet Creek, Medina Co., delivered two Anti-masonic lectures in this place this week, which were well attended. A choir of ladies and gentlemen, with violin and melodeon accompaniment furnished music.

Mr. Hale proved that the claims of Freemasonry were false, that it was neither a free, ancient, honorable, benevolent, Christian, or republican institution. He read extracts from the oaths, penalties and lectures in Eld. Bernard's "Light on Freemasonry," showing they were so qualified as either to mean nothing at all, or else the reverse of what Freemasons claim. His apt illustrations caused frequent cheers by the audience, which, if not large for the place, was an attentive one. That his hearers were well convinced of the truth of his assertions, was proved by the eagerness with which they rushed forward at the close of his lectures to receive tracts and Anti-masonic books. About fifty of the copies of the Cynosure, which contained Eld. Bernard's speech at Syracuse, were also distributed, and were not enough to supply the demand. Mr. Hale received near $8.00 for books; large share of them were purchased by students from abroad, so that the influence will not stop here, but will be spread far and wide. May it never stop until every secret oath-bound society shall be crushed out of existence, is our prayer. L. B.

Correspondence.

Convention Correspondence.

President S. B. Allen, who was expected to address the Illinois State Convention on the subject "Have we a Cause?" sent the following letter, which glows with a holy enthusiasm that must effect all who read it:

Westfield, Ill., Nov., 17, 1874.

Prof. C. A. Blanchard,

Dear Bro:—At the last, I am compelled to abandon my cherished hope of mingling with my co-laborers in a cause that holds fast to my heart, in the coming convention opposed to secret societies in Chicago.

I need not detail the considerations that have dictated my reluctant decision not to go there. Suffice to say they are imperative. I do earnestly hope that, besides myself, not another soldier in this warfare shall be kept from fulfilling his purpose to be present. I also greatly desire that a goodly number may be found possessed of this purpose, so that strength, encouragement, and zeal may be mutually ministered and disseminated.

We have a cause, as I should have endeavored to set forth as the subject lies in my mind. When, as oft times it happens, the mire seems deep and tough, and the wheels of this reform roll very heavily, I again and again, as a means of personal re-assurance raise and consider the question, "Have we Cause?" Doing so, I never fail to find the old conclusion "Yes, a cause we have—one, which though far from affording ease, credit or emolument, is laid upon all thorough-going lovers of truth, by an iron necessity." Considerations of religion, patriotism, society, family—all unite and blend into one, and while they prophesy of conflict and sorrow, they also utter sure prophecy of ultimate victory. God bless you and the convention, and the cause! Yours truly,

Saml. B. Allen.

El Paso, Ill., Nov. 4, 1874.

Chas. A. Blanchard, Secy. N. C. A.,

Dear Sir: Was glad to hear from you by yours of the 15th of Oct. Delayed a reply immediately to your invitation to be present at the sittings of the Convention in Chicago on the 18th and 19th, hoping that something might occur by this time so that I could give favorable reply. But I am sorry to say that the reverse is the case.

The reform the N. C. A. is engaged in is one that has had my sympathies and prayers and partly labors for the final consummation of its object over forty years. So convincing have been my convictions of the evils of secretism, not only by practiced knowledge in receiving and practicing the three first degrees of Freemasonry in early life, but the light that has been shed upon its anti-Christian proclivities for the past three years has very much tried my Christian sympathies and fellowship, if not my patience, for churches that retain in their membership such as disobey the plain injunction of Scripture; such as, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," and then yoke up with them under the most profane oaths and barberous penalties and meet on the level alike with the vile and wicked and part on the square with the same; when the command is, "Wherefore come out from among then, and be ye separate saith the Lord." It seems to me that this point of the reform is not made as prominent and as strenuously insisted upon as the prosperity of the reform demands. A coming out from idolatry and idolitrous practices and a confession and remuneration of all wrong doing, is what Jehovah has required of the children of men in all ages of the world and especially so of this chosen people. Yet, under the full light of the Gospel as it shines in this nineteenth century what winking at sin, what straining at gnats and swallowing of camels by the professed church of Christ, as it appears to me to gain the applause and support of the ungodly and the unsound in faith and practice to assist them pecuniarily in their denominational strifes and jealousies! And this I think is particularly applicable to my Baptist brethren with whom I have identified my interest, in supporting our principles by a "thus saith the Lord." To my amazement we exclude from our membership a brother or a sister who for conscience" sake feels it his or her privilege to identify their interest with another denomination of Christians whom we consider evangelical, and retain another who has gone into the fold of the Masonic delusion and permitted himself to be strippped of his clothing, hoodwinked, cable-towed, and be led (like a bruilt to the slaughter) to the Masonic altar and there take upon himself profane and wicked oaths. . . .

Where, my dear sir, do my Baptist brethren find a " thus saith the Lord" for such kind of practice as this? As Baptists, we are in the habit of withholding the privilege of a seat at the communion table from the brethren of other denominations free of Masonic oaths, and of known piety and usefulness in the kingdom and patience of our dear Redeemer. This, I think, we are warranted to do by the teachings of the Bible. But not for the admission of another believer, though a Baptist, who is loaded down with all the vileness and wickedness of Masonic obligations and oaths, holding himself amendable to their requirements even to secret crimes, if committed to him as secrets, murder aud treason accepted in one oath, and in another, not accepted. It seems to me, sir, that my Baptist brethren, if they were to admit either, it would be the former.

Hoping and praying that God may be with you and bless you in your deliberations and doings at the Convention, that it may prove a great success, I remain, yours truly,

WM. A. BARTLETT.

OUR MAIL.

Peter Wood, Marine City, Mich., writes:

"My wife and I prize the Cynosure above all other papers of a religious character. We lend the paper around and talk to all we come in contact with on the evils of Freemasonry."

J. L. Benton, West Chazy, N. Y., writes:

"Yours for exterminating war upon sin wherever found; in light or darkness, church or state, purple or sack-cloth."

P. Davidson, Wiota, Wis., writes:

"Your paper with me is a household necessity."

Jacob Rasor, Lockington, O., writes:

"I am trying to get subscribers and petitioners. I am doing all I can."

W. W. Dunbar, Elkhart, Ind., writes:

"This town is overrun with the secret orders. There are two Masonic lodges, one Odd-fellows, two Good Templar lodges and one Royal Arch Chapter."

P. McWilliams, Greenfield, O., writes that he wishes some lecturer would give them a call, and that he gives his paper to his neighbors to read.

Artemas Bassett, West Chazy, N. Y., writes:

"I like your paper very much. I think its moral standard is splendid. I never belonged to any secret organization, and I stand opposed to them all. Two years ago a number of guards were to be appointed to the State's prison. They were all Masons or appointed through the influence of Masons."

W. P. Hunter, McAlvey's Fort, Pa., renews his subscription, and writes:

"I feel as though I should be posting myself so as to be able to put on the whole armor and go out and meet the enemy."

Rev. Edward Ebbs, Plainfield, Ill., wrote about a week before the Illinois State meeting as follows:

"If compatible with a prudent regard for health I will gladly attend. A protracted fever brought me very low, and I am but partially restored. The process of recuperation demands primary attention. If not present, this will be the reason. Whether present or absent my heart is with the Association in its efforts to promote a right public sentiment respecting secret societies."

A. D. Tomlinson, Bloomingdale, Ind., writes:

"I have been encouraging the reading of the Cynosure in these neighborhoods, and have sent copies to more remote parts and thereby have increased the circulation. We have no organization here as yet; and we have had no public lecture. We have made some efforts in that direction. The grange and politics preceding the election, together with the great cause of temperance, absorbed the public mind of Parke county. Perly Mitchel and I have been watching for the most propitious time to move for an organization. He has recently moved to Terre Haute so I miss him, but he will continue to use his influence. He is an anti-secret man."

Enoch Honeywell, Atlay, N. Y., writes:

"I got your package of blank petitions. Got some names and will do my best. Have given the non-voting one and blank Cynosure subscription paper to a good working Mrs. Clark, of Scio, N. Y., who says she will do good service with both. Please send one or two more non-voting blanks for women and minors. Most who have seen that for voters, if endued with fair self-respect, have signed it."

William Davis, East Trumbull, O., writes:

"Most all the clergy and the leading church members (principally) are Masons and Odd-fellows, and the other portion of society are afraid to be found reading anti-secret literature."

We often receive information like the above. We hope it will lead all our readers to pray and labor more faithfully.

Silas Waldron, Norfolk, N. Y., writes:

"I find a good deal of satisfaction in reading your paper and books. I have given my paper to some of my neighbors, it takes very well, yet we have a strong Mason element here. . . . Our preacher does not believe in it, yet for fear of losing some of his salary he says not a word against it. May the good Lord have mercy on us."

Richard McClelland, Canonsburg, Pa., writes:

"Our borough is completely under the control of Masons; and in the country they hold a balance of power. A representative for the State legislature, a nominee of the Republicans here, was defeated in consequencc of his being an Anti-mason; and further, I regret to say that with regard to those not directly in league with Masons and Odd fellows, that with them there is a contemptible neutrality. We need a lecturer."

Wm. Banks, Phoenixville, Pa., writes:

"I take pleasure in forwarding the renewal of the paper of Alexander Russel, who is an old subscriber and a zealous man in the cause of the Cynosure. He is poor and advanced in years, but still at his daily work—a blacksmith. Our earnest Bro. John Jones went to the meeting at Wilkesbarre and was greatly edified. We are intending to have Bro. Post here to lecture in the cause soon."

Philip Bacon, Wheatogue, Conn., writes:

"I get the papers from three of my neighbors when they have read them anp mail them where I think they will be likely to do good. When I meet parties from different points, I try and get the names of those whom I think best to send the paper to. I keep a book expressly for this purpose. I got names in Massachusetts one day last week and hope to send papers; and hope that some of them will become subscribers. I hope by the first of next month I shall have more time to devote to this work. I intend to give two or three weeks steady work."

We have one friend in Indiana who has obtained over eighty subscriptions since last December, and intends to make the number one hundred before the year is out. And then he says 'for another hundred.' We judge Mr. Bacon intends to do as much. We hope God will stir the hearts of all our Christian and patriotic readers as they have opportunity to "do likewise."

Henry E. Oakes, Elkhart, Ind., writes:

"Times are very close, yet I cannot afford to lose a single copy of the Cynosure. I will do all I can to put the paper in the hands of every intelligent person."

J. H. Wilcox, Howell, Mich., writes at the time of the Illinois State meeting:

"I would have been pleased to meet with you to-day. Shall be there in spirit and aid you by my prayer. Our friends here are lukewarm or in fear. We want and must have a State agent. We can and will support him. God bless the Cynosure and may it reach every free man in the land."

Lois B. Smith, Berea, O., writes:

"I have been canvassing for the Cynosure for the last three days. . . . . I met some of the students of Baldwin University who are good Anti-masons. . . And I learned by them that the subject of Freemasonry had been up for debate among them. They had warm times discussing it. I talked with one Methodist Episcopal preacher, who was a Master Mason, and had been a Mason for fifteen years. I asked him if there was not a death penalty attached to the very first degree of Masonry; he said 'I know of no death penalty.' I asked the question three times, varying it a little, repeating the penalty of the first obligation; he denied it three times and said I had accused him of lying, when I only repeated the question to be certain that he understood me aud that he meant what he said. Others admit that but deny something else; their witnesses do not agree as did not those who witnessed agaiust our Saviour. Their own mouths condemn them. We expect to have Anti-masonic lectures next week on Wednesday and Thursday evenings by Samuel Hale. We hope much good will be the result."

Work and pray. The seed you sow will sometime bring forth fruit.

Wm. Troup, Evansville, Ind., writes:

"The new form and arrangement of the paper pleases me exceedingly. I long for its appearance, weekly, and feel greatly disappointed when it does not come regularly, which is sometimes the case."

Mrs. L. C. Andrews, Waupun, Wis., writes:

"I have tried to get subscribers but have not succeeded yet. I let every one that I can read my papers. . . . I will still continue to try to get subscriptions."

Such a persevering spirit will be very likely to succeed.

Frank G. Lohman, Paxton, Ill., writes:

"The cause must live."

E. G. Goorley, Youngtown, O., writes:

"I could not continue my street preaching without the Cynosure."

Thos. Padden, Laona, N. Y., writes:

"Your cause is good, and I would like to advance it if I could. There are a good many friends to the cause, but they are indifferent to its advancement."

Wm. Babcock, Palmyra, N. Y., writes:

"I have, to my sorrow, been drawn by Masons into the law, and have found that they will make up a lie to screen one another. My prayer to God is that efforts put forth may save the church and nation from ruin."

A. C. Read, Albion, O., writes:

"Sickness in my family has prevented me from action in behalf of the best paper in the land, I think. My health is poor at this time. It (the Cynosure) is sought and loved by all in the family."

E. C. Foster, Waitsfield, Vt., writes:

"I live in a town of less than one thousand inhabitants and we have no less than four secret societies with four ministers in town who have all belonged, until recently, to some of these societies. The result has been, just as the interest has increased in these organizations, the religious interest has decreased. Some have become satisfied of the fact."

May the time soon come when all that feel an interest in the wellfare of humanity and the cause of Christ, may see how vain it is to set up worldly wisdom to accomplish only what the Word of God can do."

Rev. H. Elwell, Westfield, Ill., writes:

"I received the 'petition headings' for legal voters, etc., all right. I think this is the very thing we want. This is closing up the ranks and bringing the battle right up to the enemies' works. In the name of our God will we lift up our banners and the batte is sure to be ours sooner or later."

Henry M. Tower, Spencer, Mass., writes:

"Can you not send me a printed list of your subscribers in this State or Worcester county? I want to know who they are, and see if we cannot effect some organization. I am thoroughly in earnest in this matter and believe that a great deal can be done by a few. 'One can put a thousand and two ten thousand to flight.' I should like to have a first class man lecture on Anti-masonry, and have thought as we are on Boston and Albany railroad between Springfield and Worcester, that when on a journey to Boston we might obtain a lecture. I presume I should have to bear all of the expense and I have not a great deal of means; but the Lord will provide."

We hope these words will rouse a joyful response in the hearts of all our Massachusetts readers, and that that State will come up to this work of darkness in a manner worthy of her position in our nation.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

From the palace of the high priest Jesus was lead to Pilate, the Roman Governor. Pilate sent him to Herod (Luke xxiii. 1-12), and Herod sent him back to Pilate. He was examined and declared innocent (Luke xxiii. 14, 15, 22), yet delivered to death. Then followed the mocking, the scourging, and the crown of thorns; "and they led him away to crucify him." Ask your teachers to explain verse 21.

What is the first topic? What name is given to it in Luke xxiii. 38. It is not certainly known why it was called "a place of skulls," nor where it was located; but it is thought to be east of Jerusalem, and north of Gethsemane. What did they offer him to drink? (verse 23.) Read Psalm lxix. 21. They offered it to him to lessen the pain by stupifying him. What name was put upon the cross? (verse 26.) In how many languages was it written? (Luke xxiii. 38.) They did it as a reproach, but God ordered it that his title should be seen. How were his garments divided? (John xix. 23, 24.) The time was nine o'clock.

What is the second topic? Who were crucified with him? (verse 27.) Repeat Isaiah liii. 12. They did this to show their rejection and hatred, and he was placed in the midst as if he was the greatest criminal. What is said in Gal. iii. 13. Did either of the robbers speak of Jesus? (Luke xxiii. 39-43.) Which one did he answer? The cross was a king's throne, and he gave royal favors to this man. What were they? Do you know the verse of the hymn that says,

"The dying thief rejoiced to see"?

How does the cross of Jesus divide the world?

What is the third topic? Who reviled him? (verses 29, 31.) What did they charge him with saying? (verse 29.) What was it he said? (John ii. 19.) What did the chief priests say? (verse 31.) Was this true? Do you think Jesus could have descended from the cross? Why? If he had not died could we have been saved? Read the last part of Gal. ii. 20. What else did they say? (verse 32.) Do you think they would have believed? I do not.

What is the fourth topic? What time was it? What occurred? (verse 33) What other wonders were done? (Matt. xxvii. 51-53.) What cry did Jesus make? (verse 34.) Read Ps. xxii. 1. Why was God's face hidden from him? (Isa. liii. 5; 1 Pet. ii. 34.) If God turned away from his beloved Son, because he stood in the sinner's place, how can a sinner stand before him? What did they offer Jesus? (verse 36.) This was in answer to his cry (John xix. 28.) What is said in Psalm lxix. 21?

What is the fifth topic? The words of Jesus' cry are given in John xix. 30. It was a cry of victory. Why did he die? (1 Pet. iii. 18; Heb. ix. 26.) Now he cries "IT IS FINISHED." This was his last word to the world. He spoke once more (Luke xxiii. 46), and gave up his spirit. What occurred? (verse 38.) This was a symbol. Ask your teachers to explain it. After he died what did they do? (John xix.34.) What did the Roman soldiers say? (verse 39.) What do you say?—National S. S. Teacher.

[From the Anti-masonic Review, 1829.]

THE DIVISION OF FREEMASONS INTO ANCIENTS AND MODERNS.

Madam Panza—"All the world know, as well as my hens, that will not suffer me to tell a lie."

"That I believe," said the bachelor; "your hens are so good, plump, and fat, they would sooner burst than say one thing and mean another."—Don Quixotte.

Far be it from me to insinuate that our Grand Master keeps hens, like a Roman consul, to direct him in his duty; or that he needs even Minerva's bird to admonish him of the beauty of truth.

But our author, pp. 21 and 22, leaves a blank in his discourse, partially filling it with the following in brackets: "[The paragraph which is omitted here, was a quotation from Josephus, relating to a very important circumstance, on which the difference of Free and Accepted, and Ancient Masons, is said to be founded; and which wholly destroys those reasons which the latter give for their difference.] Vide Appendix, Note D."

For one I feel decidedly friendly to the ancient Masons, as distinguished from moderns, and cannot but regret that our Grand Master should have thrown out of his text, a passage from so common an author as Josephus, which would have rectified that delinquency; but the happier they above the 18th degree, who can spell out this passage from the capacious blank referred to in our Grand Master's note D. Seeing he has left this matter in obscurity to all those below the 18th degree, I will venture a word upon the subject.

The late universal division of Masons into distinct and often conflicting fraternities of ancients and moderns, is one of those facts in the history of the craft which must at some time have awakened the curiosity of every brother. The division is now generally healed, and it only remains a subject of curious inquiry whence it originated. But the writings of Josephus have no more connection with it than with the constitution of Lilliput.

The following brief notice of the origin of these Masonic divisions, is given by Preston, "the excellent historian of Masonry," who says, Sec. 6, under the head, Revival of Masonry under King William: "During the following reign, [Queen Anne,] Masonry made no considerable progress. Sir Christopher's age and infirmities drawing off his attention from the duties of his office, [Surveyor of the King's buildings,] the lodges decreased, and the annual festivals were entirely neglected. The old lodge of St. Paul's, and a few others, continued to meet regularly, but consisted of few members. To increase their numbers, a proposition was made, and afterwards agreed to, that the privileges of Masonry should no longer be restricted to operative Masons, but extend to men of various professions, provided they were regularly approved and initiated into the order. In consequence of this resolution, many new regulations took place, and the society once more rose into notice and esteem." See also Smith's Use and Abuse of Freemasonry, p. 60.*

He continues, Sec. 7: "On the accession of George I. the Masons in London and its environs, finding themselves deprived of Sir Christopher Wren, and their annual meetings discontinued, resolved to cement under a new Grand Master, and to revive the communications, and annual festivals of the society. With this view the lodges, (naming them,) the only four lodges in being in the south of England at that time, met at the Apple-tree Tavern, in February, 1717; and having voted the oldest Master Mason then present, into the chair, consituted themselves a Grand Lodge, pro tempore, in due form." This beginning was perfected 24th of June, of the same year, and Anthony Sayer elected Grand Master.

Tannehill's Manual gives the same account of this matter with Preston, pp. 27, 28, &c. to 40. But observe; while in the one part he makes the division into ancient and modern, rise up in 1738 nearly, he adds to the account of the reconciliation in 1813, "Thus, after a separation of one hundred years, was this union completed, and the Masonic fraternity re-united in one family." The division happened then about 1717.

Lawrie, in his learned history of the craft, published in Edinburgh, 1804, and in the Encyclopedia Brittanica, last edition, Art. Masonry, gives Preston's account of the formation of the Grand Lodge, 1717; and makes the division of ancients and moderns spring up 1734 to 1739; the ancients, giving to their adversaries "the odious appellation of Moderns, who, in their opinion, never existed till the year 1717," p. 116. So Lawrie makes the division which broke out in 1734 to 1739, take its rise in 1717.

Smith's Use and Abuse of Freemasonry, published in London, 1785, giving a very full history of Masonry, represents the branch as being public and irreconcilable 1739; but as having existed before. See Smith, p. 72.

The authors here cited, Preston, Tannehill, Lawrie, and Smith, are all Free and Accepted, i. e. modern Masons, and they take nearly the same views of the subject. Now let Lawrence Dermott, the celebrated author of the first Ahiman Rezon, published in London A. D. 1764, and also Secretary of the Grand Lodge of ancient Masons, give his account of this matter. He agrees with the moderns above quoted in respect to the time when the dissension arose; though he differs from them in regard to the attending circumstances.

Being greatly importuned by eminent craftsmen residing in Scotland, Ireland, and America, to give some account of what is called modern Masonry in London; "therefore, (p. 27,) in order to satisfy the importunities of my good brethren, particularly the right worshipful and very worthy gentlemen of America, be it known that the innovation already mentioned, (modern Masonry,) arose upon the fall of a Grand Master, viz. Sir Christopher Wren, who, (as Dr. Anderson says) neglected the lodges. The famous Sir Christopher Wren, Knight, having faithfully served the crown upwards of fifty years, was at the age of ninety ‡ displaced from the employment, in favor of Mr. Wm. B—ns—n, who was made surveyor of the buildings, &c. to his majesty King George the First.

"Such usage, added to Sir Christopher's great age, was more than enough to make him decline all public assemblies. And the Master Masons then in London were as much disgusted at the treatment of their old and excellent Grand Master, that they would not meet, or hold any communication under the sanction of his successor, Mr. B—ns—n; in short, the London lodges were struck with a lethargy which seemed to threaten their final dissolution."

Having spoken of the lethargy threatening dissolution to the London lodges consequent upon the treatment to Sir Christopher Wren, he continues to say, p. 29:

"About the year 1717, some joyous companions who had passed the degree of a craft, (though very rusty,) resolved to form a lodge for themselves in order (by conversation) to recollect what had been formerly dictated to them, or if that should be found impracticable, to substitute something new, which might for the future pass for Masonry among themselves. At this meeting the queston was asked, whether any person knew the Master's part; and being answered in the negative, it was resolved, nem. con. 'that the deficiency should be made up with a new composition, and the fragments of the old order found among them should be immediately reformed, and made more pliable to the humors of the people. It was [among other things] thought expedient to abolish the old custom of studying geometry in the lodge; and some of the young brethren made it appear, that a good knife and fork in the hands of a dextrous brother, over proper materials, would give greater satisfaction, and add more to the rotundity of the lodge, than the best scale and compasses in Europe; and furthermore added, that a line, a square, a parallelogram, a rhombus, a triangle, a circle, a quadrant, a cube, a parabola, a pyramid, a cylinder, a cone, a sphere, a spheroid, frustrums, segments, polygons, ellipses, and irregular figures of all sorts, might be drawn and represented upon bread, beef, mutton, fowls, pies, &c. as demonstratively as upon slates or sheets of paper."

This was the day when Masonry ceased to be Operative and became Speculative.

"There was another old custom that gave umbrage to the young architects, i. e. the wearing of aprons, which made the gentlemen look like so many mechanics; therefere, it was proposed that in future, no brother should wear an apron. This proposal was rejected by the oldest members, who declared that the aprons were all the signs of Masonry then remaining among them, and for that reason they would keep and wear them.

"Amongst other things they seized on the stone mason's arms, which that good natured company has permitted them to wear to this day; for which reason, several of the brethren affect to imitate the operative Masons: And it is pleasant enough to see sixty or seventy men about a little lewis and capstan, &c. erected upon a mahogany platform, all employed in raising a little square piece of marble, which the weakest member of the company could take between his thumb and finger, and throw over the house. (Now masonry became Freemasonry.)

"There are many other unconstitutional proceedings which I pass over in silence; and hope I shall live to see a universal conformity between the worthy masons of all denominations. This is the most earnest desire of

LAWRENCE DERMOTT,
Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons §

*One of the new regulations was an addition to the name of Freemasons. Before this the craft were Freemen, in distinction from bondmen, or villains; and were masons by trade; their whole title was Freemasons. But now, men of various other professions were admitted into the lodges, and were denominated Accepted Masons: and the fraternity has since styled itself, the society of Free and Accepted Masons. These are modern Masons. The ancients reject the term accepted from their address.

‡Wren died 1723, aged 91.

§It is not a little extraordinary that Mr. Hardie, in the new Freemason's Moniter, third edition, p. 49, and following, should be so far mistaken as to suppose that the lodges of America are lodges of ancient Masons. Many of them were so; but all the disciples of Webb and the Monitor, the 500 lodges of New York, are moderns. We shall understand this better as we proceed. The moderns and ancients, it will appear, possesses a different Master Mason's word; that most commonly used in the United States is the word of the moderns; indeed, the word of the ancients, Macbenah, has become common game.

MASONRY AND THE U. S. JUDICIARY.

Isaac Preston, Esq., of Lockport, Ill, wrote an earnest letter on the above subject which was laid before the National Committee, Nov. 28th, 1874. The committee ordered extracts from the letter to be printed, and appointed a sub-committee to prepare and publish the form of a petition to our legislature in accordance with its suggestions. Mr. Preston was a court officer in the Morgan trials, New York, and had his soul harrowed up by the fearful and deliberate perjury practiced by otherwise good men, which made special justice Wm. L. Marcy exclaim from the bench where he sat in those cases: "If men will defy heaven and earth, what can human courts do?" These are portions of Mr. Preston's letter:—

LOCKPORT, Ill., Nov. 27, 1874.

"I refer to the influence of the secret orders on our judiciary. True, the influence of these orders on the church and on religion and mofals generally, is terrible. But their bearing on those precious interests and institutions has, for the last seven years, had a full share of attention from our friends, our organization, and from the Cynosure; while their overshadowing influence on the administration of justice, under our general system of jurisprudence, has been almost entirely overlooked. And now our newly elected legislature meets within five or six weeks, and it seems to me that more than one thousand intelligent petitioners should send to Springfield at the opening of the session, praying for an amendment or an additional clause to our jury laws, making connection with, and adhesion to oath-bound secret orders, rightful cause for challenge where either party is a Mason.

I certainly would not allow a personal friend of mine—being a Mason—to go on a jury where my opponent was a Mason, for the very plain reason that if I have a just claim at issue with my Masonic neighbors, my Masonic friend, the juror, must inevitably commit moral if not legal perjury, either under his Masonic or his civil oath.

I hope, sir, that the committee will adopt measures at the meeting to-morrow favorable to the circulation of petitions on this subject in every part of the State where we have friends to work."

THE LODGE AND THE ROMISH CHURCH.

A valued and influential friend in New York writes us, who is perplexed about our condemnation of the Romish church, which church condemns the lodge. He says:

Occasionally I find in the Cynosure "Notes" like those enclosed, and I am at a loss to understand them. Is Freemasonry the ally of Protestantism and is it to be accepted as such by the great body of Protestant Christendom, and to be depended on to "revolutionize society and reform the church?" No, Protestantism needs no such alliance as Freemasonry, and so far as excluding from its membership the secret orders, the Catholic church takes the same ground of many Protestant denominations, and to censure them for it implies equal censure to the others. In my judgment the conversion of Lord Ripon to Catholicism was due entirely to Freemasonry. As Grand Master of England he had the fullest opportunity to become acquainted with all of its workings. The crimes committed in its name, and the efforts to shield the guilty Mason in detection and punishment, must pass directly before him. He knew full well the duty of the Mason to recognize the Masonic obligation above the civil law.

He could not help but observe its tendency to subvert Christianity, to destroy all civil government, and to undermine the British Constitution. It is not difficult to perceive how he should be drawn to the grand ceremonial of the Catholic worship than to the plain service of the few Scotch Presbyterians who oppose it.

DONALD KIRKPATRICK.

We would say to our honored friend that we have no doubt that there are sincere papists who hate the lodge. But we have as little doubt that the two systems are one in nature, and will ultimately be one in fact.

One hundred and one years ago Jesuitism was suppressed as Freemasonry is by the Pope. But Jesuitism now runs the papacy. And it was the same system then as now, and was working out the same results in society.

The formalist Lutherans who retain man popish rites, are the bitterest foes of popery; and the Greek church, which is more popish than popery itself, hates Romanism most cordially. But for us who believe in Christ and Christian equality, there is nothing for us to do but to oppose what our principles condemn, the mother harlot and all her daughters. An extended analysis of the relation of popery to the secret orders will be given in a future number.

NOTES.

—The secession of Marquis DeGrey and Ripon is a very serious affair for the Freemasons of England. The Grand Lodge of Cheshire regrets it, and wonders if Ripon didn't want a chief place in the Catholic church as he held in the lodge. The Earl of Carnarvon believes the action unprecedented in Masonic history, but it won't pay the Grand Lodge or any other body of Masons to inquire into the case. They can best study the welfare of their order. The London Masonic Magazine deeply deplores the resignation of the Grand Master on every account, but seeks consolation in the fact that "its no use crying over spilt milk," and believes "the least said is the soonest mended." For an excellent opinion of this remarkable case see the letter from Donald Kirkpatrick, Esq., of Syracuse, in another column.

—The appeal from the frontier settlements in Kansas and Nebraska for aid must touch every heart. It is now nearly four months since the dread "reapers of the desert" swept away the harvests of nearly all Kansas, half of Nebraska and portions of other Sates, a district covering nearly 500,000 square miles. The remote location and present winter season demand immediate action. Read the appeal from Prof. Bent and "distribute to the necessities of these poor, as God has given ability.

—D. S Caldwell, Ohio agent, writes of a campaign commenced on Monday evening at Seven Mile, Butler county, to be continued at Millville, Dec., 1st; Hamilton, 2d; on the 3d, 4th and 5th at Germantown, Montgomery county. Arrangements were partly made for meetings last week in Dark and Preble counties. The agent was not notified and was not present. Part of the appointments were filled by Prof. Wright, of the Telescope, and Bro. Dillon of Dayton.

—A desperate attempt to advertise was made the day following the Illinois Convention by a Masonic eye doctor named J. B. Walker. Seeing that an "Hon," J. B. Walker, also "Dr.," was prominent in the convention, the obscure oculist abused the courtesy of all the dailies, by a pretentious explanation of his Masonic loyalty, that he was not the President of the Convention, although his name ha been dragged into bad company. A certain Chittenden, whose name was George, also published himself as not the Chittenden of the Convention whose name was Linus. The scruples of these parties were amusing but natural; they betray a conscience begotten of the lodge.

Is the Pope a Recreant Mason?

[The following refutation of an item which has been widely published and commented on is given for what it is worth. The London paper gives the facts and figures with apparent assurance, and their correctness our information may not deny. But if the writer of the following is so well informed why does he not give the name of the American lodge so that his statements might be verified? It is a Masonic art, skiifully used, to befog and bewilder the opinions of men when directed toward that order. The following seems to have such an intention, but may after all be the correct statement.—ED. CYNOSURE.]

The old story about the Pope having been a Freemason, says the London Tablet, has been going the round of the papers. The first version of it, we believe, was that his Holiness had become a Mason in his youth in America. That was contradicted and disproved. The next allegation was that he had been a Mason at Messina, and application was made to an American lodge—if we recollect rightly, at Philadelphia—to know if this was true. The American lodge communicated with the lodge at Messina, and received a contradiction of the whole statement, which contradiction was made public. The last form which the story has now assumed is that the Holy Father became a Mason at Palermo, in 1826; that the lodge there had, in 1865, the coolness to summon him to answer the charge of having excommunicated his brethren, that is, of having repeated the censures inflicted on that secret society by his predecessors; and that since the enforcement of those spiritual censures against the Freemasons in Brazil, the lodge sent a second and third notification, and proceeded to pass a decree of expulsion. This decree is now published in the official paper of the Freemasons, and bears—in itself a suspicious circumstance—the signature of King Victor Emmanuel, as "Grand Master of the Orient of Italy." But it so happens that the date selected is in itself a sufficient confutation of the story. The young priest Don Giovanni Mastai arrived in Rome from the diplomatic mission to Chili to which he had been attached in July, 1825, and devoted himself immediately to the care of the sick in the hospital of Santo Spirito. He was very shortly appointed Director of the Ospizio dell' Assunta, and soon afterwards of the asylum of the San Michele a Ripa, commonly called of "Tata Giovanni;" and he remained in Rome, occupied with those duties, till he was appointed Archbishop of Spoleto, to which see he was consecrated in May, 1827. It is, therefore, quite impossible that he could have been initiated at Palermo in 1826, and we should not have taken the trouble to contradict so obvious a fiction had it not been that we have received so many letters calling our attention to the statement. It may also be observed that the Masonic decree, or supposed decree, does not give the Christian name of the person alleged to have been initiated, but merely speaks of him as "a man named Mastai Ferretti." It is, of course, just possible that some other member of a sufficiently large family may really have joined the Freemasons at that time and place; but we have no reason whatever for believing that to have been the case.

"THE CYNOSURE is better than ever before" our friends say. Do you ask why? It is, first, because God blesses it. Second, because friends work to enlarge its circulation. Third, because the editors and publishers do their best to keep it constantly improving. Pray for it. Work for it and it will continue to improve.

THE GALAXY.—The December number has articles of value in a sketch of Girardin, the eminent French journalist; of the Siamese monarchy; a presentation of the views of eminent Americans on the duration of the Executive Term, and an analysis of Tyndall's address advancing materialistic views. THE AMERICAN INDEPENDENT, published by J. T. Walsh, of New Berne, N. C., is a continuation of the "Quarterly" by the same publisher. The first number for the new volume is prepared in good style, and contains interesting communications on the lodge question. The principles on which the new journal proposes to be conducted are excellent, and I recommend it to all Christians. It holds the New Testament to be the rule as Christ is the head of the church; that all human institutions of a moral or religious character are counterfeits; that lodge rites are pagan; that the Church of Christ is the only institution by which the world can be made lastingly better; and that its officers should be Scripturally qualified. $1.00 per year; address J. A Thanksgiving Offering.

While there is an abundance in the older settled regions of our country, there has never been a time when there was such an utter destitution of food and raiment among our poorer people on the frontier. The immense immigration of those seeking homesteads in western Minnesota, Nebraska and Kansas for several years past, and the total destruction of the main crops this year by the ravages of the locusts, makes a call that every benevolent heart must respond to.

At the best, the pioneer has for years a hard lot. He is usually in moderate circumstances or poor, and, after a long journey, he enters upon an unbroken prairie and has his house to build, his horses and cattle to shelter, his well to dig, and the tough sod to break, and, if everything is favorable, he has in the average, a megre crop of corn and vegetables. In a majority of cases, being at a very inconvenient distance from R. R stations and mills, he is compelled to expend much time and money in procuring things necessary in making a home. He has also to guard with ceaseless vigilance against raging prairie fires. If now, as in the present season, there comes a visitation of locusts, (styled by Pliny, Pestis irae deorum), and every green thing is eaten up, so that fat and fruitful autumn becomes in a few hours lean and desolate winter, what can men in their situation do? To leave their families in a vain search for employment would be full of hazard to those left behind. There are no old residents near who have cribs full of corn. Even the buffalo and antelope have left their but recent haunts, and this resource is in a great measure gone. They are fellow countrymen, willing to work, and to develop the resources of our land. They have made a manly endevavor to gain an honest living, and by no fault of theirs they are confronted with cold, nakedness and, in cases not a few, with starvation.

As then we give thanks to God for his bounty to us, let us not forget to gladen the hearts of those whose present hopes have been suddenly blighted and whose position is one of anxiety and suffering. Let us reach forth a helping hand to relieve those who need and who deserve a generous assistance.

The region devestated is from the British Dominions to New Mexico, over a thousand miles, and several hundred miles in breadth. In the counties near the Missouri River, the growth of early crops which were sound, and a partial corn crop, since the locusts came in later, will prevent great distress. Should then statements appear, that, in certain localities within the older settlements, the crops were fair, this would not really conflict with the general statement that on the frontier the loss is nearly total.

The vicissitudes of 1874 have been exceptional. In 1871–2 crops were abundant. In 1873 they were fair. This year the spring was late, but the promise of early summer was never surpassed. In July and August excessively hot and dry weather prevailed. The Indians in western Nebraska and in the Indian Territory south of Kansas showed signs of hostility in the summer. This for several weeks greatly alarmed the people on the extreme front. Early in August the locusts came and staid about a month. In September there were most abundant rains over the whole State. In the average over six inches of rain fell. The ground was completely saturated and never was there a better fall for seeding wheat. Grass started with great rapidity and an open and warm fall has done much to alleviate the distress. A general liberality of the R R. companies in loaning seed wheat to the destitute has occasioned an unwonted energy in sowing fall grain. In the gloom of desolation, hope revived. A more desolate body of men never put forth their best energies to repair their losses. Somehow a wintry six months must be provided for. They must be helped or they will starve. Who will not gladly do his part? The railroads have offered to carry donations free. With proper care things sent may be so consigned as to reach the really needy. The staff of life was never more abundant, let us not stand by and see our countrymen perish for want of it.

Lectures for California.

In conference with Bishop Weaver, I received the assurance that he will aid the friends of our reform on the Pacific coast by speaking at three or four prominent points, if arrangements were made by the friends for him to do so. This will be good news to our friends, and I trust they will avail themselves of this providential opening to secure the services of so efficient and able a helper. The Bishop will be in California May 7th, 1875, and we shall hope to hear from friends in that State, and to aid in perfecting arrangements in detail. J. P. Stoddard.

Rev. H. H. Hinman, with the assistance of others has planned a lecture campaign on the Illinois Central Railroad. He wishes to give a lecture or course of lectures during the week, commencing Nov. 30th, in LaSalle, Peru, Tonica, and Lostant; the week commencing Dec. 7th in New Rutland, ElPaso, Normal, and Bloomington; the week commencing December 14th (or sooner) at Heyworth, Decatur and Pana; the week commencing Dec. 81st (or earlier) at Patoka, Sandoval, Sparta and Salem; the week commencing Dec. 28th (or earlier) at Irvington, Richview, Mattoon and Milton; the week commencing Jan. 4, 1875, (or earlier) in Champaign, Paxton, Loda, and Onarga; the week commencing Jan. 11 (or earlier) in Chebanse, Manteno and Peotone.

The expense of lectures given in this regular way would be much less than if given with no order; and in places where the friends of this cause are few and not able to raise much money, if they provide a place for the lecturer to speak in and entertain him while in the town and pay his railroad expenses, it will be all that is necessary in order to secure the lectures. Yet it is hoped, in most places, they can raise something towards paying the agent's salary besides.

Be sure to have the notice of his lecture or lectures (if he arranges for more than one) given out in every church in the place, and also on the Sabbath before he speaks and also published in the local papers a week before hand.

"Give, and it Shall be Given unto You."

A pilgrim at my door,
With weary feet and sore,
In faltering tones asked food and alms one day;
Alas! no wealth had I,
The cruse was almost dry,
A handful only in the barrel lay.

Sadly I answered. "No;"
Slowly he turned to go,
When down the path there came a bounding tread,
With face of heaven's glow;
"Take this," was murmured low,
"A cup of water and a crust of bread."

Grateful the pilgrim smiled
Upon that angel child;
"The Saviour own and bless thee, precious one!
Then to my wandering ear
These words seemed whispered near
In tones seraphic; "This to me is done."

Again with peaceful look,
His course the wanderer took;
I saw him pause beside a rich man's door;
A youth with noble air,
Came forth with luxuries rare,
And in his hands a silver goblet bore.

"Rest, stranger, here," he said;
"My father's table spread,
Invites the hungry to its plenteous store."
Again that heavenly voice.
"Thine shall be wisdom's choice;
There is that scattereth, but increaseth more."

Quick on my throbbing heart,
There fell a sudden smart;
Not mine the joy of giving here below.
Once more that blessed strain,
"No seed is dropped in vain;
The smallest to a sheltering tree may grow."

"Weighed in the balance just,
Earth's treasures are but dust;
The scattered crumbs, the tears that pitying fall,
With richest gems shall shine
In beauty all divine;
For love receives each gift, and hallows all."

The Death of John Bunyan.

One wet night in August, 1668, there rode up to the house of John Strudwick, on Snow Hill, a man of some fifty-nine years, whose clothes were soaking wet. The greeting between the two men proved that they were old acquaintances, and that a bond of more than ordinary friendship existed between them. The stranger's face was that of a man of undaunted resolution; there was a certain dreaminess about the expression of the eye. His hair was iron grey; and there was a yielding of the frame as of a man who had long passed the prime of his days. Since this man did duty as a soldier at the siege of Leicester he had passed twelve years in prison, and the chief product of that imprisonment was the Pilgrim's Progress. It was John Bunyan who was the guest of John Strudwick. In all probability several days elapsed before John Bunyan showed symptoms of illness. During that interval he sent a sermon upon a broken heart to be printed at the Hand and Bible, on London Bridge, and revised a few of the proof-sheets himself. But before the whole sermon was in type, he was laid up with fever, caught through riding in the rain on the day of his arrival in London.

For ten days Bunyan lingered, waiting "for the good hour" when the post should "come from the celestial city." During this time he conversed with his host, and the friends who visited him, upon sin, affliction, repentance and coming to Christ, prayer and kindred topics. Fragments of this conversation ware committed to writing by Strudwick, and afterwards published.

When his friends spoke with him about the strangeness of his affliction, he replied, "The Lord uses his flail of tribulation to separate the chaff from the wheat. The school of the cross is the school of light: it discovers the world's vanity, baseness and wickedness, and lets us see more of God's mind. Out of affliction comes a spiritual light."

Some one asked his advice about prayer, and he replied, "When thou prayest, rather let thy heart be without words, than thy words without heart. Prayer will make a man cease from sin, or sin will entice a man to cease from prayer. Pray often, for prayer is a shield to the soul, a sacrifice to God, and a scourge for Satan."

When the Sabbath came, and he heard the bells of St. Sepulcher's ring ing for divine worship. his thoughts were filled with the sanctity and glory of the day. "Have a special care to sanctify the Lord's day," he said to those about him, "for as thou keepest it, so it will be with thee all the week long. Make the Lord's-day the market for thy soul; let the whole day be spent in prayer, repetitions, or meditations; lay aside the affairs for the other part of the week, let the sermon thou hast heard be controverted into prayer. Shall God allow thee six days, and wilt thou not afford him one? In the church be careful to serve God, for thou art in his eye, and not in man's. Thou mayest hear sermons often, and do dwell in practicing what thou hearest; but thou must not expect to be told thee in a pulpit all thou oughtest to do, but be studious in searching the Scriptures and reading good books. What thou hearest may be forgotten; but what thou readest may better be retained. Forsake not the worship of God, lest God forsake thee, not only in public but in private."

As his illness increased, his mind recalled the old days of prosecution, and the friends with whom he used to meet "I have often thought," he said, "the best of Christians are found in the worst of times; and I have thought again that one reason why we are no better, is because God purges us no more. Noah and Lot,—who so holy as they in the time of their afflictions; and yet who so idle as they in the time of their prosperity?"

Day by day he thus talked with those who sat beside him, and John Strudwick was always near to jot down his words.

When he was near death, his old enemy, the devil, began to plague him. Turning to those near, he told them, "As the devil labors by all means to keep out other things that are good, so he strives to keep out of the heart (as much as in him lies) the thoughts of passing through this life into another world; for he knows if he can but keep men from the serious thoughts of death, he shall the more easily keep their sins." Then, as in a moment of sudden inspiration, he cried, "O sinner, what a condition wilt thou fall into when thou departest this world, if thou depart unconverted! Thou hadst better have been smothered the first hour thou wast born; thou hadst better have been plucked one limb from another; thou hadst better have been make a dog, a toad, a serpent, than to die unconverted. This thou wilt find true if thou repent not."

As the pilgrim drew near to the edge of that river which he had described as one that was very deep, and over which there was no bridge, he obtained a glimpse of the land upon the otherside; and shaking off for a moment the lethargic fever, he told those around his bed "of the joys of heaven." "There is no good in this life," he cried out, "but what is mingled with some evil. Honors perplex, riches disquiet, and pleasures ruin health, but in heaven we shall find blessings in their purity, without any ingredient to embitter, with everything to sweaten them. O! who is able to conceive the inexpressible, inconceivable joys that are there? None but those who have tasted them. Lord, help us to put such a value upon them here that, in order to prepare ourselves for them we may be willing to forego the loss of all those deluding pleasures here. How will the heavens echo their joy when the bride, the Lamb's wife, shall come to dwell with her husband for ever! Christ is the desire of nations, the joy of angels, the delight of the Father;—what solace then must that soul be filled with that hath the possession of him to all eternity! Oh, what acclamations of joy will there be when all the children of God shall meet together without fear of being disturbed by the anti-Christian and carnal brood! Is there not a time coming when the godly may ask the wicked what profit they will have in their pleasure, what comfort in their greatness, and what fruit in all their labor? If you would be better satisfied what the beautiful vision means, my request is that you would live holily, and go and see."

There followed disjointed exclamations, by which it was supposed he contrasted the joy of the saints with the agony of the damned. His last recorded words were—"Saints in the world to come." Then John Bunyan entered the river; and those who watched presently knew that he had passed over to the other side.

He died August 17, 1688, and was buried in a vault belonging to Strudwick, in Bunhill Fields.

Up to the present time nothing whatever beyond his name, his trade, and his residence, has been known of Strudwick,—only this, that John Bunyan died at his house.—From "Hare Court."

He that has the happy talent of parlor preaching has sometimes done more for Christ and souls in the space of a few minutes, than by the labor of many hours and days in the usual course of preaching in the pulpit. Our character should be all of a piece, and we should help forward the success of our public ministrations, by our private addresses to the hearts and consciences of men where Providence favors us with just opportunity.—Matthew Henry.

God's Little Whiles.

These "little whiles" of God, do they comfort us as God meant they should? or do we look one another in the face, wondering and saying, what is this that he saith? For faith's and comfort's sake, let us seek the meaning and the consolation of God's "little whiles." The mystery of the "little while" is a legacy to the universal church. Christ's discourse on his second coming, in Matt. 24, certain passages in the Epistles, and the closing words of Revelation: "Behold I come quickly," may all have had, and will have their influence in awakening and keeping alive this, the sweetest hope that the church can cherish—the little while of human life. "For what is your life? It is even as a vapor that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away." Whence this doleful confession of human frailty, that man, made in God's image, gifted with God's reason, heir of God's immortality—fades from existence like a summer cloud. The Scriptures declare, "Our days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle; our years are spent like a tale that is told." Man is "like the grass withered by the heat so soon as it is sprung up, his days are an hand breadth." We are really living by the day. We are born every morning, we die every night, and with the dreadful uncertainty that any day may intercept our plans and dash our hopes. We are impressed with the brevity of our days, not so much from their absolute fewness, as from our constant liability and exposure to death.

Look at the "little while" of earthly sorrow. "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment." Surely, he is a stranger to human grief, who thus can speak lightly of life's woes. But listen to his own confession. "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one, thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day have I been in the deep, in journeyings often, in perils of water, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness; besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches." So far, then, from being a novice, he is an old veteran, battle-scarred and tried. But by what magic scale does he weigh such momentous experiences, that he can call them "light afflictions?" By what unknown standard of time does he guage their continuance, that they seem "but for a moment?" His afflictions were not light in themselves. There were times when, to use his own language, he "was pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that he despaired of life," but whenever the heavy sorrows of life bore down the scale he threw into the balance a weight so mighty that the beam was instantly reversed, and that weight was the eternal weight of glory.

Paul's public life was by no means brief, and during the whole period he might well say, "I die daily." As the weight of glory made the affliction light, so the eternal weight of glory made it seem but for a moment. It was then, from the time view of the eternal, that Paul looked upon life's woes, and felt they were only for a "little while."

Rightly estimated and improved, our afflictions are of greatest mercies. They are the credentials of sonship, they are seals of the divine love, and in proportion as we strive, with God's grace, to become partakers of his holiness, shall we find the world sinking in the distance, and ourselves poised on wings of faith, and rejoicing God's time-view, estimating earth's painful hours by the eternal standard, and comforted by the thought that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us. From the remote ages of that eternal future we shall look back and see our entire earthly life, to be but a point, a speck in our immortal career.

To you, my fellow soldiers, I have these words to say: These are not times for fainting, these are not times for idling. All the world is active, the wheels of commerce are revolving at a greater rate than ever; everywhere events march with a giant stride. We have seen what our fathers dreamed not of. Now, if ever, the church of God ought to be awake. The demands of souls require our utmost diligence, the enemy is active in deceiving, we must be active in instructing and saving now, by the precious blood of Christ, who bought us. O ye believers in Christ, bestir yourselves,—if indeed ye be legitimately born from above, if the blood divine be in your veins, and if ye be soldiers of that great Captain, who unto death strove against sin; and if we expect to wear the white robe and wave the palm of victory. In the name of the eternal and ever living God, seek ye his Spirit and the divine energy, that ye may labor yet more abundantly and faint not.—Earnest Christian.

The Guesses of Scientists.

Scientific men are continually pushing back the limits of our knowledge of the material universe. They have during the last eighty years made an enormous addition to the sum of that knowledge, but they have not, since Democritus, taken away one hair's breadth from the mystery which lies behind. In fact, their labors have in many ways deepened this mystery. We can appeal confidently to any candid man to say, for instance, whether Darwin's theory of the origin of life and the evolution of species does not make this globe and its inhabitants a problem vastly darker and more inscrutable than the Mosaic account of the creation. Take, again, the light thrown on the constitution of the sun by the spectroscope; it is a marvelous addition to our knowledge of our environment, but then, does it not make our ignorance as to the origin of the sun seem deeper? No scientific man pretends that any success in discovery will ever lead the human mind beyond the resolution of the number of laws which now seem to govern phenomena, into a smaller number; but if we reached the limit of the possible in that direction to-morrow, we should be as far from the secret of the universe as ever. When we have all got to the blank wall which everybody admits lies at the boundary of experimental evidence, the philosopher will know no more about what lies beyond than the peasant, though the peasant will probably do then what he does now—people it with the creatures of his imagination. If a philosopher in our day likes to anticipate that period, and hazards the conjecture that matter lies beyond, he is welcome to his guess, but it ought to be understood that it is only a guess.—The Nation.

Confession of Faith.

To confess Christ, is to confess what is our faith in him. As the creed is not and cannot be the rule of faith, but is it confession merely, so the Bible, because it is the rule of faith, is of necessity not its confession. The Bible can no more be any man's creed than the stars can be any man's astronomy. The stars furnish the rule of the astronomer's faith; the Principia of Newton, may be the confession of his faith. If a man were examined as a candidate for the chair of astronomy in a university, and were asked, "What is your astronomical system?" and were to answer "I accept the teachings of the stars." The reply would be, 'You may think you do—so does the man who is sure that the stars move round the world, or who finds that they are not orbs, but 'gimblet holes to let the glory through.' We wish to know what you hold the teachings of the stars to be? Do you receive as in harmony with them, the results reached by Copernicus, by Galileo, by Kepler, by Newton, by La Place, and Herschel, or do you think the world one great flat, and the sun and moon mere pendants to it?" "Gentlemen," replies the independent investigator, "the theories of those astronomers are human systems—man-made theories. I go out every night on the hills, and look at the stars as God made them, through a hole in my blanket with my own good eyes, not with a man-made telescope, or fettered by a man-made theory; and I believe in the stars and what they teach me; but if I were to say or write what they teach, that would be a human creed, and I am opposed to all creeds." "Very well," replied the examiners, "we wish you joy in the possession of so good a pair of eyes, and feel it unnecessary to go any further. If you are unwilling to confess your faith, we will not tax your conscience with the inconsistency of teaching that faith, nor tax our own with the hazard of authorizing you to set forth, in the name of the stars, your own ignorant assumptions about them."—Krauth.

As for you, whose hearts God hath weaned from all things here below, I hope you will value this heavenly life, and take one walk every day to the New Jerusalem.

It has been the glory of the great masters in all the arts, to confront and overcome; and when they have overcome the first difficulty, to turn it into an instrument for new conquests over new difficulties.

Children's Corner.

Deeds of Charity to the Poor.

BY D. F. NEWTON.

"Go visit their homes; go witness their grief,
And listen to misery's plea;—
Beholding them desolate, offer relief
Of the bounties which heaven gives thee;
Provide for their children, whose shivering forms
Plainly tell how they suffer 'neath winter's bleak storms."

Little boys and girls, do you think of the poor, these hard, chilly times—how much they suffer with cold and hunger? In our cities, fuel is dear, clothing is dear, provisions are dear. Some poor people have scarcely a shelter, much less a comfortable place to lay their heads, and are ready to perish for lack of fuel, food and raiment. Some children are left fatherless, motherless, penniless, without any to provide for them; no one to care, either for their bodies or souls. Do you think of this, young friends?

Have you a heart to pity, a tear to shed, a dime to give? Are you provided richly with the comforts of life—a good house to live in, plenty of food and raiment, parents and friends to care for you? Above all, have you the blessed Bible, to guide you to life eternal? And are you thankful? Who gave you these blessings—distinguished you above the miserable, suffering, and often degraded poor? God? Yes, God—and what does God say? "The poor ye have with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good." "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry, himself, and shall not be heard." "Blessed is he that considereth the poor." Do you hear this, little folks—what God speaks? Should not every one of you say, from the bottom of his heart:

"The Lord is kind and good to me,
And very thankful I must be;
He clothes my back and makes me warm,
He keeps my bones and flesh from harm.

"He gives me bread and milk and meat—
All, all I have, that's good to eat.
Oh, let me not forget the poor,
Who beg their bread from door to door.

"Who have no fire nor meat, nor bread,
And scarcely where to lay their head.
The Lord is good and kind to me,
Kind and good, O may I be."

"I was a stranger, and ye took me in; I was naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

"Be thine the joy that angels know,
Who visit oft the abodes of pain,
With interest list to tales of woe,
And bid the dying live again."

A Little Deed but a Good One.

Little Ellie found a thirsty flower by the side of her path. She thought it needed water, and so she went with a big pitcher and poured a little stream gently upon it. It was a very little thing to do, and yet it was a very good thing. If the flower had not had some water, it might have drooped and died, but when the water fell upon it, it revived and grew, and all the summer long it sent out sweet perfume and showed bright blossoms that pleased everybody that looked at it.

A great many good deeds are just as simple as this. It is the kind words and bright smiles that make some people happy often. They are worth more, sometimes, than great speeches or rich gifts, and any little boy or girl can give them.—Apples of Gold.

Two Hints Worth Taking.

1. Never attempt to do anything that is not right. Just so surely as you do, you will get into trouble. Sin always brings sorrow sooner or later. If you even suspect that anything is wicked, do it not until you are sure that your suspicions are groundless.

2. When you do attempt anything that is right, go through with it. Be not easily discouraged. Form habits of perseverance. Yield not to sloth and sleep and fickleness. To resist all these will not be easy, but you will feel that you have done right when you get through.—S. S. Visitor.

Gypsies.

Who and what the Gypsies are, whence they came, and what tongue they speak, have been questions that have engaged the attention of learned men for three hundred years, the first specimen of Romanny having been printed as long ago as the year 1597 by a writer who thought the Gypsies were Nubians. They have been called, besides, Egyptians, Copts, Tartars, and Bohemians; but the English Gypsies call themselves the Sons and Daughters of Rom. They first appeared in England near the end of the fifteenth century, roaming about in bands, and encamping by roadsides and in lonely places. The women told fortunes, as they do now; and, as they are now, the men were tinkers, basket-makers, and braziers. Soon it was observed that the presence of a Gypsy tribe caused a murrain among pigs, whose dead bodies their women would beg; the poultry-yards were thinned, horses disappeared, and after the fortune-teller had left the house small articles of value were apt to be missed. It was suspected, too, in the time of Elizabeth, that they harbored Roman Catholic priests, and for some years a great and terrible persecution was carried on against them. The persecution has long ceased, but the manners of the people have not changed; they roam still from place to place, they live in tents, they speak their own tongue, they obey no laws, the women still tell fortunes, the men still make baskets. They are harmless and gentle enough as a rule; they do not intermarry with the outer world, and they scorn to be confounded with the vagabonds and hawkers, whose evil doings have been but too often set down to their account. —Advance.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. John E. Todd, of New Haven, is writing a life of his father, the late Dr. Todd, which will be published in the spring.

—Both, Governor-elect Tilden and Mayor-elect Wickham are members of Madison Square Presbyterian church of New York.

—There is reported an increase since 1871 of 204 Congregational churches, and 17,161 members, making an annual gain of 5,720. The increase in benevolent contributions in 1874 over 1871 is $259,260; the sum of $1,213,816 was reported for 1873. There are supported by the Congregational churches seven Theological Seminaries, with a total of 327 students.

—The Russian Government has refused to allow the American Bible Society to circulate Scriptures in the Armenian and Ararat dialects among the Georgian subjects and other Armenian Christians in the Southern provinces. Meanwhile the sacred volume is eagerly bought by these Russian Armenians from traders who have smuggled the books across the border.

—A Thanksgiving service was conducted by Rev's. Goodwin, Kittredge and Gulick of the 1st Congregational, 3d Presbyterian and Am. Reformed churches of this city with their united congregations, last Thursday. The three pastors made brief remarks and the opportunity for members of the congregation to offer prayer or remarks was well improved. A generous collection for the western sufferers was taken up.

—The American Messenger gives the following summary of religious destitution in our country: "Arizona has about 10,000 souls, and no Protestant church. Idaho, as large as New York and Pennsylvania, has 15 000, and but five living churches, three of them in one town. Utah, with 25,000 souls, reports but 300 members in all the evangelical churches of this immense territory. Over Texas, a State equal in size to fifty-five such States as Connecticut, vast destitutions are found; and so in many other States and territories not here named, not to speak of the freeman of the South, the Chinese of the Pacific slope, and the thousands in Texas, New Mexico, and California, using the Spanish language, and without a Protestant ministry." This is a truly alarming spiritual condition and should lead to more fervent prayer and earnest effort through the various means now in operation for evangelizing American society.

—The International Lesson Committee have already been in session over the lessons for 1876. They met Nov. 5th in New London, Connecticut. There were present the Rev. Drs. Vincent, Hall, Randolph, Chapin and Newton, and Messrs. Tyng, Tyler, Jacobs, Haven, Gillett and McCollum. The Rev. Mr. Gibson only was absent. The lessons for the first quarter of 1876 cover the Monarchies of Saul and David; the third quarter takes up Solomon, a few lessons from Proverbs and one from Ecclesiastes; the second and fourth quarters are confined to the acts of the Apostles. The lessons are being adopted in all parts of the United States by all denominations. They are in use Europe, and are translated into nearly all the languages represented by the American Board of Foreign Missions.

—The change in the character of the leaders of the sceptical attacks on Christianity since the last century is thus noted by the Interior: "One especial reason why the moralities should be observed, is the fact that the leading assailants of Christianity are men of good repute. The church cannot afford to tolerate moral laxity. Once the name of Voltaire and Paine stood for infidelity, and they were men of known looseness of morals. How strong the contrast herein between them and Jonathan Edwards, Baxter, Bunyan, and the other great lights of their day! But now the leading skeptics are Prof Tyndall, Herbert Spencer, Dr. Buechner, and Prof. Huxley, and going back a little, Mill, Comte, Kant, and Theodore Parker. In a moral point of view their reputations are good. Never was there such need as now that the church should exemplify the ethics of the Bible. Infidelity will prevail in proportion as sentimentalism is accepted as a substitute for principle."

—The Rev. S. H. Kellogg, Reformed Church Missionary in India, alludes in a recent letter to a striking testimony to the truth of the Scripture account of the fall of man. In the Himalayas, the customs and religious ideas of the people are all evidently of an age long since gone by to the people on the plains. In this region of ancient and undisturbed traditions and beliefs, he found the people strongly addicted to serpent worship, and frequent sculptures on the temples representing the man, the woman and the serpent—a group familiar to our minds as to theirs.

THE GRASSHOPPER FAMINE.—The Daily Champion, of Atchison, Kansas, publishes from advance sheets of official reports made to the State Board of Agriculture some statistics showing the destitution existing in several of the frontier counties of the State. Seventeen counties, in which an aggregate of 158,000 acres had been planted in corn, did not produce a bushel of this cereal. Five of these counties produced an average crop of wheat, rye, oats, barley and buckwheat, and are abundantly able to relieve any individual case of destitution in their midst. The other twelve counties, having an aggregate population of 23,000, are all on the remote frontier, and the settlements in them have all been made within three years. The eight in which the greatest destitution prevails have all been populated within the past year or two, and the greater part of their population settled within their limits either last spring or the preceding fall. These eight had an aggregate population of 17,000 settlers, who generally had their first crop planted. They had expended all of their means in building their houses and putting in their crops. Drouth and grasshoppers wrought a total destruction of everything they had planted, leaving them entirely destitute. They are without either food, clothing or fuel to sustain them until they can produce something on which to live, and must be sustained by the charitable contributions of the people in other sections of the State and country at large. The Champion computes the number of destitute in the State at from 20,000 to 25,000 many are located in the older countries.

Home and Health Hints.

HOW TO START A FIRE.—All housekeepers have sometimes realized the difficulty of lighting a fire in a still, damp morning, when the chimney will not draw, and vigorous blowing proves ineffectual. Science explains the trouble as "caused by the difficulty encountered in overcoming the inertia of the long column of air in the pipe or chimney, by the small column of air that can be forced up through the interstices of wood and coal, at the bottom of which the fire is kindled." This may be remedied by first lighting a few bits of shaving or paper placed upon the top; thus, by the heated air forcing itself into the chimney and establishing there an upward current, the room is kept free from gas or smoke which is so apt to fill the room, and the fire can then be lighted from below with good success.

NICE WAY TO COOK CHICKEN.—The following is highly recommended: Cut the chicken up, put it in a pan, and cover it with water; let it stew as usual and when done, make a thickening of cream and flour, adding a piece of butter and pepper and salt; have made and baked a couple of short cakes, made as for pie crust, but rolled thin, and cut in small squares. This is much better than chicken pie, and more simple to make. The crust should be laid on a dish, and the chicken gravy put over it while both are hot.

FLOUR BALL FOR INFANTS' FOOD.—Take one quart of good flour; tie it up in a pudding bag, so as to make a firm, solid mass; put it into a pot of boiling water early in the morning, and let it boil until bed-time. Then take it out and let it dry. In the morning peel off from the surface and throw away the thin rine of dough, and with a nutmeg grater grate down the hard, dry mass into a powder. Of this from one to three teaspoonfuls may be used, by first rubbing it into a paste with a little milk, and finally by bringing the whole to just the boiling point. It must be given through a nursing-bottle.

An excellent food for children who are costive may be made by using bran-meal or unbolted flour instead of the white flour, preparing it as above directed.

LEMON CUSTARDS.—Beat the yolk of eight eggs till they are as white as milk, then put to them a pint of boiling water, the rines of two lemons grated, and the juice sweetened to your taste. Stir it on the fire till thick enough, then add a large glass of rich wine and a half a glass of brandy; give the whole one scald and put it in cups to be eaten cold.

Farm and Garden.

Windows in Horse-Stables.

A German paper states some curious facts relating to the position of windows in horse-stables, and their power to effect the eyes of horses. In one instance the horses of a farmer fine animals celebrated for excellent condition, were kept in a stable lighted only by a small window at one side. When light was needed for work, the door was temporarily left open; the result was that nearly all of these animals had eyes of unequal strength, and in time a number of them became blind on the side toward the window.

Strong light directed in the horses' faces has been found to weaken the sight. The worst position of all for a stable window is in front of the horses and much higher than their heads. An officer had bought a perfectly sound mare from a gentleman whose stable was lighted by windows at the rear of the stalls. The animal was sound and perfectly satisfactory. After three months she became suddenly "ground-shy;" on examining her eyes they were found directed upward, and this was explained by the fact that the windows of the officer's stable were situated above the head of the stalls, the eyes being generally drawn in that direction. She was removed to another stall, where the light was admitted from all sides, and in three months' time the difficulty had disappeared.—Western Rural.

Cabbages as a Field Crop.

The New Albany, Ind., Ledger gives the following facts about cabbage raising in the vicinity of that city:

The average size of the cabbage field of each is four acres, few cultivating less, and many cultivating as high as five acres. At 10 000 cabbages per acre, each man would cultivate 40,000 heads. On the bottom between this city and Bridgeport, there are about fifty-five cabbage fields of the size named, employing as cultivators, in one capacity or another, not less than 400 persons. Upon each of these fifty-five fields, an average crop of 40 000 cabbages is produced, making the total crop upon the entire bottom between New Albany and Bridgeport, 2,200,000 head—an immense product of 250 acres of land, about the amount cultivated in the vegetable. This immense crop of cabbages is nearly all shipped South. Shippers purchase cabbages of the farmers by the barrel. Each barrel contains from twelve to twenty-five heads, as to the size. The average price during the season has been $2.00 per barrel.

PROTECTION OF IRON FROM RUST.—The following mixture is stated to be an excellent brown coating for protecting iron and steel from rust:—Dissolve two parts crystalized chloride of iron, two parts chloride of antimony, and one part tannin, in four parts water, and apply with a sponge or rag, and let dry. Then another coat of the paint is applied, and again another, if necessary, until the color becomes as dark as desired. When dry, it is washed with water, allowed to dry again, and the surface polished with boiled linseed oil. The chloride of antimony must be as nearly neutral as possible.

HARNESS POLISH —For good harness polish, take of mutton suet, two ounces; beeswax, six ounces; powdered sugar, six ounces; lamp-black, one ounce; green or yellow soap, two ounces; water, one half-pint. Dissolve the soap in the water, add the other solid ingredients, mix well, and add the turpentine. Lay it on the harness with a sponge, and polish off with a brush. The same blacking ought to answer as well for boots and shoes.—Journal of Applied Chemistry.

TENDER-FOOTED HORSES.—An old man who has had much experience in handling and dealing in horses, for more than half a century, said to me recently that he had never known a horse to get tender-footed, that was kept loose in a shed or yard, or in a box stall; that, turning round and treading with their forward feet in the manure kept them constantly moist and soft. His theory appeared perfectly reasonable to me. I have no box stalls, but I use shavings for bedding, and, every morning, with a large shovel, I move the wet shavings under the horse forward in front of and under his forward feet, and then the last thing at night, cover these with dry shavings for him to lie on. He also remarked that he had never known a flat-footed horse but was a great worker.

REVIEW OF THE EVIDENCE

CONCERNING THE

MURDER OF ELLEN SLADE.

Masonic attempt to clear the Murderer Samuel L. Keith.
The Chicago Journal refuses to publish the Coroners Statement.
Judge Whitney's reasons for renouncing Masonry, etc.

TO BE CONTINUED.

The record of the Lodge had been produced to convict me of falsehood by showing that the Lodge had voted me five dollars; that allowance was admitted by the accusers, and proven by several of their own witnesses to have been made in this wise; I presented my bill for $18 against the Lodge, and asked its reference to the finance committee, the course that all bills and accounts must take; the Lodge refuses to refer it; I then withdrew the bill; at the next meeting of the Lodge I was not present, and S. C. Gooding, one of my bitterest enemies, moved that I be allowed the sum of five dollars, which was voted, and no doubt intended as an insult, as my bill was a reasonable one. At the next meeting of the Lodge I presided, and when I ordered the reading of the minutes of the last communication, the Secretary informed me that the record was not made up, and wished the reading dispensed with, and I so directed; this was the last communication of the Lodge that I attenden, and so of course I knew nothing of the allowance until the record was produced on this trial; and the allowance was made without a reference to the finance committee, and without my knowledge or authority.

2d. I admitted that I had renounced the jurisdiction of Belvidere Lodge; and indeed, they had no jurisdiction over me, as I was a member of the Grand Lodge and amenable to that power only.

3. "Has stated Charter recalled in consequence," &c. Of this the Chairman remarked that he did not think it worth while to consume time, as it was hardly supposable that the Grand Master recalled the Charter on account of the worthiness of the members.

4th. "Improper allusions to obligation," &c. It was proved that I said that Masons were under solemn obligations, and the exception was to my exposing the facts that we took obligations. I proved by their own witnesses that Grand Master Taylor said, "that amounted to nothing, for the world knows we have obligations.

Of other charges, they stood pretty much as we begun with them—I have generally admitted them with qualification, and give notice to justify. Brother Fuller then stated that he had been informed by one of the committee that they had determined to remain until I returned form Kane County, to give time for a thorough investigation; and now wished to know if that was the determination of the committee. They answered "that it was," Brother Fuller then proposed an adjournment, and stated that before entering upon the defence we wished to make some remarks that would take up considerable time. The committee urged us to introduce a witness or two as it was not late; I told them that my witnesses, except Mr. Horace Robinson, had left, supposing they would not be called upon that evening.

They then urged us to proceed to the examination of Mr. Robinson, which I did reluctantly, as I was unwilling to commence the defence at that late hour, and when it was certain that we could examine but one witness. As soon as Mr. Robinson was called to the stand, the Chairman informed us that the committe were in possession of a letter purporting to have been written by Mr. Robinson, and directed to the Grand Lodge, that they would like to have him look at; he looked the letter over, and said he had written and sent it to the Grand Lodge. They then asked him if he stood by that letter and reiterated its contents; he told them he did; they then ordered it read. They asked him if any one directed or aided him in getting up the letter; he answered that they had not, and that he wrote it without the advice or knowledge of any one.

This letter complained of the bad conduct and gross immorality of members of the Lodge; and of their improper conduct in reference to the murder of Miss Slade, and especially of the Sheriff for filling the panel of the Grand Jury. And so in every stage of the proceedings, it seems as if the committee were intent on keeping me in the dark until a favorable opportunity presented itself to take me by surprise; and now brother Robinson became the subject of brow-beating and abuse by my accusers, and after Mr. Fuller had tried for some time to examine him in the midst of constant interruption on the part of my accusers, which was not rebuked nor checked by the committee, I asked brother Fuller to permit me to pursue the examination, which he did, and I soon found that I had not only my accusers to contend with, but the committee also.

The whole of them leading off from the question I would put, breaking off with inquiries as to the anti-Masons excitement I had got up, &c. I arose and asked the committee to permit me to pursue the examinations of my own witness in my own way, that my object was not to disprove by this witness that there was an anti-Masonic excitement here, but to justify several of the charges to which I had plead guilty. Here the committee seemed unanimous in the intimation that no justification was admissible for charging a brother with crime, in the presence of "outsiders," nor for taking any other measures to guard against assassination, then that of keeping out of the way. It is, perhaps, useless to detail more particularly the conduct of the committee on this trial; any one who is tolerably acquainted with the history of the Inquisition, can form a very correct opinion of it. It was now nearly 11 o'clock, P. M., and a motion was made to adjourn until Friday morning. I asked the committee if I was to understand that I was to have only until Friday morning to return, without contingencies. The Chairman, Lieutenant Governor McMurty, replied, "certainly not, we are here at the expense of the Grand Lodge, to give this case a thorough, full and fair investigation. and you shall have a fair chance for your defence, but we want you to get back as soon as you can." I then told them that I could return by Friday 4 P. M., if the case came as set, on Thursday. The accusers then handed in the names of, I think, eighteen more witnesses, and requested them summoned to appear on Friday. The chairman then asked me for a list of my witnesses, that they might be summoned during my absence. I replied that hey all knew it was impossible to tell when the cause in Kane county would be tried, and I did not want my witinesses summoned until I knew when I could use them, and that there should be no delay on my part, for my witnesses would attend on a moment's notice. The committee then adjourned.

The trial of Dr. Woodward could not be reached on Thursnay, and Friday about half-past 10, A. M., he came into court and plead guilty, and the witnesses were discharged. The cars left at half-past 7, and consequently I was obliged to wait until the train of the next Saturday morning. I arrived at Marengo, twelve miles from Belvidere, thethen western terminus of the Rail Road, at 1, P. M., and as I was stepping off the cars, I met the committee, I asked Mr. McMurty if they were on their return; he said they were; I asked him what they had done since I left; he answered "nothing of course." I then asked him if I was to have no chance for my defence; he said they should report the evidence to the Grand Master, that they had taken; and said I must take mine, and forward it to the Grand Master as soon as I could. The conduct of the committee before I left home, had fully prepared me for this, or any villainy that they might perpeteate against me.

I was satisfied that they would hold, 1st. "That no Mason has a rignt to expose a brother Mason's crime: 2d. That the greater the crime, the stronger the obligation to conceal it: 3d. That a Masonic Lodge has the power of life or death over its members: 4th. That if a member is aware of his intended assassination, he has no right to employ any means of safety other than his own physical force, or keeping out of the way.

I reached home Saturday, 15th, at evening, and Monday morning I called on brother Fuller, S. W., and then acting Master of the Lodge, and inquired of him if the committee had authorized him to issue subpoenas to my witnesses, and to preside at taking their testimony. He informed me they had not, nor to his knowledge, conferred that power on any one. Upon enquiry, I ascertained that after I lelt for Kane County, the committee called brother Robinson before them, and to an account, for the letter he had written, and for the testimony he had given in my favor, and suffered him to be made, for hours, the subject of vituperation and abuse by my accusers; and that the committee had been busy with the complaints, picking up every thing they could against me, after my absence, and that they had taken S. A. Hurlbut's statement in writing to report as evidence against me, notwithstanding they knew that all the complaints were in his handwriting, and that he was regarded as the ringleader in this whole affair. And yet, at the depot, in Marengo, they assured me that in my absence they had "done nothing in the matter, of course."

After carefully considering the whole matter, I was satisfied that it had arrived at the stage, that, from the beginning, I had anticipated; and concluded that I was now sufficiently "imbued with the spirit of anti-Masonry," and that for good cause shown by the "High Authorities of Masonry."

On the 19th of November. four days after the committee left, I forwarded to the present Grand Master, Thomas J. Pickett, the following renunciation:

Most worshipful, for personal reasons,

1st. Because I publicly pledged myself, in my speech at the Court House, to ascertain if the high Authorities of Masonry countenanced in its members a violation of the laws of the land, by protecting and screening a brother from the punishment due to crime; and that if I ascertained such to be the case, I would publicly declare it;

2d. Beause, in violation of the solemn assurance of our lamented late M. W. Grand Master, that no new charges should be entertained against me without my having due notice thereof, charges have been received and entertained by the Grand Lodge, or their committee, against me, without date, but referring to matters that have transpired since my defence to all the charges of which I have received notice, was forwarded to the Grand Lodge, and of which said last charges I had no notice, nor even intimation, until the moment I was called upon by the committee to defend myself against them;

3d. Because the committee of the Grand Lodge, viz: Lieutenant Governor McMurty, Rev. C. Howard, and Rev. Wm. B. Linel, (the last substitute for Judge Caton), after arriving at Belvidere, on the 10th, November 1851, organized at about 9 P. M., and continued in session until after midnight, engaged principally in settling preliminary questions, and reading the charges against me; during which they did not treat me with candor and fairness;

4th. Because, notwithstanding it was then and there made manifest to the said committee that this entire community was cognizant of the facts that Belvidere Lodge had in the bosom of its membership, as well as worthy members and men of sterling worth, those too corrupt to be held and countenanced as worthy members of society at large, and said committee evinced no disposition to correct the abuses of the Lodge. nor even to administer reproof to those whose conduct was, and had for a long time been, subject of public scandal.

That the book is one of great interest and value is shown by the following

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abdnction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;' "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abducted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS, in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

A RELIGIOUS UNDENOMINATIONAL FAMILY JOURNAL,

Devoted to Reform in Church and State.

Opposition to Secret Societies the Prominent Object.

A LARGE 16-PAGE WEEKLY, AT $2.00 PER YEAR.

Secret societies swindle men out of their money, their freedom, and their religion. Their despotic rule is now felt in all our cities, towns and villages.

The Christian Cynosure teaches that God alone is Lord of the conscience and hath left it free from the doctrines and commandments of men. That Christ is the only law-giver and the bible the only law in religion. Hence all attempts to bind the conscience even to good, by secret and intimidating or solemn oaths, pledges and ceremonies, are impious rivalships of the religion of Christ, and when salvation is promised by the human rites and precepts of such "orders" they are substitutes for the atonement, and attempts to cut the only connection between man and his maker.

It maintains that secret centralized societies are in their nature different from, and opposed to popular government, and that their oaths and extraordinary obligations should be suppressed by law, and that foresworn men are disqualified for jurors and unfit to legislate or execute laws for a free people.

Valuable miscellaneous, family reading; children's department; religious and general news; market reports, etc., etc. are found in every number.

During the past year the Cynosure has been greatly enlarged and improved in every respect.

It is mailed weekly to subscribers in thirty-two of the United States, five territories and also to Nova Scotia and Canada. It is sent to 1,994 different post-offices, hence it is a valuable medium for advertisers.

Will you not within the next month send us at least two new subscriptions? Will you not make a present of the paper to some friend? In this way you may honor God, bless mankind and promote the kingdom of Christ.

As stated in the paper, we gladly pay twenty per cent. cash, or twenty-five per cent. in books, as commission for new subscriptions and one-half these rates for renewals. We want honest agents in every town.

If it is impossible for you to give this matter your personal attention, can you not find some one else who will enter on the work at once? Hoping soon to hear a cheering report of your progress, we are

Yours truly,

EZRA A. COOK & Co., Publishers,

No. 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago

To persons who are not acquainted with the Cynosure the following recommendations may have weight. We select them from among the hundreds of unsolicited words of appreciation which come to us from the East, West, North and occasionally from the South.

Prosperity and increasing power:

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—"Nothing could you have done at the Cynosure office to make its friends and foes alike behold and wonder at its prosperity and increasing power, than by securing its enlargement. Thanks both to you and the dear Lord." ED. AM. WESLEYAN.

Altogether beyond value:

ENGLEMAN'S MILL, Mo.,—"In my humble estimation its (Cynosure's) value is altogether beyond value, at the present time. I take it not for my own especial good, but for the good of others. I shall try and increase its circulation." J. W. THOMPSON.

The Cynosure, an emancipator:

CLYDE, O.,—"I do believe that every man should read the Cynosure, whether he be a Freemason or not: for I verily believe that their are hundreds of men who have been entrapped in the cursed institution who would come out if they knew just how to get out and save their lives. I think if they could read the Cynosure it would help them very much in getting free from the terrible slavery under which they are living." REV. C. HELPER.

"The verdict of a man who has read the paper for five years:"

ULRICHVILLE, O.,—I have been a reader of your paper for five years, and I assure you that I have never seen its equal for independence and truth."

Job. W. Gatchell.

A friend from Canada:

CANNING, Ont.,—"I am, dear sir, glad to know that you are willing to stand erect and in the face of such a mighty mouldering evil as Masonry, and "cry aloud and spare not."

I have been shockingly alarmed at the tendency secret societies has to supplant the church. Yes, the church—the institution against which Jesus Christ, of Nazareth, says, "The gates of hell shall not prevail."

J. S. RIDDLE.

Popular in the family:

MT. CHESTNUT, Pa.,—"Send me your 'burning, flying Roll' for another year. I did not know my time was out till I received the last number I hardly see the tab on the wrapper from one year's end to another. Wife and children are so anxious to read the Cynosure, it is torn open on sight."

JOHN A. DODDS.

The healthiest paper on the face of the earth:

YORK, Pa.—"As the Cynosure is now greatly enlarged and improved, and by far the healthiest paper on the face of the earth, I think it should have the largest circulation of any paper "in the known world."

"A steady increase of circulation:"

CASTILIA, Iowa.—"The future has never looked so bright. Honest thinkers begin to see that the principle of secrecy is wrong, and that the little secret societies feed the large ones as truly as the little fish feed the big ones. I predict for the Cynosure the most brilliant career of any paper in America." Rev. M. S. Drury.

"Has no equal in the world:"

Coucil Bluffs, Iowa,—"I am so highly pleased with the dear Cynosure that I can never do without it. It comes regularly and is full of interest and truth. It has no equal in the world."

Conrad Zorbaugh.

A help to pastors:

Butler, Ind.,—"I think the Cynosure is the best paper in the United States. I cannot keep house and succeed in the ministry without it." Rev. W. O. Dinius.

What a pastor in Maine intends to do:

POWELL, Maine,—"I expect to get many more subscribers soon. . . . The roads have been so bad that I could not get about before. I shall do all I can for the Cynosure."

REV. J. S. RICE.

From a friend in Minn:

EAST CASTLE ROCK, Minn.,—"With great joy and satisfaction, I received and read your enlarged paper, and my heart goes out for this great work.

CONRAD STEGNER.

"Spread all over the south:"

MOBILE, Ala.—"Your paper ought to be spread all over the South, for our poor South with almost all its Christian ministers is in the hands of secret societies. Hoping that the noble cause you are battling for will finally, with the help of our Lord Jesus Christ, be victorious in every State of the Union. I remain, etc." H. G. SAUER

"A strong desire for enlightment about Masonry:"

WHEATOGUE, Conn.—Since I have been reading the Cynosure (three months) I have become very much interested in the subject, and feel a strong desire to be more enlightened in regard Masonry, as I am satisfied that it is the cause of much that is evil in our community. There has not been within my remembrance any public opposition to the craft, and they have had much their own way both in church and state. PHILIP BACON.

A friend from Nebraska:

HARVARD, Nebraska.—"The Christian Cynosure is a very good paper. . . .It gives my doctrine exactly. I am opposed to all secret societies for I really think they are the ruin of many men." DANIEL BERMOND.

From a friend in New Hampshire:

FISHERVILLE, N. H.—"I think it (the Cynosure) ought to be read by every family." BETSY G. ELLIOT.

A Christian paper:

SULLIVAN, Ill.—"I like the paper better than before the change. I think it is one of the most consistent Christian papers I have become acquainted with." S. B. MCCLELLAND.

From a Friend in Iowa:

MT. VERNON, Iowa.—"I prize this paper so that I cannot afford to miss one number. You may count on me for a life subscriber."

BENNET CHALFANT.

The best paper I can get hold of.

COLLEGE SPRINGS, Iowa.—"I have been reading the Cynosure for the year past and I like it very much I feel as though I could not do without it. It is the best paper that I can get hold of. I think it is just what the people all need to stir them up." J. P. JOHNSON.

"From a friend in Tenn:"

HOME, East Tenn.:—"I feel that your cause is the cause of God, and I wish to keep in hearty sympathy, and, as God gives me strength and opportunity, in active co-operation with it."

PROF. P. S. FEEMSTER

"From a friend in Wisconsin:"

DELEVAN, Wis.:—"My health is poor and my age seventy-three, but I have sent you over thirty subscribers since you commenced your paper. I took the American Baptist from first to last. I have not found any paper that filled its place, as the Cynosure."

J. E IRISH

"From a friend in Vermont:"

BROWNINGTON, Vt.:—I am pleased with the Cynosure and feel the importance of the work in which it is engaged. . . . J. A. GIBSON.

"Eager to read the Cynosure:"

OZARK, O.—There are dozens who are as eager to read the Cynosure as hungry wolves to flay a sheep. . . . I do not think my bread would taste good or digest well without the Cynosure." H. H. LINGO.

"The paper first class:"

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—"The paper is now first class; and merits the hearty support of every one disposed to patronize sound literature and to have the morals and politics of the country settle upon a proper basis."

REV. WM. OBURN.

Known by the company it keeps:

MORRISON, Ill.—"Truly papers as well as persons are known by the company they keep. The most firm, fearless, self-sacrificing Christians are the most permanent supporters of the Christian, Cynosure."

MRS. S. B. ALLEN.

Will the Cynosure be out of Debt by the first of January?

If all our readers who have a "4" on their labels will send us their renewals and pay what they owe; if our friends send us all the renewals and new subscriptions they possibly can, we think the Cynosure debt will be canceled by the first of January.

One warm friend in Peoria says that for every subscription he can obtain in that city of one dollar, he will pay the other dollar and have the paper sent for one year. This he does for the sake of having the paper widely read, and put on a paying basis.

A Mason (who was better than Masonic principles) said to Mr. Sam'l French, of Chapin, Illinois, that he would give one dollar towards sending the paper to a man in the grasshopper region if Mr. French would pay the other. The offer was accepted and the subscription in this way renewed.

No one can appreciate the value of the Cynosure more keenly than an honest, Christian man who has been swindled and degraded by the false and sinful institution of Freemasonry. Hence we hope to find many friends like this one entending the circulation of the Cynosure.

Who will be the next to send money to pay for some subscriber who is struggling against poverty as well as against sin.

Please work in every honorable way to free the Cynosure from indebtedness and to enlarge the subscription list.

Topics of the Time.

The readiness with which sympathy takes on the more substantial forms of charity gives a silver lining to the cloud hanging over the stricken frontier. The business centers were first reached and first responded, and now the churches and societies, which do not practice sham benevolence, throughout the interior are acting with commendable zeal. The supplies going forward will with careful distribution relieve immediate want; but it must be repeated until spring. Ladies Aid societies must keep this in mind. The winter season setting in promises plenty of cold days to remind us of suffering neighbors in the shanties and dug outs of Kansas and Nebraska. Let us as individuals and churches be blessed through their poverty.

While gaunt famine yet hovers on the Western praries another field awaits her ravages in Pennsylvania. Avaricious coal operators are combined to reduce the miner's wages, which have a basis graduated to the price of coal, while throughout the country this price ic advancing. Their greed is met by the jealousy of the two Unions to which most of the miners belong, and between the two the poor operative is ground into poverty and death. Another strike among the iron workers of Pittsburgh, with neither justice nor hope on their part, will add another hundred thousand to the army of unemployed men in the iron and coal regions of the State. The result is already appearing in murder, robbery and starvation. The miners stop work with a few dollars ahead, while the Union has the great part of his savings to use in fighting the coal companies. The "Molly Ma guires" or Hibernians lead in acts of outlawry, and the local authorities are generally of no use through connivance or fear. Could the "Mollies" or their alias, the Hibernians, be suppressed, the Unions would lose half their terror, and friendly adjustment of the differences between the miners and the companies would be possible. But beset by combinations and secret influences the poor laborer looks forward to a winter of destitution and perhaps of death.

The Forty third Congress, elected in 1872, began its last Session on Monday. Watching for the effect of the fall elections, public attention will be turned toward Washington with unusual interest and inquiry, as unusual elements will come into play to affect the business of Congress. A large number of its members have been unseated. Some of them have seemed in times past unscrupulous demagogues. Will they become reckless now that their constituents have rendered judgment against them at the polls? Although the election was rather a rebuke of Republican leaders by their constituents, and so an indirect advantage to that party if the lesson is heeded, yet the political scales remain too nearly balanced to give either faction positive hope for the campaign of 1876. The party of the people is not yet defined. But an honest and wise attempt to settle such questions as have been sprung by the White Leagues at the South, the currency and transportation, and give some indirect assistance to a better understanding between employers and employed, will be fairly regarded by the country.

Another movement in the Ultramontane war going on in Germany last Saturday uncovered still further the revengeful spirit of the Jesuits. Some time since England removed her representative from the papal court. The English constitution recognizes the Pope only as the head of a religious order, and the representative never occupied any but a nominal position. The removal was received without protest. But when Bismarck claims to recognize no secular authority in the Pope, and will not needlessly burden his government with a figure-head minister at Rome, the German Catholics howl in chorus. Economy is not the only reason for the step. The Pope, in urging the Catholic clergy to break the laws of the Empire, and to teach the same insubordination to their congregations, places himself in hostility to the German government and cannot expect the hollow courtesy of political recognition. Every development in this redoubtable struggle with the harlot of Rome seems to precipitate the denoument of blood. Gladstone in England seems ordained of God to arouse that nation to her ancient loyalty, and the Romanists of Europe and America are uniting in defense of papal supremacy. A light will arise in this darkness and tumult; but the darkness and rage of Satan will come first.

God's Time.

Grand is the leisure of the earth;
She gives her happy myriads birth,
And after harvest fears not dearth,
But goes to sleep in snow wreaths dim.
Dread is the leisure up above,
The while He sits whose name is Love,
And waits, as Noah did the dove,
To see if she would fly to him;----

He waits for us, while homeless things,
We beat about with bruised wings
On the dark floods and water springs,
The ruined world, the desolate sea;—
With open windows from the prime,
All night, all day He waits sublime,
Until the fulness of the time
Decreed from his eternity.

Secret Societies in Africa.

ADDRESS BY H. H. HINMAN, STATE AGENT, BEFORE THE ILLINOIS CONVENTION.

There is a remarkable unity of design and character in the different forms of false religions, as well as in the different dispensations of the true. In the patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations the leading feature was an atonement for sin, in which was shadowed forth the great sacrifice to be made in the end of the world. The doctrines of the new birth and eternal life are only less clearly taught than under the Gospel, while in the new dispensation we have fully revealed the doctrine of death unto sin, a symbolic burial and resurrection, and a life hid with Christ in God.

Now paganism—which is the Satanic plan of satisfying the cravings of the natural heart for religious consolation—most carefully stimulates this true religion. It has its altars and its sacrifices, its symbolical death, burial, and resurrection, which are said to constitute the new birth, and its new and hidden life. The paganism of the ancient world was said to be exoteric and esoteric—the open and the hidden; and this is true of modern as well as ancient heathenism. The ancient mysteries were but a department of heathen worship. They celebrated the death in some real or imaginary person, and in his initiation the candidate was made to personate this individual. He passed through a terrible ordeal in which he is represented as dying, but he emerges again and by the process is said to be regenerated and made holy. Thus the ceremonies of the mysteries were all funereal in their character. In the mysteries of Egypt it is Osiris who is murdered and restored by Isis. In India Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva are wrshipped, and Siva dies like the setting sun and is mourned by dreadful wailings. The neophite who passed through these mysteries was said to be regenerated and made holy. He passed through dismal caverns, in dreadful darkness, and this represented death or the sun set in night: but the doors were thrown open, light and beauty shown around him, and he was now in Paradise.

In the Elusinian mysteries, the death of Bacchus is supposed to have been celebrated, and after a similar scene of terror the candidate was brought to light and holiness. In the Scandinavian mysteries it is Balder who is murdered and the candidate seeks him through scenes of horror until he finds him in glory. In all cases an oath, under penalty of death, was strictly enjoined, and there were also ceremonies of which St. Paul says, "It is a shame even to speak of the things that are done of them in secret."

Modern heathenism in western and central Africa (and I believe among the Indian tribes) has the same characteristics. The African worships the spirits of the departed. These spirits are supposed to often reside in alligators, serpents, white ants, and large trees. They are invoked by the aid of gewgaws or little artificial symbols used as ornaments and to secure the protection of the gods.

The worship of these spirits, like that of the ancients, is both open and secret. In the open worship they offer sacrifices of food, clothing, animals, and sometimes of persons.

The secret worship is conducted by the Purroh, the Boondoo, etc. They wear masks and a strange, fantastic dress. They are objects both of romance and of terror. When they appear to the outer world they demand and receive whatever they ask. While the Purroh is in session they keep up horrid noises and then no woman must venture abroad. The initiation as described by a missionary who witnessed it is as follows: A place is prepared in the bush and carefully tyled. The candidate is introduced and sworn upon Zillah. This consists of a large number of greegrees which are successively touched, and the inducting spirit invoked to destroy that spirit over which he has power, so that if he be false, his whole body will be consumed. He is then laid on the ground, and heavy pounding is made with a club as near the head as possible. It is said that his brains have been dashed out and that he is dead. He lies in his grave for a time, and is then awakened to another life. He has been born again, and being a new creature, he gets a new name and is taught to eat and speak, and begins life anew. He is now qualified to sit in the Purroh, which is the only legislative body in the land.

The Boondoo is designed for women, just as the Purroh is for men. It has its masked priestess, its devil worship, and ceremonies which are fitly described in Eph. x. 12. In all these forms of heathenism we see the essential elements of Blue Lodge Masonry. The stripping, the blindfolding, the terrorism, the death penalties, the mingling of profane oaths, moral lectures, and unholy obligations, and especially in the third degree, when the candidate personates Hiram Abiff in his death, his burial, and resurrection. In all these things Freemasonry is seen to be the child of ancient paganism, just as the minor secret societies are the children of Freemasonry.

This, then, is old paganism revived. It teaches the new birth, but not that we are born of the spirit. "The neophite," says Dr. Mackey, "comes to our doors covered with the pollutions of the outer and profane world, seeking the new birth, and asking for a withdrawal of the (Masonic) veil that hides divine truth from its uninitiated sight." He is indeed "brought to light," but it is not to Christ, who is the light of the world. He is said to enter the holy of holies, but it is not through "a new and living way." He is said to die, but is is not a death unto sin. He is buried, but it is not with Christ. He arises to a new and hidden life that is "hid with Christ in God." He has set before him an object of emulation which is not Christ but Hiram Abiff, and the great lesson he is to learn from his example is silence and secrecy.

And now, as Christianity lies at the basis of our civilization, embodying in it all that is valuable to society, so the institution that presents a rival religion subverts it, is at war with it, and in deadly antagonism with the dearest interests of mankind.

How the Spirituality of the Church is Affected.

BY A. D. FREEMAN.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I proposed, a few weeks since, to give my views of the bearing of oath-bond secretism on the piety of the church, but have been hindered till now by other engagements.

I think it apparent to any Christian observer that every professed Christian who joins an oath-bound society, sworn to secrecy, soon begins to fail in his interest in the truth of God and the household of faith. This may be seen in his less frequent perusal of God's Word, and attendance on the appointments of the church; as well as in the false plea he makes for the necessity of such institutions, saying, that if the church did her duty, there would be no need for such organizations.

Now, although not always true, that there is less frequent attendance at the appointments of the church, yet it is generally so, and in fact there are but few exceptions. And in most of these exceptional cases, there is a manifest desire to be made prominent, and they generally succeed, which is no weak evidence of the absence of the Christian grace of humility. Then the plea that God's church is a failure in accomplishing what is needed for man, (and of course God's wisdom and also God himself a failure) is ample proof that that man is greatly wanting in Christian grace, and moreover that, his religion is a failure. In short, it seams to take the place iu his heart that should be occupied by God's spirit and the graces thereof. How can such a man be pious toward God?

I repeat, that the man who takes the ground that God's church does not and cannot accomplish the needed works of benevolence, and makes this a ground for getting up a falsly pretended benevolent organization, (for they are false pretensions), is guilty of an attempt to impeach the divine wisdom. I ask again, can such a man be pious? Nay, I need not ask, for his religious condition is patent. Surely such a man is badly damaged in soul.

Now for a moment let us look at the complex materials that generally compose such strangely mottled conglomerates as the brotherhood of Masonry.

See! Christian, pagan, Mohammedon, Mormon, infidel, spiritualist, blasphemer, drunkard, thief, murderer, robber, pirate, and even cannibal. Can one who acknowledges such a brotherhood in a religious body, from which Christ is excluded, be pious toward God? Or, if perchance the first in this list should enter as a Christian, will not his piety diminish? Can piety live with such recognized fellowship? Answer in the affirmative who can? Where is the man who can perform such a moral feat? Nay, where the angel who can?

As well might a man try to breath water or carbonic acid gas, as a Christian soul to breath such a moral atmosphere as is found in such fellowship. Tell me not, Christian, that you can drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils. "Ye cannot." So says the Holy Spirit. Piety, if there is any, steps out when oath-bound secrecy steps in. It cannot be otherwise. There cannot be a going out of soul after God and after the elements of oath-bound secrecy at the same time. Piety that breathes the pestiferous breath of these unholy orders must wane. I do not say that a Christian cannot nominally enter these orders. But I do say that a Christian heart will loathe, yea, he must loathe, cannot otherwise than loathe, the animus, the real spirit which is to be found in the oaths and covenants of these orders. Men promise and swear to do what God has specifically forbidden, and back up and sanction these covenants with most horrid, suicidal and murderous penalties. Piety cannot live in the heart where dwell these. And if a pious man attempts to fellowship in these societies, he will soon find himself wandering into darkness and the damps of moral death gathering around his soul. More anon.

ANOTHER PROOF: A FACT.—Scene: Two friends meet in the street.

B.—Oh, Mr. A, come and spend a pleasant evening on Monday. It is for the benefit of the I. O. O. F., and we shall be glad to see you. Consider yourself invited.

A.—Thank you, but is the meeting for the benefit of the Odd-fellows, do you say?

B.—Yes. There'll be a good time. I'll expect you.

A.—Friend, don't you know that I am not in favor of secret societies?

B.—Why, you astonish me! I would not give up my membership in the Odd-fellows for all the churches in the city!

A.—Well, friend, you may see for that very reason I cannot approve of secret societies. They tend to weaken churches and certainly Christ never authorized them.

For the Baptist Churches of Wisconsin.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I saw in a late number of the paper a brief notice of Bro. Elzea's lectures in Walworth Co., Wis. I was in Walworth at the time and had an opportunity of hearing him; perhaps a more extended notice of the circumstances will not be amiss.

He came into the neighborhood of the Walworth Baptist Church on Bigfoot prairie, and inasmuch as this church occupies anti-secret ground, it would have seemed proper for him to have used their house for his lectures. There was some opposition to this, and so his friends procured the schoolhouse near by, which answered very well. He spoke twice in the schoolhouse, and, by the aid of one of one of the craft, with very decided effect. He is very careful in his lectures to make no reference to Masonry which are not abundantly sustained by high Masonic authority, and consequently his shots told handsomely on the hollow ribs of the old "handmaid." The friends of secrecy became alarmed, and when the audience came together on the the third evening they found the house locked against them. It rather astonished some of the old settlers, whose money had entered largely into the house to find themselves locked out, but they made the best of it by adjourning to a large barn near by, and held a good rousing meeting.

The shutting of the house was the one thing needed to thoroughly arouse the anti-secret portion of the community; and it had a very fine effect in making friends for Mr. Elzea and the cause which he represents. I think it is always evident that the friends of secrecy are afraid of free discussion. In this they confess conscious weakness and place themselves along side of slavery and kindred evils. Mr. Elzea was invited into a neighboring district when he finished his course of lectures. He went from there to Delavan, I know nothing of the results there, but on Bigfoot the cause was greatly advanced.

I wish to say a few words as to the present outlook on the secrecy question among the Baptists of Wisconsin.

The most of the early churches were planted on anti-secrecy platform. It was done by men who had practical knowledge of its evils,—men who may be described as "Morgan Anti-masons." They had experienced the fearful struggle with secrecy by which Masonry had been exorcised from the denomination, and they wished to build wisely and avoid forever a repetition of those scenes.

Masonry was quiet for many years, until a generation had grown up "which knew not Morgan," and had no strong convictions on the subject. Before men were aware it had possession of the churches and throttled free discussion. No man can now speak the word "Freemasonry" aloud without being denounced as a disturber of the peace of the churches. The present ministry of the denomination is almost a unit in this thing. There are not many Masons among them, but some of them are among the bitterest and fiercest of the "jacks." Many of their arguments are too absurd to make good reading, even if they were written out. One of the most pathetic is, that if a Mason comes to the church he must be taken in and cared for as one of the tender lambs of the flock where he must be gently lead from his error. They forget, that as a Mason, he is already anything but a lambkin.

Another argument which is roundly handled is, "that we have no right to put up bars to the church which Christ has not put up;" and inasmuch as he did not expressly say, No Freemason shall be taken into the church, therefore it is wicked for us to reject one. You reply that he never said that no counterfeiter should be taken in and therefore it is wicked to reject one, and they will at once give arguments which will as effectually bar out the Freemason. Many of them know perfectly well what Masonry is, and yet, in no case—never—with this kind of ministers, in the Association or out of it, can you get them to discuss the actual character of the institution. The merits of the case can never be reached with their consent. They know that if they permit this they are openly convicted of sin in the course which they pursue.

I know that some of them are good, mild-mannered men, who naturally shrink from the result of free discussion and a close application of God's truth. They hope that something will turn up to help them. One of them told me that he thought political parties ought to take it up. I suppose that he reasoned that when it became so foul as to be cast out by politicans, it would do to oppose it in the church. Some again, wish to establish great reputations as builders up of churches, so like the farmer, they open their barn doors wide in order to entice in a bigger flock.

There is one fact which I presume bears upon all, and that is the difficulty with which paying salaries are raised. Everything and everybody must be conciliated in order to gain every possible dollar from the community. What I say of the Baptists would doubtless apply to many other denominations. Agitation of the subject would find them so deeply involved as to greatly disturb their peace.

So it is, that old and inveterate Masons, who have played Moses at the burning bush and whispered under the living arch the word "Jahbulun" as the ineffable name of God—a word which according to Mackey is composed of Jah, Bel and On—and which stamps it forever as the rankest paganism, will sit year after year under the preaching of a gospel which never disturbs their complacency; feeling sure that with two strings to their bow, one of which, if it holds, will surely shoot them into heaven, but if it snaps, the other will slide them into the Grand Lodge above, without ever a doubt but that they are worthy objects of envy to all old men, young men, fools, women and cowans generally. I own that I have no faith is a gospel which does not disturb such complacency. It may be true in its theory, but it is shorn of its power. I want no part nor lot in it. I do not believe that the truth can be harmonized with such elements, and if the church of Christ, is the pillar and truth, as the apostle says, it can never for one moment, after the facts are known, sit in harmony, hob nob, with a system which affects to save men without its agency.

A man in this community, of well known irreligious character, a hard drinker, but a wearer of the "emblem of innocence," was slid off into the "grand lodge above" by resolutions published in our country paper and read in all our families, and yet, from no pulpit in Baraboo was there a word of rebuke or protest uttered against it; nor can men discuss a thing in the churches, which is of such immense importance as this is, if it be true that it can save men without Christ.

Our young men are growing up uneducated on this question. One of our ministers, who preaches Christ on Sundays, would "cable tow" them into the lodge through the week. Most of the churches all over the land, unite in frowning down discussion, and whoever would travel with them, must go arm and arm with this harlotry.

I think our Baptist churches are peculiarly inconsistent in this matter, for while they would cut me off for partaking of the communion with unbaptized persons, though they might be of acknowledged Christian character; yet, in spite of the injunction, "Ye cannot drink of the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils," I might drink of the wine of fellowship from a human skull in company with libertines and drunkards and foolishly invoke double damnation on my soul, and yet I have done nothing to offend them. If this is not "straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel," I never expect to see the thing done.

I think that the leading men in most of our associations are fully bent upon destroying our ancient land marks and opening our churches to secrecy. I have been told by two reputable ministers that they did not believe that God would let a church prosper which closed its doors to Masoury, and yet neither of these were Masons. There is no hope from our leaders, our theological schools, nor our religious press.

If the truth shall prevail in this matter, it will be in spite of them all.

J. W. Wood.

Baraboo, Wis., Dec. 1.

If a man is selfish and self-willed, intolerant and unsympathizing; if he has no respect for the judgment of other men, and no disposition to sacrifice his own convenience and inclination to theirs; if he is ostentations and fussy in his very kindness and self-abnegation he ought not to wonder that he provokes impatience and irritation.

Deceiving Children.

"Mamma, there is a Santa Claus. Mr. ——— says there is a Santa Claus; and I saw him at the church to-night." And the child, all strung up with excitement, continued to describe the appearance and doings of this mysterious, mercurial inhabitant of some far off, nobody-knows-where country.

Such were the feelings and exclamations of a little child that had been trained by a pious mother, but thoughtlessly allowed to attend one of those modern Christmas-tree gatherings in the Grace M. E. Church, of Jacksonville, Ill. The mother, with honest heart, had taught her child the truth; but as soon as it comes in contact with the church, (that ought to be pure,) it is deceived, and made to believe a lie. Mother fears God,—takes the child on her knee, and declares there is no Santa Claus,—that the person who pretended to personate Santa Claus, deceived you,—the superintendent who said that is Santa Claus deceived you. The little one now loses confidence in the superintendent, teachers, and all who carry on and sanctioned this mock-holy fair.

The superintendent of the Sabbath-school in the M. E. church, at Murrayville, Ill., a few years since, helped to get up one of these Christmas entertainments. During the early part of the evening's exercises, and at stated times, a man walked in with a telegraph dispatch to the children. Dispatch No. 1 declared that Santa Claus had just left St. Louis for Murrayville. A later dispatch announced that he had passed Alton, then Carrollton, Whitehall, and so on, till the minds of the children were wrought up to fever height, with thoughts and imaginations about this wonderful nobody, when in stepped the harness-maker, all disfigured, and loaded down with trinkets for the children.

Who can fail to see the effect of this deception on the minds of the children? Instead of growing up to honor the church, to rely on her teachings, the children grow up to doubt her sincerity, to turn their back on all who profess religion.

The above named superintendent was a local preacher—was set as a teacher of truth and righteousness; and at a Sabbath-school convention the following summer, expressed a regret, and wondered that there were no conversions among the scholars in the Sabbath-schools.—Christian Pilgrim.

Some one writes both gracefully and forcibly, "I should be glad to see more parents understand that, when they spend money judiciously to improve and beautify their home, they are paying their children a premium to stay there as much as possible to enjoy it; but when they spend money unnecessarily on fine clothing and jewelry for their children, they are paying them a premium to spend their time from home—that is, in those places where they can attract the most attention and make the most display."

A Southern Outlook.

[The Methodist Advocate of Atlanta, Ga., replies to the assurance of the Northern press in the present political revolution, with an article presenting ably and with candor the reasons for alarm at the "danger ahead." If the volcano of revolution is only slumbering, we certainly must thank the friendly voice that warns of danger. A correct understanding of our real condition must be gained by viewing every quarter, and the following extract will further this end.—Ed. Cynosure.]

The political struggle opened by recent events involves all of the old issues of peace and war, freedom and slavery, and the union or disunion of these States. We do not suppose that any effort will be made to resurrect the Confederacy or to return the people of color to chattel slavery; but if the party which will control the Lower House of Congress for the next two years comes into power also in the Senate and in the Executive chair, a few things are apparent. Among them we apprehend the following, viz: That party is bound by a thousand pledges to repudiate the national debt in some way as far as possible. Direct repudiation might not be attempted, but indirectly such a result would probably be reached, at least to some extent. This, or a compromise in some way practically including a considerable amount of the Confederate war debt, would be almost certain of adoption. The payment for slaves liberated by the proclamation of President Lincoln would also be insisted upon and enforced at the point of the bayonet, if need be, if the party now controlling the South were in power at the national Capitol. Of this there can be no question. The enactment of laws similar to those of some of the Southern States, which are calculated to disable the colored people and give to the white race the opportunity of profiting by their toil without interference from Federal authority, would not be difficult of passage. Indeed, it would hardly be necessary to pass such laws or repeal the Enforcement acts. Leave these merely without execution, and the end is gained—the colored people placed at the mercy of their oppressors and practically reduced to surfdom. The election laws, which nominally give the ballot to freedmen, need not be modified to meet the purposes of that class of politicians. In many places the freedmen have already been as effectually excluded from practical participation in the affairs of the government as when they were slaves. Under the national administration of the party of Toombs and Davis, the majority of them would be compelled to toil and suffer as heretofore, without the care and protection afforded by the property relation. While Mr. Toombs might not call the roll of his slaves in the shadow of Bunker Hill Monument, under such an administration, he would be sure to present the list at the capital of the nation and demand pay for them, with a strong probability of obtaining it. This is the expectation of tens of thousands to-day. And with a Senate and President of the character of the next Lower House, what would hinder such a realization? Until the war, did not Southern slavocrats usually bully and browbeat Northern members into their measures? The credit mobilier would be but a trifle in comparison with this scheme. One hundred thousand dollars would be only a small price to pay for each of a considerable number of votes to carry such a bill through Congress, and if the anti-war, pro-slavery party obtains control of the Government in this generation or the next, all of this will be attempted and much of it accomplished. Only the staunchest Unionism will prevent it.

Nor is this the greatest danger that threatens us. The colored people are every year gaining intelligence, independence, strength. But with such an administration, their rights would unquestionably be curtailed more than at present. This in the end would lead to armed resistance, and with the Government against them and on the side of the oppressor, a war of races would inevitably follow, and the desolations of the former war would be to this only as the shaking of the forests by the gale, in comparison with the tornado that lays everything waste. With this devastation would come again the question of secession and dismemberment of the Union, not into two, but four or more divisions. Those having the Government in their hands would constituted the loyal party, and (contradictory as it might seem) the Unionists would be the opposing, and, constructively, the rebellious element. Such is the political scheme now on foot in the South, at least. Some intend that in the next war, for which they are preparing, they will be on the side of law and loyalty, and that the old loyal party will be compelled to fight the Government in maintaining the Union of the States. . . . .

It should be remembered that the "States Rights" dogma, including the idea of secession, has not been yielded in the South. On the contrary, it is held as firmly and generally now as ever, and the principal exponent of it, and the Vice-president of the Confederacy, is at this time an honored member of Congress, and the women of the Confederacy have never acknowledged defeat.

When the Governor of a State repeatedly affirms in public, in the form and with the solemnity of oaths, that this is and shall forever be a "white man's government," it must be understood that he is not uttering mere "bosh," but that his words have a meaning, especially if his relation to secret political organizations—the Ku-klux, White League, and grange, perhaps—are supposed to be such as to give his declarations peculiar importance. The persistent and uniform course of Southern churches and society, as well as politicians, leaves no room to doubt that their aspirations compass all and more than we have suggested. To get control of the Government is the first point aimed at by the opposing party, and two years more will give them this, with power to work out many of the results named, unless the people awake to the dangers around them and guard the interests of the Union.

To the Friends of the Cause.

Suffer me to say to those desiring lectures that I an recognized as an anti-secret lecturer by the National and State Associations; also by the Lower Wabash Annual Conference, U. B. Church of which I am a member. Yet I am not in the employment of any organization and my services can be secured at reasonable compensation. I profess to be a master of my subject, and know to a certainty what Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship are. I am opposed to those organizations, because they are socially, politically, and morally wrong; and I treat them upon this line. Those desiring lectures can address me at Center Point, Clay county, Ind.

W. M. GIVENS.

—Toward the close of the present month Bro. A. Mayn, of Promise City, Wayne Co., Iowa, will be traveling from that point to Wheeling, West Va., and will lecture at any point on the route where arrangements can be made. He has had some experience in the field and writes that he has felt the persecution of the lodge in both Iowa and Kansas. Any arrangements like the above should be made immediately and word sent to Bro. Mayn at the above address.

"Hurrah! Let's do it!" We're coming, Bro. Hickman, six times a thousand more. The enrollment books are open. See the plan next page.

Ohio Readers, be sure to read the letter and appeal by your State Association Treasurer over the leaf, 6th page. All rally with a will and pray that a spirit of consecration to this work may come down upon the whole State and upon yourselves as individuals.

Lectures for California.

In conference with Bishop Weaver, I received the assurance that he will aid the friends of our reform on the Pacific coast by speaking at three or four prominent points, if arrangements were made by the friends for him to do so. This will be good news to our friends, and I trust they will avail themselves of this providential opening to secure the services of so efficient and able a helper. The Bishop will be in California May 7th, 1875, and we shall hope to hear from friends in that State, and to aid in perfecting arrangements in detail. J. P. STODDARD.

REV. H. H. HINMAN, with the assistance of others has planned a LECTURE CAMPAIGN on the Illinois Central Railroad. He wishes to give a lecture or course of lectures during the week, commencing Dec. 7th in New Rutland, ElPaso, Normal, and Bloomington; the week commencing December 14th (or sooner) at Heyworth, Decatur and Pana; the week commencing Dec. 21st (or earlier) at Patoka, Sandoval, Sparta and Salem; the week commencing Dec. 28th (or earlier) at Irvington, Richview, Mattoon and Milton; the week commencing Jan. 4, 1875, (or earlier) in Champaign, Paxton, Loda, and Onarga; the week commencing Jan. 11 (or earlier) in Chebanse, Manteno and Peotone.

The expense of lectures given in this regular way would be much less than if given with no order; and in places where the friends of this cause are few and not able to raise much money, if they provide a place for the lecturer to speak in and entertain him while in the town and pay his railroad expenses, it will be all that is necessary in order to secure the lectures. Yet it is hoped, in most places, they can raise something towards paying the agent's salary besides.

Be sure to have the notice of his lecture or lectures (if he arranges for more than one) given out in every church in the place, and also on the Sabbath before he speaks and also published in the local papers a week before hand.

—The State Association of Ohio at its late meeting, passed the following endorsement of the State Agent. All who know him will say "aye" to it.

Resolved, That we recognize in Rev. D. S. Caldwell, state agent for Ohio, an able and efficient worker in the anti-secrecy cause; that we rejoice in his successful labors hitherto, and, while we cordially recommend him to those desiring lectures, we also extend to him our sympathy and prayers and pledge to him our hearty co-operation in his great work.

Reform News.

—The General Agent is helping on the work in Ohio, arranging the winter campaign with Bro. Caldwell. Friends in that State should not fail to read and act on the suggestions of Bro Hale. See "More Money, Heart and Soul Needed" on 6th page.

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard gave a series of lectures at Lanark, Ill., last week.

—See the route of the Illinois agent and meet him at some point if practicable.

—Elder Barlow sends further word of the proposed State Convention in New York. Another and louder call next week.

—Rev. John Levington, after speaking at Willimantic, Connecticut, went to Simsbury, in Hartford county, the next week. He will probably be in Wheatogue, same county, this week. Bro. Conant writes that he has not succeeded in making further arrangements.

—A correspondent of the Pittsburgh Telegraph writes of the debate between Samuel Patterson, pastor of the United Presbyterian church in New Galilee, Pa., and Dr. D. L. Dempsey, of the Bridgewater M. E. church, which took place during the last week in October in the church of the former: "The debate created no little interest in the community, and will be long remembered as an event that temporarily disturbed the almost solidified calm of the country hereabout. Our citizens have had new thoughts suggested to them by the force of argument and authority that a few months ago their utterance would have been considered sacriligious. If the debate will have the effect of infusing a new intellectual vitality into this community, it will have gone a good way toward permanent and greatly needed good.

From a friend in Wisconsin:

DELEVAN, Wis.:—"My health is poor and my age seventy-three, but I have sent you over thirty subscribers since you commenced your paper. I took the American Baptist from first to last. I have not found any paper that filled its place, as well as the Cynosure."

J. E. IRISH.

A Debate in Decatur County, Iowa.

ELK, Decatur Co., Iowa,
Nov. 20, 1874.

Editor of the Cynosur :

Perhaps the last you heard of D. Brookhardt, he was at Bunker Hill, Russel Co., Kansas, He left two of his sons there to take care of his farm property, and returned to this place about the 20th of October.

He lectured at Elk School-house on the evening of Nov. 17th to a good congregation, on the affirmative of the the proposition that secret societies are anti-republican and anti-Christian. He defined a republican government, and then showed that anything which nullifies the law, is anti-republican. He said that our laws allow a criminal the right of trial by jury, and if found guilty of capital crime he must be sentenced by the judge, and be put to death by the proper officer. But Masonry prescribes an oath to be administered by an unauthorized person, and these oaths pretend to bind men to take life, without crime, trial or judge; and such action is murder. He said that Masons are to swear that they will support the constitution of the Grand Lodge, which constitution is in opposition to the Constitution of the United States.

He showed from the ceremonies and prayers of Masonry, that it is a religion. That it is anti-Christian, because; 1st, It leaves out the name of Christ Jesus; 2d, It pledges to keep secret; 3d, It comes in contact with the plain declaration of Scripture, which says, "Thou shalt not forswear thyself." Christ says, "What I tell you in the ear that preach ye upon the housetops." Again, "No man lighteth a candle and putteth it under a bushel," and his example was that he "ever spake openly to the world" and in secret he said nothing. Mr. B. asserted that he had no confidence whatever in a Christian minister who belonged to Masonry. Mr. B. quoted some of his proofs from the Morgan book, and said in support of his anti-republican view of Masonry, that Masonry being widespread, has the power and disposition to execute its laws, thereby setting at liberty many criminals who by our laws should suffer death.

Jas. Milsap took the negative of the proposition. He said that the Morgan book was foolishness. But he was willing for every one to read it if he could get any satisfaction out of it. He said that it was not a trait of the Masons to defend their order. Being reviled we revile not again. We cast not pearls before swine. He said that the murder of Morgan was not approved by the order, or so many would not have left it. He said that Jeff. Davis was a bad man, but who would destroy a society or a church because it had bad men in it. He said that Masonry was not a religion; and that its first object was the perfection of the art of working with mechanics' tools. And when that was accomplished it turned its attention to the inculcation of morals. He said that it was an auxiliary to the Christian religion; and when the church could do without it he was willing to bid it farewell forever and give it an honorable burial.

Bro. Brookhardt will lecture again at this place on the evening of Dec. 15, and hopes to organize an association. May our cause prosper.

ELZA OSBORN.

Good Sowing and Good Fruit in Ohio.

ASHLEY, O., Nov. 26, 1874.

BROTHER A. N:—I thought I would take time this morning to write a few lines to you. I have not changed my views on secret societies. Brother Richey lectured here three evenings against the secret orders. His lectures were in the main against Masonry. He did splendidly. I have been listening since he left here to hear what the people had to say, and find that it had such an influence on many that they are considerably aroused and feel that such institutions should not exist in the land, and some of our members feel sad that Masonry is countenanced by our ministers. It is lamentable that God's ministers will join such corrupt institutions, but I find when they once join they will almost universally defend the order. I have talked with some of them who claim they have not met in a lodge for a number of years, but they have not one word to say against the order, but will rather talk in favor of it. Our minister is a Mason. He tells me tha he is a Mason of some thirty degrees, and says he has not met in a lodge for five or six years. I told him I could not pay an adhering Mason for preaching for me, and if he would promise me never to meet with a lodge again I would pay my quarterage to him and collect what I could from my class, as I was both leader and steward, but he would not promise. So I told him I would not pay him for preaching, nor ask any one to do that which I refused to do myself. So of course I lost my class-book and the office of steward. I go to hear him preach every time he preaches, and I must say he preaches very well. He preached one sermon to the church and dwelt long upon our duty as Christians to put our entire trust in God, which was all right. I could not refrain from asking him why he would not trust God himself; that it was not consistent for him to go to the Masons and trust in them, and then preach something else to his people; he ought to live out what he preached.

I think next year if we get a Mason for minister there will be more that will refuse to pay him; and if there was four or five in each society that would refuse to pay Masonic preachers, it would not be long until Masonry would be a drug with the ministry. Your brother in Christ, L. Powers.

The Work in Connecticut.

Dear Bro. Kellogg:—Perhaps it may be of interest to the Cynosure to learn that something is being done in the old State of Connecticut to awaken the people to the evil of secret societies.

Rev. John Levington came to Willimantic, Saturday, Nov. 21st; preached in the Methodist church Sunday evening and lectured upon the subject of Masonry Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings.

The first evening the lodge was better represented than the "cowans." As soon as Bro. Levington had closed, an old gentleman commenced asking questions, thus endeavoring to bring on a personal dispute by representing that Bro. L., had said things which he had not uttered. But Bro. Levington was more than a match for him and he was soon silenced.

One thing a little amusing transpired which I must relate. One man rose to his feet and remarked, "I am a citizen of this place, am a Mason and a Christian. I can take no exceptions to what has been said, but I do demand respectful treatment." It would seem that in the judgment of this "Mason and a Christian," respectful treatment consists in saying things to which one could take exceptions.

The second evening Bro. Levington had a good audience, many Masons being present, several of which failed to preserve a "silent tongue" until they were made silent by the cutting and truthful remarks of the speaker, which was a matter of no little merriment to the "profane." Brother Levington proved very conclusively by the testimony of adhering Masons as given in the books and periodicals which they publish to the world, that "Masonry is essentially and designedly anti-Christian and rejects the Bible and the God of the Bible."

The third evening Brother Levington gave us the initiatiary ceremonies of the first degree of Masonry. After which two members of the fraternity testified to the correctness of the ceremonies as given by the speaker.

J. A. Conant.

An Interesting Account of Personal Effort.

Bay City, Mich., Dec. 1, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Sir:—Several months have passed since I have contributed anything for the columns of the Cynosure. The principal reason for this silence was, because I had nothing to write that would interest your intelligent readers. And the reason I had nothing to write was, because I have been doing but little active service in the great anti-secret reform.

About the first of May last, I left my residence in Genesee Co., and moved to Bay City, Bay Co., Mich., which is now my place of address. A good share of the summer my health has been so poor that I have been able to do but little; yet I am ready to acknowledge that, although my physical abilities seem to be on the decline, yet my spirit is active and willing to work in bringing to light the hidden things of darkness. I wish, however, to say that I have not been entirely inactive in this work; I have sold some books and given away some hundreds of tracts on board the cars, at the annual November election, and also to individuals, young men that I met from day to day on the streets, hoping and trusting in God that these efforts may result as seed sown on good ground that will bring forth a plentiful harvest.

Several instances of conversation had with different individuals on board the cars the past summer were to me quite interesting, one of which I will relate in substance.

On taking the train at Holly, bound for Bay City, I found myself seated near a young man of pleasent countenance and prepossessing appearance. I opened conversation with him in regard to the weather, the crops, and the general prosperity of the country, etc., and I found him ready and willing to exchange thoughts. I then introduced to him the Christian religion, the Bible and also Freemasonry. These were topics which seemed to take him aback a little, and he soon became less cheerful. I, however, hoped he would be free to express his views. He then gave me a short account of his life, and said that he once read the Bible much, and was deeply interested as a teacher in the Sabbath-school, and supposed himself a Christian; but that sometime since he had given up all these questions as of no importance, and that he did not now believe the Bible to be a reliable book; neither was it fit to be read in a family; but that he had now found something that was much more interesting and profitable to him, and that was—Freemasonry. I then gave him a tract against Masonry which he read, and handed it to a man who was a high Mason, sitting near him, who quickly gave it back to him, saying that "he had no use for that." The young man then tore the tract in shreds in my presence, and commenced a tirade of abuse upon me. He said that when he first opened conversation with me, he thought I was a very interesting and agreeable man, but now believed me to be a mean man, meddling with something which I did not understand, and which I had no business to touch, besides, many other hard sayings. We then parted at the depot.

On election day I armed myself with a large bundle of tracts (Honeywell's and others) which I distributed freely to all who wished for them. I visited four different wards in the city, at each of which a large crowd gathered around me seeming anxious to hear what I had to say against Masonry and Odd-fellowship. Some of the crowd seemed to favor my views, while others seemed highly displeased, and came down upon me with words of intimidation and abuse, and said I was making a fool of myself, and a laughing stock to all on the streets; and, besides, I did not and could not know what Masonry is unless I joined the lodge. When I spoke of Morgan's Expose of Masonry, and of his being kidnapped and drowned by Masons in Niagara, they seemed to think and say that the waters of the Saganaw were just as good for such purposes as those of Niagara. "But none of these things move me."

By this account, my friends will see that I am doing just enough in this city to make myself unworthy of the confidence of all true and loyal Masons and Odd-fellows.

I have of late felt very lonesome, standing as I do almost alone in this city of some 15,000 inhabitants, and a large portion of them given to idolatry. Never did I more ardently desire, and feel the necessity of securing for this place a few lectures from D. P. Rathbun, or some one of our efficient lecturers immediately. But as I am not able to bear the expense, I must be content to wait. In the meantime I will do what I can to secure subscribers for the Cynosure.

Respectfully yours,

A. Oldfield.

Correspondence.

A New Regiment Forming—Enlist!

For the encouragement of other workers in the good cause let me say that when I present the interests of the Cynosure in earnest and in a proper spirit and manner I often succeed. Let us consider that if each of the present subscribers of the paper would only send up one new subscriber each the Cynosure list would be doubled. And this would be a very easy task. Long since I pledged to the publishers that I would send up six new subscribers within one year. The time is not more than one third up, and yet I have nearly redeemed my pledge, and yet I have not neglected my business in the least.

My manner is this. I solicit a man whom I know sympathizes with our cause, stating that he can hand me the change when it suits him. If he subscribes I take his name then, and send the money to the publishers, as I know they are in need of it. I believe I am not astray when I say we have at least one thousand subscribers that can do as much as this and thus assist in holding up the hands of our publishers. Let us act at once and in unison and send up one thousand pledges on postal cards by Jan. 1st, 1875, pledging that within one year we will each send up six new names as subscribers for the Cynosure, and if through sickness or any unforseen cause a few should fail to meet our obligations, we would be morally released and our publishers would so consider. Let us form a regiment at once, and those of us falling back and failing by January, 1876, of having six new subscribers to receive credit from those having more than that number.

Never was a time that secretists were busier or working more than now. They vainly imagine their position invulnerable. Never was slavery so well fortified as it was just before it fell. The minions of the lodge are legion. Numbers is no evidence of strength. It is often a positive evidence of weakness. Numerically we may be in the minority, yet we claim that when in the right, as in this instance, we are certainly in the majority.

We must oppose the lodge at every and all points, in the courts, at the ballot-box, with the press, and in the pulpit. We should not forget to invite the ladies to write for the Cynosure and subscribe for it.

According to the theory of secretists no business can be carried on successfully unless the planning is done up in a lodge or secret conclave. Even now a large portion of the interests of the farmers must be worked up in a lodge or grange. This, too, like Masonry and Odd-fellowship, is a vain delusion. To the arguments of a granger I usually have this to say: Gentleman, this thing of fighting monopolies after night and learning to farm hoodwinked is too thin. Usually this is about all the argument a granger can stand. The grange is used as a kind of a seine to drag farmers into the lodges generally. The whole thing is a specious fraud, a vile imposition and a humbug.

Lodgemen say a great deal about "light" in the lodge and yet there is nothing they dislike more than the "light." Let's give them a plenty of it during the year 1875, and the Cynosure well circulated will assist in bringing about this much desired end.

Let us organize a regiment between now and January 1st, each one pledged to furnish six new subscribers during the year 1875.

Respectfully yours,

Jas. S. Hickman.

More "Money, Heart and Soul" Needed.

DEAR CYNOSUCE;—Were I a preacher or a son of a preacher, I would preach a sermon from the text which Mrs. Miles, of Pleasant Hill, O., furnishes in her closing sentance in a late Cynosure: "For one I am willing to put more money, heart and soul into this work." That lady has a secret that would carry any reform in the face of the devil and all his emissaries when put into practice by all reformers.

The truth is, our benevolent Father, God, is our leader in all reform. Out of good will to mankind he sacrificed his dearly beloved and only begotten Son to reform the world. Without his blessing and co-operation no reform can succeed. God will not co-operate with, or bless measurs or means prompted by selfishness, however good those measures or means may be in themselves. If we lack faith in the revelations of Scripture we surely ought not to discard the revelations of providence of our own day. So long as we fought the rebellion to save the nation, though our cause was just, was right in itself, yet it was prompted by pure selfishness and we might have fought without success until nothing was left of either party. God cannot become an abettor of selfishness to save the nation or world after having sacrificed his dearly beloved Son for that purpose. Thus our nation sacrificed thousands of precious lives to prove to themselves and the world that God's Word was true, and that he would at all times and under all circumstances be true to his Word. To carry forward reform we must not only go forward at God's command but as he commands. Whenever we put self or sell-interest into reform measures we set the cause backwards, because God will not bless and co-operate with selfish measures.

Old Major Randall of our township could beggar his family and sell his last cow to pay his lodge dues, and when that was exhausted he was dropped into the poor house; spent the balance of his life a pauper, died a pauper, and was buried a pauper. The Masons would not bury him because he was a pauper. His friends would not bury him because the Masons had made him a pauper. And for aught of friends or Masons his carcass would have been to-day rotting on top of the ground. So of all secret clans. They can borrow money, rob families of necessary supplies to pay their lodge dues. But how few reformers can say as that good woman says, "For one I am willing to put more money, heart and soul into the work."

But, says the skeptic, why call her good, knowing nothing about her. I reply, the pocket is the index of the heart; the heart is an index of the state of the soul. Where our choicest treasures are there will be our hearts also. When the old patriarch Jacob was about to meet his brother Esau, he put his choicest treasurers in the rear, the last to be sacrificed. So with every good man and woman, they will freely sacrifice their perishable treasures to save their priceless jewels. They will seek to lay up treasures in heaven where moth and rust doth not corrupt. There are thousands of young men drawn into the lodge every year who might be saved by timely warning. When in the lodge their chances of heaven are diminished a hundred per cent. If ever converted to Christ they must be converted from the lodge.

Now then for the application of my text, Put more money, heart and soul into the work. If you cannot go and speak to that young man yourself, make a little sacrifice of your money to enable some one else to leave their families and warn the young men of the nation of their danger, before more of them are blindfolded, cable-towed and led into the lodge. We do not ask our friends to sacrifice their sons, as God did for us; but in the name of our Master we do ask them, if need be, to make a little sacrifice of money and make it now in behalf of the cause. Especially do we ask our friends in Ohio to make a special effort in behalf of our State agency. Brother Caldwell writes me that he is in absolute need; that he has been in the service of our cause in this State near eleven months, under the employ of the Association; that he has received less money than to pay his rent and actual traveling expenses; that his family have been supported out of former earnings, and that in justice to those whom God has commended to his love he must leave the field unless his family can be supported.

What do you say friends in Ohio, shall that dear brother leave the field? His heart and soul are in the work. He was made an orphan at a very early age by Masonry, his Christian father having expressed disapprobation of the doings of the lodge, was summoned to appear before the lodge from which he never returned to his family. Funds for the spuport of our State agency can be sent as most convenient to the Treasurer of the National Associations; or to our State Agent Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Nevada, Wyandot Co,, Ohio; or to me as Treasurer of our State Association. In either case it will be duly acknowledged in the Cynosure, and let me urge all who read this notice that feel this to be God's cause to contribute freely and ask their friends to contribute, and forward to those who will faithfully apply and account for the same. Yours for the cause, SAMUEL HALE.

Mallet Creek, Medina Co., Ohio.

College Secret Societies.

The writer below seems to have a candid mind and we trust will oppose Masonry as he does college secret societies when he understands their true character. He sends the following in answer to printed questions which were sent to all our colleges. What does he think of the Ku-Klux and the White League, we would like to know?

If secret societies destroy the oneness "of a literary family in school," do they not destroy the oneness of the Christian family in the church and the patriotic family in the nation? We join with him in saying, "Let us become a nation of brothers."

WACO UNIVERSITY.

As I never approved of secret societies I distrust my own judgment. Some of my best professors and students think the influence good intellectually and morally. I oppose secret societies because they foster cliques and parties, and I wish my college to be one great literary family, and we have three societies for convenience. I do not regard secret societies in the light you do. Secret societies in the South have done no evil, but in some cases much good. I am a lukewarm Mason in practice, but a warm advocate in theory. I join all the secret temperance socities that spring up in order to oppose drunkenness. Masonry in the South is harmless, and is simply a means of spending a few leisure hours agreeably for mutual protection and improvement and mingles with it a good deal of childish display, but many sublime moral lessons.

Having said this much, excuse me for adding that your whole scheme seems to me over-wrought and somewhat of a hobby-horse or a man of straw. Our nation is full of bad blood. Let us do all we can to harmonize and promote universal good feeling and brotherly love. Let us have no more bitter opposition and strife, but strive to become a nation of brothers.

Yours respectfully,
RUFUS C. BURLESON.

OUR MAIL.

R. D. M. Feemster, Columbus, Miss., Secretary of the Lowdnes County Anti-secret Society, writes:

"You will please notice in the Cynosure that any clegyman or the friends of any clergyman sending his address, with one cent for postage, to Rev. A. C. Feemster, editor of the Christian Republic, will receive in return 'The Appeal to The Masonic Clergy.'"

This society has more than eighty members, some of whom are very active and zealous in good works, distributing a great many tracts, etc. The secretary writes that this society expects to hold a meeting soon. We shall watch for the report of it.

Mrs. L. C. Andrews, Waupun, Wis., writes:

"I think, in this place, the Cynosure has obtained a permanent footing. It is cross-bearing work to oppose Masonry; but if I have ever done anything in my life, for which I expect to be rewarded in heaven, it is what I have tried to do to oppose Masonry. I am not one of the faithless kind. I think God is mightier for the truth than the devil for falsehood; and that Masonry, like slavery, shall cease to be."

J. E. Wisman, Hamilton, O., writes:

"I sent the fortnightly one year to my brother in Moberly, Missouri. It happened that he was conferring with the Masons for admission into the lodge, when the first copy was received. The second copy had an article on Masonry which convinced him that the lodge was no place for him. He is now safe on the Anti-masonic side. My other brother joined the grange and could see no good in the Cynosure."

Jas. O. Prindle, Green Castle, Mo., writes:

"I have tried to get new subscribers but have failed. I will still try as I know the cause is right and will succeed."

Henry Clemens, Ravenswood, Ont., writes:

"I like the paper very much. There is a letter addressed to a young minister, a Mason, by a minister seventy-three years old, which has been the means of saving twenty of my friends from joining the lodge."

The letter was published in the Cynosure more than a year ago.

A. F. Worden, Nashua, Ia., writes:

"I am at work for the paper and the petition, and will get around soon."

We hope that petition will be a great success.

Jas. A. Brown, Columbus, O., writes:

"I wish I was able to send more to help this noble paper. . . . I hope to see the time when I can do much more for you. I am contending for the cause of reform here, but secrecy holds the reins. But their time will close and I hope soon."

John Fait, Brimfield, Ill., writes:

"There are some strange Masons in this neighborhood. One of them said to me the other day that 'If there was anything more than the third degree it was not Masonry, it was something else.' He said he was a Master Mason and that was the highest office there is in Masonry. I asked him something about the seventh degree. Says he: 'I know nothing about the seventh degree nor you either.' He also said that if a Mason was an infidel he could not be a Mason. I expect to be a subscriber for your paper as long as I live. I take three papers but always read the Cynosure first.'"

See explanation of this Mason's talk in another column.

Thomas Sherman, Stockton, Minn., writes:

"I am doing what I can for you and the cause of reform. I think I can get some more subscribers as soon as I can get a little time to canvass."

Wandel Vine, Viola, Minn., writes:

"It is singular how indifference reigns in the minds of even the friends of the cause you advocate. God bless you and the cause."

Horace Divoll, East Topsham, Vt., writes:

"I heartly endorse the sentiments of the Cynosure and should be happy to send you the names of many new subscribers. . . I have endeavored to circulate the paper as widely as I could in years gone by. I wish the whole country was wide awake to the evil and dangerous influences of all secret societies."

Emory Sprague, Hillhouse, O., writes:

"The people seem willing to remain in the dark. We need some lecturers here to wake them up."

S. L. Fay, Princeton, Ill., writes:

"I should have been glad to have been at the meeting of the Association, but business and health detained me; confined today in my room with rheumatism. . . Have you sent a petition to anyone in Princeton Township?"

To no one but yourself.

Abraham Hartzell, Golden, Col., writes:

"My sympathies and prayers are with you and the cause you so ably vindicate. . . Hail, dry weather and multiplied millions of grasshoppers have made money very scarce in this region."

John M. Stevenson, Washington, Ia., writes:

"While people are friendly to the cause, they are slow to take hold of the work."

Wm. Pontius, Willshire O., writes:

"I sell goods in the same building where there is a Freemason's lodge. They all treat me kindly but I hate the institution, and I am doing all I can to expose it. But I think a great deal of many of its members here."

H. M. Bailey, Knoxville, Ill., sends the following appeal:

Awake Americans! Awake! gird on his sword,
Christ's armor take.
Born of the free; sons of the brave,
Unfurl Christ's banner, let it wave."

D. Carpenter, of New York, is visiting his son in Neponset. He says that Masonry prevails there, and although there are several churches there is not much true piety.

John C. Carithers, Pittsburgh, Ind., writes:

"I am getting a great many names on the petition sent out from Prof. Blanchard."

We hope all those petitons will be vigorously circulated. Let us have every name possible before the first of February.

J. McCleery, Marshalltown, Ia., writes:

"The fact is we need a lecturer here very much to arouse the people."

We hope Iowa will be prepared to support a lecturer next year.

Edward Brookhart, Bunker Hill, Kan., writes:

"I like the paper the best of any I have ever taken, and it seems almost impossible to do without it. The grasshoppers and drouth together have caused an entire failure of crops in this county, and the homesteaders will have a very hard time to get through the winter; but if you will continue to send the paper I will try and get the money and send it as soon as possible."

If any of our readers have gifts of any kind to bestow we think they would be appreciated in Russel county, Kan.

A friend who sends fifty cents at the commencement of every quarter, writes:

"Please excuse me for sending such little amounts of money at a time for I am in limited circumstances."

We like this way much better than stopping the paper or allowing your subscription to run behind. Do not be afraid of troubling us in this way.

Wm. A. Bartlett, El Paso, Ill., writes:

"The friends of the cause here are few and poor as to this world's goods, but true and tried, stand the fire of the enemies of the reform with firmness and the fullest trust in God, that in the end victory will perch on the side of right and prove the overthrow of secretism. There are two Masters' lodges, one Chapter, and one Commandery, in this little city of from 1,500 to 2,000 inhabitants, and yet we tremble not, for our trust is in God."

Masonry does not always keep a pastor in his pulpit. A friend in Peru, Ill., writes:

"This is one of the strong holds of secret societies, and I would like to see something done. The feeling of the people is changing to some extent. Prominent citizens have been in active relations with the lodges, but are so no longer. The former Methodist Episcopal minister attended the funeral services of a Mason, whose wife was a member of his church. He recognized the lodge in his remarks and prayer, and marched in the ranks with them, though apparently a little ashamed of the company he was training in. His house had been fired into by Germans on account of his activity in prosecuting saloon-keepers. One of the worst of them was in that company of Masons and said to him that day, 'Why didn't you tell us of this before? You would not have been troubled at all.' The people did not like this public affiliation with Freemasons, and that was one reason for his not being returned."

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

Who took Jesus from the cross? (John xix. 38, 39.) What prophecy was fulfilled? (Isa. liii. 12.) What were his enemies afraid of? (Matt xxvii. 62 66.)

What is the first topic? Who went to the sepulchre? (verse 1.) How early was it? (verse 2.) What did they find? (verses 3, 4.) Who rolled it away? (Matt. xxviii. 2.) What did they do? (verse 5.) What were they told? (verses 6, 7.) What did they then do? (Matt. xxviii. 8.) Who then came to the sepulchre? (John xx. 3, 4.) What did they do? (John xx. 10, 11.) Who waited? What then occurred?

What is the second topic? What proofs have you found under the first topic? To whom did Jesus appear first? (verse 9.) To whom did he next appear? (Matt. xxviii. 9, 10. Who next? (Luke xxiv. 34.) Who next? (verse 12.) Who next? (verse 14; John xx. 19-23.) Who next? (John xx. 26-29.) Who next? (John xxi. 4-22.) Who next? (Matt. xxviii. 16-20; 1 Cor. xv. 6.) Who next? 1 Cor. xv. 7. Who next? (Luke xxiv. 50, 51; Acts i.4-9.) Who next? (1 Cor. xv. 8) How many appearances are there? (Perhaps the order may have been different, but this seems correct.) Can you tell any of the things Jesus did after he rose?

What is the third topic? What is said in 1 Cor. xv. 14? and what in the 20th verse? What did the apostles preach? (Acts ii. 32; xvii. 18; xxiv. 15.) What is it the assurance of in Acts xvii. 31? What in 1 Cor. xv. 48, 49? What is said in 1 John iii. 2? Do you think you would believe in Jesus' life, had he not risen from the dead? What would his promises have been worth? What are they worth now?

What is the fourth topic? Was Jesus in his tomb? (It was empty.) Then he must be on earth or in heaven. Where did he go? (verse 19.) From what place did he ascend? (Luke xxiv. 50, 51.) These verses also tell the last thing he did to his disciples. How long was it after his resurrection? (Acts i. 3) How did he go? (Acts i. 9.) Where did he go? (Ps. cx. 1; Col. iii. 1; Heb. ix. 24; Rev. iii. 12.)

What is the fifth topic? What did Jesus promise? (John xiv. 3.) What did the shining ones say? (Acts. i. 11.) Will he be changed? What will take place when he comes? (1 Thess. iv. 13-18.) How long will it be between the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked? (Rev. xx. 5,6.) What has Jesus told us to do? (Matt. xxiv. 42.)—National S. S. Teacher.

—We must remember that the work is God's as well as ours. We are too apt to complain of our own weakness, incompetency and sin, of the waywardness of our scholars, of the faults of those connected with us, and especially of the smallness of our numbers, the meanness of our accommodations, the deficiency of funds, the apathy of parents and of the church, and so on. No wonder we are discouraged! Let us look at the God-ward side! No part of the Gospel work lies nearer to the heart of God than that which we do for the young. To none did Jesus give a warmer, tenderer welcome. Let this thought shame into silence our complainings and remove discouragement far from us. God labors together with us.—Rev. F. H. Marling.

PROOF OF THE FACT of Christ's resurrection. All the apostles bore witness to it. It was constantly held up by them in their preaching as the supreme and crowning fact in the doctrine of the Gospel of Christ, completing the evidence of his divinity, and of the truth of all his teaching. It is incredible that they should have continued so to preach, right in the very region where these things are claimed to have taken place, unless the facts were as represented. The notion that the doctrine of Christ's resurrection was an after-thought of these fishermen, a myth, is absurd. It was not a myth-producing period in Jewish history. It was a matter-of-fact age. Besides, it is utterly unscientific and irrational; for no mere "myth" could have had the power over men far and near, which this truth did have.—Illustrated Bible Studies.

—A great many ways are tried to make the gospel sweet-oil and sugar-plums. You are told that he who believes and is baptized shall be saved; but there some preachers stop: it must be remembered that he who does not is damned.—Rev. T. D. Talmage.

Dalcho Reviewed by Henry Dana Ward, 1829.

MASONIC CONSISTENCY.

Our Grand Master has condescended to point out many facts to the notice of the symbolic Masons which are worthy of notice.

"The present Master's word of the ancient Masons, is to be found in no language that ever was used. It is in fact not a word," says Dr. Dalcho; "but a mere jumble of letters forming a sound without meaning, p. 22.

"The word of the Free and Accepted Masons [the moderns] is nearly in the same situation; like the ancients, it is a word without meaning," p. 23.

Now, what would the Grand Master be doing? Either word serves to distinguish equally well all who give and receive it alike. The word has no other use than this: and the ancient's word has as much dignity in the sound, and as many letters and syllables in the structure as the word of the moderns. That one is more a jumble of letters than the other does not appear.

"In the third degree," continues the Dr. "there is another inconsistency. The candidate is told that he represents Hiram Abiff, a man of the greatest Masonic knowledge, from whom no secret of the craft was hid. Yet a word is demanded of him, which he never received. The person whom he represents has this mystic word, but how can the candidate give what he never had? It certainly is an insult to his feelings, as it makes him appear ridiculous; for it sometimes happens, he blunders upon one which excites laughter, and the solemnity of the occasion is thereby destroyed."

This is wise; let the Dr. speak on.

"In the third degree, the ceremonies of initiation are designed to represent the circumstances which took place in the temple, when our much respected Master, (Note D.) "[The paragraph which is omitted here, related to a ridiculous and highly improper ceremony, universally observed at the initiation of a Blue Master, and for which the most trifling reasons are given."]

Our Grand Master shows so much discernment and independence in reprobating the absurdities which he thinks have crept into Freemasonry, that I forgive him the epithet Blue Master, which he freely bestows upon the Masters of ancient St. John's Masonry.

Ten continuous pages of this oration, our Grand Master devotes to the exposure of gross errors in point of fact, common in the lodges of our country and of the world.

"I candidly confess," says Dr. Dalcho, p. 44, "that I feel a very great degree of embarrassment, while I am relating to a minister of God's holy Word, or to any other gentleman, a story founded on the grossest errors of accumulated ages; errors which they can prove to me to be such from the sacred pages of Holy Writ, and from profane history, written by men of integrity and talents, and that too," says Dr. D., "in a minute after I have solemnly pronounced them to be undeniable truths; even, by that very Bible on which I have received their obligation."

Query, whether the Grand Master of the Sublime Degree of Perfection does not, in these, his own words, fully convict himself of solemnly asserting that for an undeniable fact, which he knows to be a gross error? "Consilium post facta inutile." [Council after action is futile.]

But hear our author in continuation: "Masonry is a subject," says Dr. D. p. 44, "for which I feel the deepest veneration. I have bestowed upon it much attention and time, and from the correct information which I have obtained from the sublime degrees, my labors have been amply rewarded. As well might we believe that the sun travels around the earth, instead of the earth around the sun, as to believe in all the incongruities which have been taught to Masons in the Symbolic degrees." "Nil fuit unquam, tam dispar sibi."—HOR. [Never was anything so con tridictory.]

We leave brethren better acquainted with Freemasonry to clear it of reproach here thrown out with no small spirit by our Grand Master, while we repel with all our might and main, reason and understanding, this appeal of the Sovereign Inspector's to the correct information of the Sublime degrees. The archives of the sublime degree! There is no such thing; there never was, in which is contained correct information of the traditions of Masonry, or of the origin of Masonry, in any of the sublime degrees. It were unreasonable to suppose that the mother in her full strength, should have lost all consciousness of the events of the wedding, while her daughter could tell about it. A. D. 1717 was the wedding day of Freemasonry, and the sublime degree are grand daughters, a pretty number.

If we are not entirely mistaken, this is truth: and the Dr's pretence respecting correct information in the higher degrees, is one of his assertions which, in a moment after made, however solemnly, can be proved to be a gross error.

Dr. Dalcho is not always in the wrong. The following strain, though far from our taste in respect to the sanctity of any place, where what is done is carefully concealed by the agents, is yet recommended by the concluding quotation to the credit of the orator.

In this Sublime Grand Lodge, which bears the motto, "Deo Devotum," [Dedicated to God,] in the place in which I have the honor to stand, are delivered the laws of truth and of silence, of religion and of virtue. Can error be taught with impunity in a house consecrated to the Eternal God, the source of infinite truth and wisdom? Can the sanctuary of the Most High be profaned by offering incense at the shrine of confession? No, my brethren; we work under the threatened punishment denounced by God himself: 'Cursed be he that maketh the blind go out of their way, and cursed be he that perverteth the judgment of the stranger," p. 45.

These are solemn words, repeatad by the same acting Master Mason, who was a moment since confessing that he could not without embarrassment, assert as undeniable fact, what in a minute after the candidate might show him to be a gross error. Devotion to God cannot be said to have a peculiar share of the Master's duty; nor sancity a peculiar residence in the place where it is done. I speak as a child. But hearken to the Grand Master.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DEC. 10, 1874.

WILL THE ROMISH CHURCH OPPOSE MASONRY?

We answer, yes; just as it opposes the English Church, the Greek Catholic Church, and every other mere ritualizing body. It opposes and will oppose every organization that hinders its supreme exclusive control over mind for time and eternity.

There are bulls against Masonry as there were against slavery. A priest can show you popish condemnation of slavery older than Protestant. Yet, in our war, popery would have rejoiced to have seen our Republic throttled by slavery. Its sympathies were with the rebellion as the New York mobs showed. But the priest is for the side that wins, and he knew the North must win.

So, now, the organization called "The Roman Catholic Church," hates the principles of our cause,—free conscience, individual judgment, and open, just popular government. And it loves the principles of Masonry, for they are its own, viz: subjugation of man to unknown superiors; abject submission of lower to upper rings; salvation in sin, by ceremonies; conscience bound by authority and terrors,—these are the principles of both. The fight between Rome and Masonry is therefore, to us, a fight between the kite and the snake. They both hate us. You will hear priests and papists denounce the lodge; but they will not let us hold an Anti-masonic meeting in a Romish church, nor will priests attend our meetings and favor our cause, because they are themselves, like Masons, birds of night; and birds of a feather will ultimately flock together. What then are we to do?

I answer: We must push and apply our principles fearlessly to human actions and institutions; and when the final grapple comes, as in the slavery war, all the Roman Catholics who are patriots and love the Republic will go with us in spite of their dark system, and their far-seeing leaders will favor the side which they think will win.

Romanism, we must not forget, is a true church of Christ fatally corrupted. The catechism used in their Sabbath-schools now contain this: "God has promised all blessings, even heaven itself, to the believer, through our Lord Jesus Christ." But in the last free conversation with a priest he ran over his seven sacraments from priest-baptism to extreme unction, and boasted that he had a 'clear, satisfactory, certain salvation by those seven sacraments that left no room for doubt; while salvation, by simple faith in Christ, left Christians in painful uncertainty.'

But popery like Masonry teaches a salvation which is not a salvation from sin, and so no salvation at all. Hence the popular degradation in popish countries. Parliamentary returns show that "Romanism in Scotland produces, in proportion to its adherents, more than five times the amount of crime which is produced by the same proportion of all the rest of the population;" while "in the Papal States the number of murders reported by the French police at Rome is at the rate of 187 in the million, while in the rest of Italy they were 111 in the million against 4 in the million for Protestant England (!) as given in the statistics of Hobart Seymour. So that while there are many Masons and papists who are ignorant of the systems to which they belong, and so are not yet corrupted by them, nothing is to be hoped from the systems themselves.

ORIGIN OF THE HIGHER DEGREES.

A friend in Brimfield, Mass., (Mr. Joseph Fait) writes: "We have some strange Masons in this neighborhood. One of them said to me the other day, that 'if there was anything above the third degree, it was not Masonry, but something else.' He said he was a Master Mason and that was the highest degree there was in Masonry.'

This Mason may be weak, or he may be wicked, or both. Every Masonic temple has apartments for Encampments and Commanderies, for Royal Arch Masons and Knights Templar, as much as for Blue Lodges of Master Masons. But this simpleton or deceiver has this to ground his assertion upon: that, originally, Masonry had only three degrees, viz., Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason. And Rob Morris, while himself taking degrees of all kinds and sorts, and putting his own daughter (Mrs. Goodrich) through five degrees of infamy invented for women, pathetically exhorts all the brethren to rest contented with the three original degrees.

Rebold, translated by Brennan, thus gives the origin of the higher degrees in his "General History of Masonry in Europe," page 54.

"General Transformation of Freemasonry, FROM AN OPERATIVE TO A PHILOSOPHIC INSTITUTION."

"About the middle of the seventh century, after the death of Charles I., the Masonic corporations of England, and more particularly those of Scotland, labored in secret for the re-establishment of the throne destroyed by Cromwell. And for this purpose they instituted many degrees hitherto unknown, and totally foreign to the spirit and nature of Masonry; and which, in fact, gave this time-honored institution a character entirely political."

"The dissentions to which this country was a prey had already produced a separation between the operative and accepted Masons. The latter were honorary members, who, according to long established usage, had been accepted into the society for the advantage which their generally influential position in the country might effect. This very position naturally made them the adherents of Charles II., who, during his exile, was received as an accepted Mason by their election; and, in consequence of benefits he derived from the society, gave to Masonry the title of the ROYAL ART, because it was mainly by its instrumentality that he was raised to the throne, and monarchy restored to England."

The above is Rebold's account of the origin of the higher degrees. But while Masonry must remain the same in its root and stem or go to pieces, it can always and has often been changed by additions at the top and made the instrument of treason or infidelity; and Master Masons thus become underling adherents to unknown superiors, who may be subverting the government which they love, or the church to which they belong. It is "the deceivableness of unrighteousness."

The President's message which was presented to Congress Monday afternoon is not so long as the last, and has the further merit of being more pointed and practical. The progress of events has sharply outlined several important matters requiring legislation, and thus assisted the President's ideas. He gives much space to the leading topic of finances, advocating with much force a return to specie payments as the great requisite of a renewed prosperity. In this, Secretary Bristow in his report of the treasury accords entirely. The President further argues for a free banking act, and a readjustment of the tariff; a decrease in the expenditures or increase of revenue. He does not wish the General Government to interfere with the affairs of a State, and makes suggestions about the civil service reform, upon which Congress must legislate positively or it will be abandoned; and on measures to revive the shipping trade. The message is looked upon generally as the ablest yet drawn up by President Grant, only the inflationists seeming to look askance at it.

NOTES.

—Friend Hickman in the correspondence calls for a general rally. If we all put "more money, heart and soul" into this work, as Bro. Hale recommends, the sacrifices made in adding a thousand or two names to our list and supporting the State agents will hardly be felt, for the Lord will sustain and bless in the self-denial.

—For the letter from Ashley, O., in our reform news, we are indebted to to Bro. A. Needles. It shows a right and zealous spirit and will encourage others who are striving for truth and purity against the encroachments of Satan.

—It will be an item of news to most of our readers that the ritual for lodge "work" under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Illinois is in manuscript form entrusted to a committee composed of Messrs. Chamberlain and Barnard, believed to be of this city, Pricket, of Quincy, and George Ide, of Evanston. Duncan's Ritual is said by those who are supposed to know, to be the best representation of the "work" as practiced in Illinois, having hardly a noticeable difference.

—In a communication to the Telescope, President Kephart, of Western College, Iowa, mentions the adverse influence of the lodge on that institution. He says: "There is another influence that operates against Western College, or rather operates to diminish its number of students, namely: the position of our church on secret societies. Secret organizations hate us with a bitter hatred, and it is very certain that they are striving in this State as well as in others to crush us; and in more ways than one are we here at Western College made to feel the weight of the iron heel. Never has this been the case more certainly than within the last year. But the College still lives and enjoys a fair degree of prosperity, not by the aid of permission of secretism, but in spite of it. And by the blessing of God this institution is doing a good work, both for the church and humanity."

Questions and Answers.

JESSE HUNTER, Freeport, Ill., writes: "I will not pay anything towards the support of a Masonic preacher, nor will I take the sacrament from the hand of a minister that belongs to the midnight oath-bound clan. Am I right or not in this position?"

Go to your minister and ask him if he is an adhering Mason. If you find that he is, the first thing to do is to go alone and pray that God will open his eyes and show him his awful situation. Then in love try to show him the sinfulness of Masonry, and give him all the light you can on the subject, praying earnestly that he may be brought to light. Try at proper times to have others show him the evils of his course; if, after prayer and perseverance in faithful effort for his conversion you find that he "is joined to his idols," we say, "Let him alone."

A friend in Massachusetts, writes:

"There is one question as a Methodist I am deeply interested in and should like to have answered. Did John Wesley leave on record his opinion of Freemasonry?"

He did. The following is taken from his journal, vol. 4th, p. 398:

Friday, June 18, 1773.—I went to Ballymend, and read a strange tract, that professed to discover 'the innermost recesses of Freemasonry,' said to be translated from the French original, lately published at Berlin. I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be true, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry! And what a secret it is, which so many concur to keep! From what motive? Through fear or shame?

A convention in the interest of the Christian Amendment to the National Constitution will be held in Boston, Mass., on the 16th and 17th of December, beginning on Wednesday evening at 7½ oclock. Among the speakers who have prepared special addresses for the Convention are the Hon. Felix R. Brunot, President Joseph Cummings, D.D., LL.D., of the Wesleyan University; President A. A. Miner, D. D., of Tuft's College, Dr. E. B. Webb, of the Shawmut Avenue Congregational church, Boston, and, if he can possibly be present, Prof. J. H. Seelye, recently sent to Congress.

A Grange Master in good standing recently informed a Times missionary that, in his opinion, Kelly & Co., the kid-gloved and silk-stockinged grangers who farm in Washington, D. C., had accumulated at least $250,000 cash for "dispensations," at $15 each, during the last three years. And now rustic curiosity desires to know what Kelly & Co., do with the money; and pastoral audacity demands re-distribution of the cash aforesaid among the State granges, and wrath rages in the brawny bosoms of many thousands of exasperated anti-monopolists.

Resolutions requesting and resolutions demanding the re-distribution of this enormous fund among the neighborhood organizations are being passed by grangers all over the Northwest. Thus far we observe no response from Secretary Kelly. Have two or three hundred farmers been Peter Funked by a few adroit managers at Washington? What has become of their money.—Chicago Times.

To the Editor of any journal friendly to the anti-lodge reform:

DEAR SIR: Please insert the following notice in your paper:

The Nat'l Christian Association are promoting their work by sending out the following petition for circulation to all parts of the United States and Territories.

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES IN CONGRESS ASSEMBLED:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, believing (in the words of Daniel Webster) "That all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and good government," respectfully ask your honorable body to withdraw the charter given by Congress in April, 1864, to the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia.

We further petition that it be made unlawful to appoint to official positions under the government of the United States, persons who are under and acknowledge the binding character of oaths administered by secret organizations.

Also that in the United States Courts, in all cases, criminal or civil, the right of peremptory challenge of jurors who are members of any secret society shall be granted to all parties in litigation.

And that membership in any secret society, by the presiding officer of a court, shall be held to be a sufficient reason for change of venue whenever demanded.

We request in behalf of the association, that in every locality where possible to do so, some friend will circulate this petition. If any would like to obtain a copy of it in a form convenient for obtaining names they can do so by addressing C. A. Blanchard, Cor. Sec'y. Nat'l Christian Association, 13 Wabash Av., Chicago.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Memphis Baptist states that there are 164,292 Baptists in Georgia, of whom 68,443 are blacks and 95,849 whites.

—The Wisconsin Methodist Conference affirmed last week the doctrine of the church that ministers shall not marry parties divorced for other than Scriptural reasons.

—The Congregationalists of Great Britain propose to raise a fund of $500,000 for the purpose of organizing a permanent campaign for the disestablishment of the Anglican church, and half of this amount is said to be already secured.

—Rev. D. K. Flickinger, editor of the Missionary Visitor, recently sailed from New York to the African missions of the United Brethren church, on special business connected with foreign work of that church.

—J. Whitman Cowan, a former student of Wheaton and graduate of the last class at the Oberlin Theological Seminary, has been ordained pastor of the Congregational church at Marblehead, Ohio, where there is a thriving organization built up mainly by the efforts of Mr. Cowan while a student.

—The total number of Sunday-schools in Canada, according to the report of the late annual convention, is 4,404; teachers, 35,745, and scholars 371,381. Of this number 1,761 schools are Methodist, 650 Presbyterian, and 455 Church of England.

—The Established Church of Scotland (Presbyterian) owns 1,250 churches, educates 140,000 scholars, and raises $700,000 for home and missionary purposes. Within twenty years 150 parish chapels have been erected and endowed.

—The Congregational Church at Alto, Wisconsin, composed of Hollanders, having been three years without a pastor, as none could be found in the country, made application to fatherland, and Rev. B. H. Idsiger, a young man, was sent over, and has been approved and ordained by the Council, and is at work among his people.

—E. P. Hammond, the evangelist, closed a very successful series of meetings in Nashua, N. H., about the middle of November. He is now in Galesburg, Ill., holding revival meetings of increasing interest. Over 5,000 persons attended on Monday. Special efforts have been made with the students of Knox College and all but seven in the College proper have arisen for prayers. Mr. Hammond will visit Chicago during the winter.

—A large public meeting was held December 3d, in New York, for the purpose of learning the progress of the movement to confederate all churches in the world holding the Presbyterian form of government. Dr. John Hall presided and addresses were made by Dr. Mc. Cosh, of Princeton, who has been active in this movement for a Pan Presbyterian council, Dr. Kerr, of Pittsburgh, editor of the United Presbyterian and others.

—The Primitive Methodists of England report for the past year: Total income 35,207*l.*—an increase of about $14,000 over any previous year. The society has on home stations 134 missionaries; in Australia and New Zealand, 51; in Canada, 46; and in Africa 7, making a total of 237 missionaries, who labor on 156 stations. During the year 14 new chapels and schools were erected at home, 33 new missions opened, and 4,400 oper-air services held.

—The following protest has received the signatures of many of the leading citizens of New York:

To the Board of Police Commissioners: The undersigned, citizens of New York, respectfully call your attention to the flagrant and increasing violations of the law of the State which prohibits theatrical and other entertainments of the stage on Sundays; and ask that the law may be promptly and impartially enforced against all offenders." Among the signers are Wallack and Boucicault, old and successful theatre managers. This offensive desecration of the Sabbath has received very general and adverse comment through the country.

—A London dispatch conveys the following information: "The Scottish churches for some time past have been agitating the question of forming settlements in Africa with a view to the suppression of the slave traffic. Meetings to discuss to matter have recently been held, and as a result it is announced that the Church of Scotland and the Free Church have decided upon a plan for establishing a missionary and commercial settlement at the southern end of Lake Nyassa. About 10,000*l.* are required for the purpose, and the principal part of the sum has already been donated. The settlement will be named Livingstone, and is organized for the purpose of checking the slave traffic on the Nyassa."

—The Congregational State Convention of Minnesota, at the late meeting at Winona, reported eighty-four churches and a membership of 4,151, and increase of 294 over last year's report. Every church in the conference, with possibly one or two exceptions, has its seats free, and provides for its current expenses by some form of subscription. A number have adopted the plan of weekly pledges, paid through envelopes, and report favorable results. One of the largest churches secured a surplus by this method, and another church finds it a special excellence that enables the children and all the members of the family to participate in sustaining the movement of the church.

The Christian Cynosure teaches that God alone is Lord of the conscience and hath left it free from the doctrines and commandments of men. That Christ is the only law-giver and the Bible the only law in religion. Hence all attempts to bind the conscience even to good, by secret and intimidating or solemn oaths, pledges and ceremonies, are impious rivals! ips of the religion of Christ, and when salvation is promised by the human rites and precepts of such "orders" they are substitutes for the atonement, and attempts to cut the only connection between man and his Maker.

The City.

The marriage of W. F. Story, editor and proprietor of the Times to a fascinating widow was an event of last week.———A petition prepared and circulated by the Citizen's Association for the re-incorporation of Chicago under a new State law was tossed about in the late Common Council among committees and finally shelved like a mummy. If carried out the new system was intended to oust the bummer class from the city government. Hence the action of the aldermen.———Although this season has been an unusually disastrous one, still the Traders' Insurance Company of this city have cleared from marine insurance alone the sum of $47,000.——The new board of aldermen took their seats Monday evening and the Mayor presented his annual message. Alderman Dixon was unanimously re-elected chairman.

The Capitol.

Congress assembled at noon on Monday and received the message of the President. Vice-president Wilson took his place as chairman of the Senate, in which body several bills were introduced. In the House 238 of the 301 members were present.

The Country.

A terrible fight occurred in Vicksburg on Monday morning. The white citizens who were dissatisfied with the result of the late elections met last week in mass meeting and ordered the county officials to resign. They all but Sheriff Crosby, a negro, fled, and he signed a resignation. On Monday morning large delegations of negroes from the country marched in arms to the city and were met by the citizens. A bloody fight resulted and some twenty negroes were killed and many more wounded; one killed and one wounded was the loss of the whites. Gov. Ames, of Mississippi is said to be determined to reinstate the officers and not permit them to resign at the dictation of mass-meetings.——Four children were drowned by venturing on the ice on the Sangamon river near Springfield, Ill., on Monday. Three were children of a widow.——The Court of Appeals at Albany has decided that the lower court had the right to order a bill of particulars in the civil suit of Tilton vs. Beecher. This will probably make another long delay.——The convention called at Richmond, Va., to consider the question of cheap transportation adjourned last week without any useful result. The scheme recommended involves the expenditure of $200,000,000 by the Government, one-fourth of which would be laid out in Virginia.

Political.

There are now 17 aspirants in Missouri for Senator Schurz's seat in the U. S. Senate. Judging from the caliber of the men whose names have been published, the whole crowd would not be able to fill the seat. ——Senator Morton is very likely to remain in California all winter, and Senator Logan is in such poor health that he does not expect to be of much service at the next session. The inflation party will consequently be short of leaders in the body where they need them most.——The authorship of the salary grab is now saddled upon Minister Washburne, candidate for the Presidency. A correspondent of the Springfield Republican says that when Mr. Washburne was on a visit to the White House a year ago last winter he discovered a Presidential yearning for more salary, and went to the leading Republicans of the House urging that the old compensation be doubled.

Foreign.

The transit of Venus occurred on Tuesday evening and was undoubtedly watched with the deepest interest by the scientific bodies sent from this and other countries to various points in Asia and the Pacific islands to take observations.—Bismark has announced, in debate in the German National body, his positive knowledge of the strategy of Rome in bringing on the Franco-Prussian war.—The Carlists have gained some unimportant advantages again in Spain, and Marshal Serreno has taken the direction of military affairs.

New York Weekly Witness for 1875.

The WEEKLY WITNESS, which lacks two months of being three years old, has attained the circulation, unprecedented in so short a time, of over 50,000 copies, a result due to the large amount of the choicest reading matter which it has given for the exceedingly low price of one dollar per annum. As this price cannot be reduced, and as it is not desirable to reduce the size of the paper, the 20 cents of postage heretofore payable by subscribers at their own post-offices will now have to be added to the subscription, as the postage must be paid hereafter by publishers. The subscription rate for 1875 will therefore be $1.20 per annum, or 60c. for a half-year. New subscribers may have it for 30c. for a quarter on trial.

To all who remit $1.20 now for 1875, we shall send the unexpired time of 1874 gratis, and any who wish to try the paper till January, may have it for 10 cents till then.

All we wish is to have the paper extensively known and to that end specimen copies are sent gratis and post-paid to all who apply for them by postal card or otherwise.

The DAILY WITNESS, contains news, markets, financial reports, and much excellent reading matter, is $3 per annum, $1.50 for six months, or 75 cents per quarter. A New York daily, post paid, for three dollars a year is a new thing.

Orders, checks and drafts are to be made payable to the proprietor and publisher. Published by John Dougall, No. 2 Spruce St., (Tract House,) New York.

The Home Circle.

Contentment.

My conscience is my crown,
  Contented thoughts my rest,
My heart is happy in itself,
  My bliss is in my breast.

My wishes are but few,
  All easy to fulfill;
I make the limits of my power
  The bounds unto my will.

I fear no care for gold,
  Well doing is my wealth:
My mind to me an empire is,
  While grace affordeth health.

I clip high climbing thoughts—
  The wings of swelling pride:
Their fall is worst, that from the height
  Of greatest honors slide.

Since sails of largest size
  The storm doth soonest tear,
I bear so small and low a sail
  As freeth me from fear.

No change of fortune's calm
  Can cast my comforts down:
When fortune smiles, and smiles to think
  How quickly she will frown.

And when in forward mood,
  She proved an angry foe,
Small gain I found to let her come,
  Less loss to let her go.

"Search the Scriptures."

The symplicity of Scripture is a theme of frequent encomium; nor is there any danger that it will be too highly appreciated. But there is danger that it may be too exclusively appreciated. The Bible is so simple that he who runs may read; but it is so difficult that only he who sits long and thoughtfully over it may most profitably study it; it yields its ripest and best fruit only to the student. It is like a fruitful field which gives a rich yield even to the hoe, but best repays the deep ploughing; or like a gold country, where the mere superficial traveler may pick up shining particles of the precious metal in the sands, but where only the miner with pick and hammer, breaking up the hard quartz, gets the best nuggets.

We give three reasons why you should make the Bible, not merely a reading-book, but also a study-book.

I. It does not present truth built into systems, but in fragmentary and isolated forms, which it leaves us to gather and put together. There is a system in it, but as there is in a house in the forest which the wood-cutter and the carpenter must construct. If the Apostles' Creed were the whole of Christianity it would be easy to commit Christianity to memory. But God has not given us truth thus in epitome. Moses comes bringing it in law; David comes singing it; Isaiah comes bringing the glorious vision of it; Paul comes preaching it; Christ lives it. If one asks what are the essential principles of our American government, he must go to the founders and read and compare the words of Washington and Jefferson and Madison and Hamilton; and if one would know what are the essential principles of the Christian religion he must go to the Book and cull and compare the various utterances of its various writers. He no more gets the true meaning of the Bible who merely reads without such process of comparison and construction, than he knows astronomy who merely looks at the stars.

II. The Bible is a book of seed-thoughts. It is not God's substitute for thought, but God's inspiration to thinking. There are full fledged birds in it that sing like the twenty third Psalm; but there are also nests of eggs, like the book of Proverbs, that need our incubation. It abounds with apothegms, parables, proverbs, and paradoxes, which do not reveal their meaning at a glance. The sermon on the Mount is accounted a model of simplicity in preaching. So it is. But there are verses in it which do not disclose their meaning without much pondering and some comparison with other Scripture. Take, for example, the precept, "Judge not, that ye be not judged." It is but a superficial view which sees in this command only a warning against censorious judgments. What more does it mean? Take your Concordance, examine every passage where the verb "judge" appears, and decide for yourself.

III. The themes of which the Bible treats are the grandest in the realm of thought. They transcend the reason; they transcend the imagination. It deals with experiences which defy description, with a heart-life which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor the imagination of man conceived. It deals with the invisible world, in which every new discovery opens boundless fields for further discovery, still beyond.

Take the simplest and the most fundamental truth in the Bible, the existence, character, and attributes of a living, personal, present God, a God regnant in nature, a God dwelling in the hearts of those that will humbly receive him. The utmost study never can fathom the depths of the Divine Being; can never measure the length and breadth and depth and height of the love of God. The mere reader of the Bible is like the mere traveler on the ocean, who sees the surface of the waves. The student of the Bible is like one who takes measuring instruments and sounds the ocean depths, and studies its hidden currents, and brings from its depths its secret treasures. It is only by the study of the Bible that its teachings concerning the character of the incomprehensible God can ever be understood; and no study can ever exhaust the theme.—Am. Messenger.

What Prepares me for Action.

Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, and our daily course is to be simply the expression of him as he was here. It is not to be premeditating how we shall act on a given occasion, but seeking to have him so dwelling at home in our hearts by faith, that we may act in our small circumstances as he has acted in the opening out the path for us. When we premeditate how we shall act, it is reputation which is before us; but when we are filled with his company, and the influence of it, we bear ourselves acceptably to his spirit in those we have to do with, and there is conscious consolation from the affections of Christ awakened by intercourse and communion; and when we meet with enmity and opposition, then there is a fuller sense of refuge in him. "He is a strong tower; the righteous flee into it and are safe."

There is something very grand in the daily history of a saint. He knows nothing of the peculiar tactics of the foe for the day; he cannot in a balloon, as in modern warfare, survey the disposition of the enemy's forces; but not knowing from what quarter the attack may come, he is to be ready on each side, and he goes forth like the sun to run his course, resisting all evil, and contributing good on every hand; and he is well qualified to do so if abiding in Christ. He is not watching the enemy to see what he must provide, but he is cultivating the company of Christ in his heart by faith, and then he is prepared for every assault. The company of the most loved and valued is the only military exercise for him. It is when the heart most fully enjoys itself that the hand is most skillful to shelter a friend or confound a foe, because the strength of him who is at home in my heart is ministered through me according as the demand is made. Are you premeditating how you will act, going through drill and sword exercise in order to be up to the mark? or are you entertaining Christ as a guest in your heart, and therefore provided with his grace on every side? What a difference! In the one case you are satisfying your heart in its deepest enjoyments, because occupied with the Guest, that commands the fullest circle of them; in the other, you are in a state of suspense, at best occupied with the demand which is made on you, rather than with the strength of him who could enable you to meet all demands.—Ex.

Personal Sermons.

A learned and pious writer has said "That a sermon without a personal appeal is like a letter without an address." I have attended the preaching of God's Word all my life, and have heard on the average two sermons per week, and my experience, as well as that of many older persons with whom I have consulted is, that those sermons which are closed without an appeal to each and every hearer to whom they are at all applicable, rarely produce the same serious and lasting impression as when they are accompanied by an earnest and pointed application that goes to the heart.

The discourses of our blessed Saviour when on earth were personal in their character, such as:

"Ye are the salt of the earth."
"Ye are the light of the world."
"If thou bring thy gift to the altar."
"If thy right eye offend thee," &c.
"Unless ye repent," &c.

Any number of quotations could be made, showing the direct, earnest and personal manner in which the Lord Jesus addressed his hearers.

It is well for ministers to deliver what are called brilliant, intellectual and learned discourses on the leading topics of the Bible, such as Faith, Repentance and Love; but unless those sermons contain a solemn, earnest and pathetic appeal, such as:

"Dost thou believe?"
"Thou must repent."
"Give me thine herat."

and are delivered in such a manner as to cause the hearer to feel that he is the one meant, they will fail to accomplish that end for which they were intended.

Such sermons may be much admired, and may be rich intellectual treats to worldly minds, but that minister who has so preached may go home assured that he has allowed one more golden opportunity to pass unimproved. Just at the very time when his unconverted hearer has been most interested, and is waiting to recieve an earnest invitation, the sermon ends, and all serious thoughts are gone.

If ministers are in earnest to save souls, they must be so plain, pointed and personal, that each hearer will feel that he himself is the one addressed. "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."—Observer.

Short and Long Evenings.

Should anybody wish to form an intelligent opinion about a farmer; to judge from a brief interview or a short period of observation what were his characteristics and the probabilities of his thrift and progress, as one man might wish to know about another whom he thought of taking into partnership, or as a woman ought to ascertain about a man she expected to marry, the best time of year, by all odds, for such an observation would be the winter. At all seasons the farmer is controlled by the necessities of his vocations. He must sow in spring-time, if he would ever reap; he must cultivate in summer if weeds are not to divide his crop; he must garner his grain while yet the golden haze of autumn warms the air, before Jack Frost has set his seal upon the fields. At any time during nine months of the year all the farmers in a given district are busy at similar toil, and mostly so busy at it that they have no time for anything else. There are differences in the amount of work they do, but little in kind. The ways of farming differ far less than the farmers themselves. It is in what they do when they are not farming that the distinction between them becomes apparent; it is then that the question whether they are or are not men of progress, who will know more, act more wisely, and probably grow richer year by year, is determined.

By an incomparable piece of wisdom, for which our fathers deserve the highest credit, three are rarely any elections taking place in the winter months, and never any of great importance. Were it not for this fortunate circumstance it is scarcely injustice to human nature to suppose that the proportion of the long evenings and the short days that would be spent in talking politics at the village grocery would be considerably larger than what were devoted to any other kind of brain work. In fact, it might even interfere with necessary hand-work. It wouldn't be perfectly safe to predict, if in buying his paint a farmer had to pass and repass the grocery store where he knew he might save the country by a political discussion while warming himself, that he would sternly forgo the patriotic opportunity and go home and apply the paint the same day that he bought it. Nevertheless, the winter is the best time to apply paint, as it dries more slowly than at any other season; and it is a general rule that the longer paint is drying the longer it will last. There is a story of a man in New York State who, practicing on this principle, painted a tin roof twenty years ago with whale oil and ground soapstone. It was a year or more in drying. In fact, there always remained a doubt as to its ultimate dryness. But it lasted many years without renewal till the tin rusted through by sweating on the under side.

Riding through the country in a neighboring State, and asking of the oldest inhabitant, seated in the same vehicle, inquisitive questions as becomes a newspaper man, the writer was struck by the fact that in a great majority of instances where the history of a trim farm, with neat, cleanly, well painted buildings and fences, was elicited, the owner had been previously a "city man;" and on the contrary wherever there was a general air of dilapidation, especially as to the fences and buildings, the owner had "farmed it all his life." The "city man" evidently fouud time to take care of matters; to brush up and sweep up and pick up, to fix and fasten and paint. There is really no time for these things except in winter. Perhaps the inference is overstrained, but it seemed as if it might have been a consequence of habits acquired in the city, where, as editors can testify, people have to be rather busier, if anything, in winter than in summer.

As we haven't the excuse that the bears have for retiring into our habitations at the approach of cold weather and doing nothing but suck our paws till spring, it is worth while to consider that an immense amount can be done in the winter months if we only fairly set about it. As a specimen of what is actually accomplished the Swiss may be instanced, who make in their Alpine cabins during the cold weather all the carved wooden toys that supply England and America. "Swiss children make what English children break," runs the proverb. Now, if the national tendency to whittle and the skill with which Americans naturally use tools, were applied by our farmers to putting in order and reconstructing in winter all the wood-work around them which needs repair, there isn't a doubt but that they would have the neatest farm-buildings in the world. But as it is, one might make a personal enemy of his nearest friend by fairly criticising the contents of his tool-chest—that sure test of neat work. It is safe to say that in three cases out of four the chief material in the tool-chest is broken, rusty, worthless scraps of iron and leather; and that there isn't a sharp tool in the entire kit. A day or two spent in vigorous use of the grindstone and whetstone would constitute the first step toward winter improvement.—N. Y. Tribune.

Lisbon.

It was the wandering Ulysses, says an ancient tradition, who founded Lisbon, and gave it his name, "Ulyssipo," which, in the course of time, was contracted to "Lisbon;" but there are Portuguese historians who claim for their capital a still more remote antiquity, and declare, with marvelous precision, that Elisa, a great-grandson of Abraham, laid its first stone B. C. 3259. Be this as it may, it is certain that the Phœnicians had at a very early period, a flourishing colony here, and that they introduced most successfully their worship all over the country, for to this day rude figures carved in stone representing the bull Apis, a popular idol of this people, are frequently found in every part of Lisbon.

The present cathedral of Lisbon is said to be built on the site of a Moorish mosque erected out of the ruins of a temple first dedicated to Astarte by the Phœnicans, and afterwards to Diana by the Romans.

In the days of Julius Cæsar both Spain and Portugal were overwhelmed by the Romans, who utterly changed the character, and even some of the names of the principal cities.

Lisbon, under their denomination, became "Felicitas Julia," in honor of the daughter of the first Cæsar, and remained beneath the imperial rule A. D. 400, the time of the invasion of the Peninsula by the barbarians. It now became one of the chief cities of the Gothic empire, and reassumed its ancient name of Ulyssipo or Olispo.

In the year 703 Don Roderick lost it to the Mohammedans at the fatal battle of Guadelete. The inhabitants had, at an early period, embraced Christianity, and they were now doomed to suffer beneath the yoke of the followers of Mohammed an infinity of woe and misery. Their conquerers were, it is true, a luxurious, highly civilized and learned people, but they were conquerors, and the spirit of such is rarely gentle and conciliatory; moreover, the Moorish kings of Cordova, having concentrated the whole power and revenues of nine-tenths of the Peninsula into their hands, found it necessary to employ great bodies of foreign auxiliaries to keep down rebellion. They, therefore, summoned mercenaries from all parts of the East to their aid, and distributed to them according to their nationalities in the various cities of their new possession.

Thus, Egyptians were sent to Lisbon and Beja, Persians to Huste, Assyrians to Seville and Granada, and Israelites from Damascus, Emessa and old Palestine to Cordova, Medina, and Algesiras. These mercenaries treated the Christians with terrible harshness. But, if the rightful owners of the soil wept and toiled, their masters founded a glorious and glittering epoch in Arabian history. Art and learning flourished beneath their fostering care, Architecture of the most exquisite beauty and richness adorned the cities of Granada, Seville, and Toledo, and the Alhambra and Alcazar are still wonders of the world.

Lisbon also shared in these embellishments. Her ancient churches, most of them originally Roman temples, were converted into mosques, and but little of their clasic origin was left beneath the gorgeous arabesques and Saracenic ornaments with which they were now loaded. At Cintra, not far distant from the city, and a spot celebrated throughout the world for its Elden-like beauty, the Moorish kings built a palace of surpassing splendor as their summer residence in imitation of Granada.—Selected.

A Kindly Deed.

A kindly deed
Is a little seed,
That groweth all unseen;
And lo, when none,
Doth look thereon,
Anew it springeth green.

Begin Now.

Lizzie sat among her pets, her face between her hands thinking. She did not notice Rover gazing wistfully into her face, nor did she see Pussy perched near her. You might have thought she was watching her pet chickens eat the supper she had just brought them, but you would have been wrong. It was Sunday afternoon. Lizzie was thinking over her Sunday-school lesson. Miss Parker had asked all her scholars to become Christians that morning in Sunday-school.

"Dear girls," she had said, "if ever you mean to be Christians, you must begin some time. Why not begin now?"

This was what interested Lizzie so much. "I do want to be a Christian," she thought, "but I know I shall get cross and scold the children. I know I will be saucy to mother. I know I will disobey her. I know I can't keep God's commandments. Oh dear! I am so wicked." A great tear stole down her cheek. Just then the minister, old Dr. Grey, went by on his way from afternoon service. Quick as a flash Lizzie jumped up and ran to meet him. All the children loved Dr. Grey, and no one ever felt afraid of him. Lizzie slipped her hand in his.

"May I walk a little way with you, please?" asked she. The minister pressed her fingers.

"Of course, my dear. Why were you not in church this afternoon?"

"Because mother went, sir, and I staid home to tend the baby," answered Lizzie.

"And so you were about your Father's business," said Dr. Grey.

Lizzie looked up at him in surprise. "Was taking care of baby that?" said she. "Oh! Dr. Grey, if you only knew how I wanted to be about my Father's business. I do want to be a Christian, but I'm afraid!"

"Afraid of what, dear child?" asked he, tenderly.

"I know I could not be good and holy," whispered Lizzie. "I could not keep from doing naughty things and saying cross words."

"The Lord is thy keeper," repeated Dr. Grey, "Trust in him, Lizzie. Jesus is able, not only to save you now, but also to keep you from falling."

Just then Lizzie's mother was heard calling through the still, evening air.

"Good-by, Lizzie," said Dr. Gray. "Don't forget. The Lord is thy keeper."

Lizzie ran home to set the table for supper, then helped wash up the dishes, then put baby to bed, and when at last the tired little feet sat down to rest, mother kissed her, saying, "I thank my little Christian daughter for all her help."

That repaid Lizzie. "The Lord is my keeper," she repeated, half aloud. "He did keep me to-night, mother. I am not afraid any more." Then she told her mother all about her fears, and the little talk with Dr. Grey.

Children, if any of you are afraid to begin to follow Jesus, don't hesitate any longer. He is able to keep us, big or little, great or small, young or old. Trust in him and fear not, for "the Lord is thy keeper.—Missionary Echo.

Crooks.

"Well, boys, busy as bees this bright Saturday afternoon, I see," said Mr. Atkins, or "Uncle Bill," as all the boys called him. "What are you all about?" he went on as he threw himself on the grass beside them.

"I'm trying to make a mast for my ship," said Johnny, who was whittling at a knotty stick; "but the old thing is so crooked that I shall never get a straight mast out of it."

"I'm afraid not, indeed. But what are you at, Ned?"

"I was going to make a telegraph, sir; but the wire is so full of kinks, and they are so hard, I can't get them out."

"Look here, boys," cried Jim, coming from the house, where he had gone for a pitcher of water, "isn't this the queerest old pitcher you ever saw? It looks as though it were making faces at you."

"Sure enough, the handle was put on all awry; and the mouth was twisted "as if it had been eating persimmons," Johnny said.

"Ah, boys!" said Uncle Bill, "take care of the crooks before they get in so hard. Johnny's stick was once a tender twig that you could bend any way; and now you can't get the crooks off without splitting it all up. Jim's pitcher was once soft clay, and could be moulded into any form; but the crooks are baked in, and you can't get them out, even if you break the pitcher in pieces. And as to Ned's wire, the only thing you can do with it is to heat it in the fire, and then, when it is red-hot, pound them out. Take care of the crooks, then, lest God put you into the furnace of sorrow, and pound them out with many hard knocks. Or perhaps it may be even worse than that, for the Bible says, 'That which is crooked cannot be made straight.'"—Youth's Companion.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

WATERBURY, Vt.—This is an excellent sixteen page weekly, devoted to the great work of exposing the hidden things of darkness in the form of secret oath-bound societies, and ought to be read by all good people in the country. This paper is high toned and speaks fearlessly against wrong in every form. —Biblical Messenger.

THE SANITARIAN for December maintains the high place hitherto held by this journal in the science and discussion of public health. The leading articles are the report of the New York Medico-Legal society, and papers on carbonic acid and its fatal effects, burns and scalds, house drainage, and the present condition of sanitary science in this country. Home and Health Hints.

—Last week, in spite of special directions twice given to omit, a receipt found its way into this department encouraging the use of wine and brandy in cooking. We advise housekeepers to have nothing to do with such receipts. They are dangerous, murderous. If food cannot be prepared without the use of alcoholic liquors, we had better eat it raw.—ED.

ADVICE TO A COLD FOOTED LADY.—Madam, allow me to prescribe for you. I have had a long experience in the management of delicate women, and believe I can give you some important advice. For the present I prescribe only for your feet.

1st. Procure a quantity of woolen stockings—not such as you buy at the stores under the name of lamb's wool, that you can read a paper through, but the kind that your aunt Jerusha in the country knits for you, thick as a board, that will keep your feet dry and warm in spite of wind and weather.

2d. If you want to be really thorough, change them every morning, hang the fresh ones by the fire during the night.

3d. Procure thick calfskin boots, double uppers and triple souls, and wear them from the 1st of October till the 1st of May. Make frequent applications of some good oil blacking.

4th. Avoid rubbers altogether, except a pair of large rubber boots, that may be worn for a little time through the snow drifts or a flood of water.

5th. Hold the bottoms of your feet in cold water half an inch deep, just before going to bed, two or three minutes, and then rub them hard with rough towels and your naked hands.

6th. Now, madam, go out frequently, in all weathers, and believe me, not only will your feet enjoy a good circulation in the lower extremities, but your head will be relieved of all its fullness, and your heart of its palpitations. Your complexion will be greatly improved and your health made better in every respect.—Dr. Dio Lewis.

The "Science of Health" thus calls attention to a fact which cannot be too frequently enforced on people's minds: "The pernicious habit of breathing through the mouth while sleeping or waking is very hurtful. There are many persons who sleep with the mouth open, and do not know it. They may go to sleep with it closed; but if the mouth is dry and parched on waking it is a sign that it has been open during sleep. Snoring is another sure sign. This habit should be overcome. At all times, except when eating, drinking, or speaking, keep the mouth firmly closed, and breathe through the nostrils, and retire with a firm determination to conquer. The nostrils are the proper breathing apparatus—not the mouth. A man may inhale poisonous gases through the mouth without being aware of it, but not through the nose."

Lard may be kept sweet and free from any strong and rancid odor, for any length of time, by putting into each kettlefull, while rendering, a handful of red or slippery elm bark. Treated thus, it has a sweet and not unpleasant smell in the hottest weather. This is a very old plan, the knowledge of which, if we mistake not, was derived from the Indians, who kept their deer fat in this way. We have never tried it, but have been assured of its utility.

RECEIPT FOR CURING MEAT.—To one gallon of water, take one and one-half pounds of salt; one-half pound of sugar; one-half ounce of saltpeter; one-half ounce of potash.

In this ratio the pickle can be increased to any quantity desired. Let these be boiled together until all the dirt from the sugar rises to the top and is skimmed off. Then throw it into a tub to cool, and when cold, pour it over your beef or pork. The meat must be well covered with pickle, and should not be put down for at least two days after killing, during which time it should be slightly sprinkled with powdered saltpeter, which removes all the surface-blood, etc., leaving the meat fresh and clean. Some omit boiling the pickle, and find it answers well, though the operation of boiling purifies the pickle by throwing off the dirt always to be found in salt and sugar. If this receipt is strictly followed, it will require only a single trial to prove its superiority over the common way or most ways of putting down meat.

A SIMPLE PLAN OF VENTILATION.—The following simple method for ventilating ordinary sleeping and dwelling rooms is recommended by Mr. Hinton in his "Physiology for Practical Use:" "A pice of wood three inches high and exactly as long as the breadth of the window, is to be prepared. Let the sash be now raised, the slip of wood placed on the sill, and the sash drawn closely upon it. If the slip has been well fitted, there will be no draft in consequence of the displacement of the sash at its lower part; but the top of the lower sash will overlap the bottom of the upper one, and between the two bars perpendicular currents of air, not felt as draft, will enter and leave the room."

A piece of red pepper, the size of your finger-nail, put into meat or vegetables when first beginning to cook, will aid greatly in killing the unpleasant odor arising therefrom. Remember this for boiled cabbage, green beans, onions, chickens, mutton, etc.

WINTER CARE OF COWS.—Alexander Hyde writes as fyllows to the New York Times:

We see it frequently recommended of late years to keep cows in the stable most of the time in the winter months, and this is the practice of many good farmers. They let them out in the morning for half an hour for watering, and again in the afternoon a few minutes for the same purpose, but most of the time they are kept housed by day as well as by night in order to avoid the chilling influence of the cold air. If the stable is well lighted and ventilated, this practice is not so very objectionable, but in mild, clear days we should prefer to have cattle in the yard. They want a little exercise, and love to scratch and rub themselves. One of Sidney Smith's rubbing pols in the yard is an excellent thing for them. He placed bars in various places and varying hights around his lots, and took great delight in seeing his cattle go under them and scratch their backs. A couple of supports in the barn-yard, with a cross-bar higher at one end than the other to accommodate the varying altitudes of the cows, is a cheap institution that will afford the animals much comfort of a winter's day. Those who have never tried it will be surprised to find how much their cows will patronize this simple gymnasium that England's great clerical humorist devised. As the cows come out of the stable they will go often to the posts and cross bar for a little scratch on their backs and rub on their flanks before they go to their watering trough. A little scratching sometimes does humanity great good, and cows are not so inhuman as they are often supposed to be. They love freedom, free air, and the free exercise of their limbs, just as men do, and with their hides and fur cloaks do not suffer from the cold when the thermometer ranges from ten to twenty deg. When the north wind blows furiously and the cold snow flies, the cows—poor things—had better be in the warm stables.

SAVE THE BEST FOWLS FOR BREEDING.—It is the worst possible policy to kill all the best and handsomest fowls, and save only the mean and scraggy ones to breed from. This is precisely the way to run out your stock; for like tends to breed like, and the result is, that by continually taking away the best birds, and using the eggs of the poorest your flock will grow poorer and poorer every succeeding year.

It would seem as though this was too plain to be insisted upon, but, in fact, "line upon line" is needed. It is the crying want of the poultry upon the farms the country through this careful and intelligent selection of the best for breeding.

Nothing is lost by a little self-denial to start with. The extra pound or two of poultry flesh that you leave on its legs, instead of sending it to the market, is as good seed, and will bring forth tenfold and twenty fold in your future broods. Save your best stock for breeding.—The Poultry World.

A gentleman, long resident in Mexico, says that a good way to manage a horse that will not be shod, is to take a cord the size of a common bed-cord; put it into the mouth of the horse like a bit, and tie it tightly on the animal's head, passing his left ear under the string, not painfully tight, but tight enough to keep the ear down and the cord in its place. This done, pat the horse gently on the side of the head and command him to follow. It subdues any horse, and he becomes as gentle and obedient as a dog.

Every sorting of apples tends to cause them to rot and so also does alternating temperature. Keep them as uniformly cool as possible without freezing. The barrels, if tight, may be subjected to a temperature as low as twenty-four degrees for a considerable time without injury, but from this temperature they should not be suddenly moved to one much above the freezing point. Uniform and low, dry temperature is the all in all for the successful keeping of fruits for long periods. If there must be change, let it be gradual.

DEFENCE OF JUDGE DANIEL H. WHITNEY,

Master of Belvidere Lodge, before the Grand Lodge of Ill., On charge of Unmasonic Conduct, in bringing Samuel L. Keith the Murderer of Ellen Slade to justice.

RENUNCIATION.

5th. Because the said committee, after having proceeded to business on Tuesday morning, the 11 of November, for the first time informed me that other charges against me, were in their hands, by order of the Grand Lodge, preferred by members of Belvidere Lodge, which were without date and of which I had received no previous notice;

6th. Because said committee entertained a complaint of falsehood against me, for alledging that the Lodge has refused to allow me eighteen dollars that they had been for a long time indebted to me, and they received as evidence against me the Records of Belvidere Lodge, showing an allowance of five dollars in my favor, although proven and admitted that the said allowance of five dollars was made at a communication of the Lodge when I was absent, and that on motion of one of my deadliest enemies, without my knowledge, consent or authority;

7th. Because the said committee, after patiently hearing the prosecution all of Tuesday and a part of Tuesday evening, (during which time the only witnesses called were my accusers, being complainants, prosecutors, counsel and witnesses in the case) the prosecution having rested—I called brother Horace Robinson, a candid and worthy man, and member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who testified to facts, most of which are known to this entire community, but which facts were in the general conclusive in my favor, amply justifying the course which I pursued was permitted to be made the subject of vituperation, and in such a manner, as it appeared to me, to give witnesses most distinctly to undenstand that they would be dealt with if they stated facts favorable to my defence;

8th. Because the said committee, knowing that I was under recognizance to attend the Kane County Circuit Court as a witness in the case of the People vs. Wm. Woodward, (on change of venue) indicted for manslaughter, as being concerned in the death of Ellen Slade, and that the same was set for trial on Thursday, 13th November, and that it would be impossible for me to return sooner than Friday evening, or Saturday, they, the said committee, did declare that they were here "at the expense of the Grand Lodge, to give the subject of these complaints a full, through and fair investigation," and that they would adjourn until my return, and that I should have a fair chance for my defence;

9th. Because, on Saturday the said committee met me at the depot in Marengo, on my return from said court, and within twelve miles of Belvidere, and they, in violation of their pledge to remain and hear my defence on their return home;

10th. Because the said committee informed me at the said depot, that they should report to the Grand Master the evidence they had taken, and that I must take the evidence of my defence and forward the same to the Grand Master;

11th. Because, on my return home, I found that the committee had left no copy of specific charges against me to which I should direct my defence, although they knew the charges were general, and that others had been verbally preferred and couched in ambiguous language;

12th. Because the said committee left no power or authority by which I could compel the attendance of witnesses, nor did they authorize any person to preside, or even to take down and certify the evidence that I might adduce;

13th. Because, as I am informed, and verily believe, that after I left for Kane county, the said committee called brother Robinson before them, and to an account for the statement of the facts made by him, when called to stand by me, and permitted him to be bullied and browbeaten by the said accusers, prosecutors, counsel and witnesses;

14th. Because the aforesaid brow-beating of said witness was evidently intended to intimate to others that it would not be safe for them to state facts favorable to me, if they wished to avoid the ire of the fraternity;

15th. Because several of my witnesses declare that they are unwilling to testify voluntarily; as they dread the persecution of the Lodge.

16th. Because I am informed, and verily believe, during my absence aforesaid, the said committee received the written statements of S. A. Hurlbut to use in evedence against me, notwithstanding the said committee were fully aware that the said Hurlbut had led off in this whole transaction from the moment he advised Dr. Woodward to flee the country, until the moment of his giving that evidence; and that, too, with a full knowledge on their part, that Division second, Section 14 of the Criminal Code provides, that "an accessory after the fact is a person who, after full knowledge that a crime has been committed, conceals it from the magistrate, or harbors and protects the person charged with or found guilty of the crime," and for the offence, "shall be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, and fined in a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars."

And for public reasons,

1. Because I am convinced, from the action of a large majority of the members of Belvidere Lodge, and from the action of the high authorities of the Grand Lodge, that the dark and revolting crimes, of which a large proportion of the members of Belvidere Lodge are guilty, are not considered worthy of notice, nor derogatory to Masonry;

2. Because it is apparent that Masonry does exact from its votaries the violation of the laws of the land to screen a member from punishment due to crime;

3. Because the committee plainly indicated that they would not be influenced by testimony showing that the Sheriff was influenced by Masonry and Oddfellowship in his not arresting Keith, and in his filling the panel of the Grand Jury with five of Keith's warm personal friends, three of whom were Masons, and two Oddfellows, (one of these, brother Secretary Rix, being both a Mason and an Oddfellow), and one of whom, in the evening, after the Grand Jury had failed to find a bill against Keith, and before they were discharged, in a drinking "fuddle" in the bar-room, drank to Keith "here is to the brave and innocent;" and this indication manifested by the committee after being apprised that I could prove by Grand Jurors or the regular panel that they adjourned before the business before them was disposed of and publicly stated that they adjourned because they "would not sit there and be brow-beaten by the talesmen that had been packed upon them;

4. Because the committee did plainly indicate that no justification was admissible on the part of a Mason for asking or receiving aid and protection from "outsiders" when apprised of his meditated assassination by members of his fraternity;

5. Because the whole proceedings of Belvidere Lodge, (with the exception of Horace Robinson, A. C. Fuller, Col. Freeman, Rev. M. Decker, Lyman Benson, C. Connell, and a few others, being some fifteen out of nearly seventy members) together with the Grand Lodge, when assembled in October last, and its constitute authorities since, has established beyond controversy that Masonry regards only as subjects of imperative discipline, those who infringe upon the secret usages of the Order, or refuse to violate their duty as citizens and public officers to protect a criminal brother, or those who dare expose iniquity and crime among the fraternity;

6. And because, being convinced of the improper interference of Masons, as Masons, in the obstruction of the laws in reference to the murder of Miss Slade, and being, unwillingly, forced to the conviction that the "high anthorities" of Masonry demand of her votaries (there are those two nonest to yield, but of these but few dare speak out) the violation of the laws of God and of men, to favor, aid, protect and assist a brother Mason without regard to the rights of others, I do solemnly aver that this whole transaction carries conviction to my mind that the occasion was gladly seized upon and prosecuted against me as a fit one to overawe, and deter in the faithful discharge of their duties, public officers (being Masons) judicial, ministerial and executive; and to point a course of conduct for officers and members of Lodges inconsistent with the principles of morality, and in derogation of the laws of the land; a course of conduct jeopardizing the rights, property, lives, liberty and character of those who are not of the fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons;

I do, therefore, hereby certify you and through you the Grand Lodge and through them the entire fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, that, for the reasons aforesaid, together with others not necessary to name—I renounce forever the Institution of Free and Accepted Masons; and disavow, disclaim and disallow all duties, obligations, penalties and imprecations heretofore taken, imposed, consented to or promised—past, present and future, known, or to be known, communicated or anticipated; and henceforth hold myself amenable only to the conventionol rules of the great fraternity of human society, and to the laws of my country and of God.

I am respectfully yours &c.,

D. H. WHITNEY,
late Worshipful Master of Belvidere Lodge,
No. 60, F. A. M.'s.

Nov. 19th, Anno Domini 1851. Anno Lucis, 5851.

To the Most Worshipful Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of F.A. Masons, Ill.:

I have never received any official information of the final determination of the Grand Master, but have heard, and I presume correctly, that the committee recommended my suspension for thirty days; and that after receiving the above renunciation the Grand Master declared me suspended during the pleasure of the Grand Lodge.

This, of course, I can only know by mere accident or rumor, and it may not be literally true No Mason, knowing the facts would dare to communicate them to me; for the reason that any Mason who would converse with one who is suspended or expelled, on the subject of Masonry, subjects himself to the highest and severest penalties that the Lodge can inflict.

I deem but little comment on the foregoing case called for. It will be observed that I met every move at the threshold, and in the face of the Lodge, the Grand Lodge, and their high, authorities, and nothing can be fairly charged as an afterthought, or as engendered by disappointment, or ill-will in consequence of the treatment I received. I believe my defence before the Grand Lodge is as plain and as independent as anything I have at any stage of the proceedings said or written. The defence was drawn up and forwarded when I supposed the Grand Master was living, and would preside at the October communication, and who I knew had satisfied himself, while here, of the truth of most of the statements in that defence. As a private, or an isolated matter, I admit that the public would hardly have a claim for its publication. But if the "talons" of Masonry are again fully grown; if in the midst of every community, secret societies are growing up, the members of which, in their midnight orgies, by solemn obligation pledge themselves each to the other, and to all of the same fraternity the world over, in bonds stronger than those of consanguinity, to stand by, aid and assist each other in all and every emergency, the world has a claim upon those who dare to speak.

Temperance.

THE PREACHER'S CIGAR.—"I knew a young preacher, whose oratory obtained for him the admiration of many influential persons. Among them was a gentleman of fortune, who courted his company and taught him to smoke. The young minister was warned of his danger, but could not be persuaded to renounce what he considered a harmless indulgence, and claimed that his cigar soothed his mind, and composed his feelings. A friend, in reply, told him the mind and feelings never wanted composing nor soothing when in health, by artificial means, but only when discomposed and irritated by improper causes; and added, 'beware how you indulge in a bad habit.'" Impatient under the rebuke, the clergyman rejoined, "I smoke but seldom, and could almost do without it." "Seldom and almost are two fatally omnious words. Seldom will become regular, and is sure to be converted into always. And as smoking and drinking are sworn companions, let me beseech you," said his friend, "not to make them yours. Ministers should be a fence around the pit of perdition. Some inexperienced youth may see you smoke, and imitate your example, and become a confirmed smoker, and sooner or later, a confirmed drunkard. The line of demarcation being once effaced, he may soon be lost in the vortex of sin." Little did this young preacher suppose this to be a picture of his own case.

Gov. Dingley, of Maine, in his inaugural, expresses the conviction that the prohibitory law has accomplished great good; it has not only diminished liquor-selling and liquor-drinking, but it has wrought a change in public sentiment, more especially in rural districts. The large villages and the cities are an exception to this state of things, but even in these places prohibition has been enforced with "more or less" thoroughness, and with marked beneficial results.

The Maine Law on Exhibition.

A correspondent of the Morning Star says that the State Fair at Lewiston, Maine, universal sobriety appeared to reign. He adds:—It is well known, that in Lewiston and its sister city Auburn, perhaps I may say, in the whole county of Androscoggin, the prohibitory law finds a more ready and thorough execution than in any other part of the State. Would it stand the strain of this great gala week of the State? That was the question on trial. The verdict has been rendered. Our streets, barring the hum and hurry of an immense crowd, were as quiet as on ordinary days, and arrests for disorderly conduct were nearly as frequent as usual. One man, coming from a distant part of the State, having constituted himself one of the judges in this department, reports, that he hunted for four days in a crowd of ten thousand people to find one man drunk, and gave it up.

Having myself spent on the fair ground an entire half of one of the days, that called out the largest crowd of the occasion, say from ten to twelve thousand people, without witnessing a single instance of intoxication. I could not help comparing notes with myself, and marking the difference between this and the military musters, and such like occasions forty or fifty years ago. No man can deny that it is largely to be attributed to the fact, that not a single open grog shop can be found either by day or night in the two cities in question. And not a tent on the ground was allowed to sell a drop of the accursed beverage, and withal nobody dared to bring any considerable supply even in his pockets, out of wholesome fear of the police, who are apt to be around in this section just when wanted. Last spring, owing to dissensions and remissness in the Republican ranks, the Democrats in Lewiston came into power. Still it goes just as hard, so far as I can learn, with rum and rummies as ever. And God grant, so may it be to the end.

INTEMPERANCE HEREDITARY. —The sensualist, whether man or woman, will stamp upon his or her offspring the marks of vice; and especially will intemperance in drink display its baneful influence through several generations. In fact with the increasing power of hereditary proclivity descending from father to son, there would seem to be no hope for a family subject to the consequences of ancestral vice—and so it would be but for counteractions interposed by a like process of nature. There is a warning in the frail constitution which is one of the incidents, and the predisposition to an early death. Greater care is therefore made necessary—yet this is generally insufficient at least during the first generation, to prevent the fatal developement in early life of the vice inherited from a depraved ancestor. If there should be physical strength there will be gross indulgence. But whatever the cause may be, whenever there is an inert habit of body without moral refinement, brutish vices are apt to be developed, especially intemperance, and there is ordinarily no cure for this but what nature has provided, viz: the pain of disease—which if unheeded, an early death or a wretched imbecility is the alternative.

1st. Let every man use the powers which God has given him strictly in accordance with their natural scope, and be content with that measure of active efficiency and influence appertaining to these powers in their proper healthful development. To aspire beyond this is to attempt rashly a scheme of life not designed for him, and which if pursued, will be abortive and likely to end in misery and vice.

2d. Avoid all resorts to artificial aid for the purpose of obtaining a temporary vigor, either of mind or body. Anything beyond the natural supply of force by the aliment of healthful food, only reacts and is followed by depression. Especially is this true of alcoholic exhilaration. It may promote convivial wit an hour or two in the evening, but it makes a dull and ill-natured companion in the morning. For any serious and continuous labor it is as unfit as the running of a horse up hill in order to get greater impetus —a forced effort resulting in a more speedy exhaustion.—Sanitarian.

Facts and Figures.

—Of 10,000 volunteers joining the French army last year, and representing the upper and middle classes, 5,500 were scarcely able to read and write, 3,000 had only the most elementary education, and 1,000 only the mere elementary education required of non-commissioned officers. Is it any wonder the Germans were victorious?

—Thirty-five years ago the British Educational Department expended $150,000. For the present year the House of Commons, without a dissenting voice, has voted an appropriation of about $6,500,000. It is expected that before very long 4,000,000 children in England and Wales will be provided with school privileges.

—The correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger writes as follows, from New York: The commanding influence of the Hebrew element in almost every department of business, wholesale and retail, is never so noticeable as on the recurrence of the great fast of the Atonement, when all secular occupations are suspended. The Stock Exchange and the Board of Brokers not only miss them, but most of the other great exchanges, as well as the retail marts of Chatham street, Division street, and the Eighth avenue. Probably there is no other religious festival the observance of which would make such a vacuum in the sphere of general business. At the Weehawken cattle market also, where hundreds of thousands of dollars are disbursed, weekly, the day had a Sunday appearance, owing to the conspicuous absence of the same class of dealers.

—Philadelphia has already one of the widest bridges in the world, and a second is in process of construction. The first, the Girard avenue bridge, has a width of 100 feet, and is used by foot passengers and carriages. The second, to be put over Richmond street by the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, will have a span of 64 feet, a width of 205 feet, and carry eighteen tracks. The bridge has been completed by the Phœnixville Bridge Company, but has not yet been in position. The same Company have recently built an iron bridge over the Saco River at Biddleford, Me., which was ready for traffic within forty days from the date of the order, at which time the iron lay in the form of puddle-bar. This bridge, formed upon the principle of interchangeble parts and pin connections, has three spans of 133 feet each, and two spans of 100 feet each, and cost about $40,000.

—Residents of Boston and vicinity have been excited by the operations of a man who has been killing fish at Quincy Point, Mass., by the explosion of nitro-glycerine. Large numbers of sea-bass have of late appeared off the Glades and in the waters around Quincy Point, and it was upon these that the man made his experiments. His first attempt was with a small bottle of nitro-glycerine, the explosion of which under water brought to the surface only three or four dead bass. A second trial, with an extra charge of the explosive compound in a can, proved more destructive, all the fish within a circle of forty yards being shocked by the concussion and rising to the surface in great numbers. About on hundred were found to have been instantly killed, and were captured and sold.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this conntry, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is snpposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acqnainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his acconnt is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actnally Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

Publisher's Department.

We have just issued a prospectus for the New Year. It will aid all who are working for the paper. We will be glad to send it to any friends who request it.

Will you please notice the label on your paper, and if your time expires in December send in your renewal. If it expires in January, will you do all you can to get up a good number of new subscriptions to send with your renewal the first of January? Now is the time to work for new subscriptions in order to give the Cynosure a subscription list that will pay expenses, as well as to promote this reform. It is a very cheap paper, and issued in the most convenient form for reading.

The plan of discontinuing subscriptions when the time is out must keep the list from increasing very fast unless our friends are faithful and active.

Our agents have now three weeks to work in before we give in a report of the size of our mail list. Will you not, between now and then, do your best to help us to a good report?

Are you circulating petitions? How many names have you? Be sure to get as many as possible. Do not fail to give everybody an opportunity to sign.

HAS ANY ONE EREV HEARD CONVERSATIONS LIKE THE FOLLOWING?—Eldest daughter.—I do not know what to give father for a New Year's present

Eldest son.—Give him a copy of the Christian Cynosure for a year; there is nothing he would like better. We are going to make the pastor a present of it this year, and send a copy to Mr. Burke, who had his crops destroyed by the grasshoppers.

Grandfather.—Shall we not send a copy of the Cynosure to our sons-in-law?

Grandmother.—Yes, I think so, certainly. I do not know but they may join the lodge if they do not have it; and besides, Jane and Sarah and the little folks would think so much of the Family Department. You had better send on the money to-day so that they will be sure to get the paper by New Years.

Postage on the Cynosure.

After Jan. 1st, 1875, THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. The postage on the CYNOSURE is 20 cents a year.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 year a we cannot do this.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscriber for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shal have to shorten the time of subscription to pay sufficientlyit l

Will the Cynosure be out of Debt by the first of January?

If all our readers who have a "1" on their labels will send us their renewals and pay what they owe; if our friends send us all the renewals and new subscriptions they possibly can, we think the Cynosure debt will be canceled by the first of January.

One warm friend in Peoria says that for every subscription he can obtain in that city of one dollar, he will pay the other dollar and have the paper sent for one year. This he does for the sake of having the paper widely read, and put on a paying basis.

A Mason (who was better than Masonic principles) said to Mr. Sam'l French, of Chapin, Illinois, that he would give one dollar towards sending the paper to a man in the grasshopper region if Mr. French would pay the other. The offer was accepted and the subscription in this way renewed.

No one can appreciate the value of the Cynosure more keenly than an honest, Christian man who has been swindled and degraded by the false and sinful institution of Freemasonry. Hence we hope to find many friends like this one entending the circulation of the Cynosure.

Who will be the next to send money to pay for some subscriber who is struggling against poverty as well as against sin.

Please work in every honorable way to free the Cynosure from indebtedness and to enlarge the subscription list.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Note if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Topics of the Time.

The boldness of manager Strakosch in opening his opera in New York on a late Sabbath has been followed by a whole troup of operas, theaters and low varieties. Business houses and beer shops took the contagion of Sabbath-breaking from the places of amusement, "and," says the New York Tribune, arraigning the desecration, "if we may judge by the symptoms visible in Bowery, New York promises soon to be a busier town on Sunday than any capital on the continent of Europe." This violation of law and good order was the subject of a petition from several hundred prominent ment of the city, but the police authorities, on attempting the suppression of the evil, were in several cases met with an injunction against interference. In this discussion H. W Beecher falls naturally to the side of laxness; preaching in favor of Sunday trains and horse-cars and again keeping the Sabbath by authority of God. The vapidity of Plymouth Pulpit is in striking contrast with the protest of these business men who would save the Sabbath for worldly reasons, while Beecher would destroy it to ease troubled consciences.

The civil and criminal suits instituted in the Beecher-Tilton case are not unlikely, after all, to end in smoke. Of the "side-show" cases, that of Bowen against the Brooklyn Argus for libel has been decided without testing the truth of the libelous article; and last week Miss Proctor's suit against Moulton was taken from the courts and settled by the parties, Moulton paying costs, and yielding so much as to say that his allusions to the lady were founded on hearsay. The suit against the Daily Graphic will follow the same course. The civil suit for damages, Tilton vs Beecher, was fixed for Dec. 8th, but just in time the Court of Appeals allows the bill of particulars and the trial isput off to January. The criminal suit, Beecher vs Tilton, was expected to make an end of this whole ugly affair, and Tilton's lawyers, weeks since, appeared in court and urged an early trial. But District Attorney Winslow, one of the famed investigating committee and author of their, report has this matter in his own power, and says it shall wait on his pleasure. This reply has certainly an evil omen for Mr. Beecher, and is everywhere interpreted as an acknowledgement of a weak case. Meantime it is an interesting question for ecclesiastical settlement, whether the Congregational churches must wait on the civil courts for a decision of Mr. Beecher's standing among them. If they concede such weakness their denominational system or its practice needs reorganizing.

R. A. Wilbur, United States Agent for the Papago Indians in New Mexico, has made a communication to the Secretary of the Interior in which appears some noticeable facts in regard to the power of the Catholic clergy. In the general place of the Indian Bureau of placing the different agencies under the various churches, this unfortunate tribe has fallen among wolves in sheep's clothing. A few extracts from this report will suffice to show the spirit of New Mexican priests which may in charity be supposed to be exceptional; but, from the spirit drawn out by the English controversy, it may reasonably be doubted whether the popish system can produce any other effects. The Indians complain, the agent writes, "that frequent attempts have been made to compel them (the Indians) to give the Bishop one-tenth of all their earnings, as a tithe for the benefit of the church, and they complain that, generally, the designs and actions of these priests, if not kept under strict control, or entirely removed, will lead directly to placing them (the Indians), as in olden times, in a condition of vassalage and servile bondage. My own views, from practical experience, corresponds with those of the Indians." He says also that the priests have "openly declared war against the public school system, which the Governor of the Territory had succeeded in getting into successful operation under the greatest of difficulties. They have publicly stated that they will not rest until they have uprooted every germ of free education so planted. They have shown in every way that they are not in sympathy with the genius and spirit of American institutions. The priests are not American citizens; the only knowledge they seem to have of human polity is that in which the civil is united with the church power to rule for the sole purpose of acquiring power."

Theology of Grangeism.

From a grange hymn book, entrtied: "SONGS FOR THE GRANGE;" set to music and dedicated to the order of Patrons of Husbandry in the United States, the following verbatim quotations were taken to illustrate some of the religious views and doctrines taught by that order:

"Their charter by the Master's hand,
Was signed, and witnessed by his eye,
And the recording angel keeps,
A transcript in the Grange on high."

"Grange of our hope and our pride,
Never from thee may we rove!
Trust, in thy councils abide,— Beautiful Grange that we love."

"Yielding fair Grange unto thee, Homage and praise never dying;"

"And Friendship and Trust, in our Order, ne'er fail."

From funeral hymns to be used upon the occasion of the burial services of a dead female member of the order:

"Then why should we mourn her departure,
Well knowing our loss is her gain;
We shall soon cross that beautiful river,
And to our arms fold her again."

"Then rest thee, beloved one, from toil and from care,
At home with the Master in mansions so fair;
Thy harvest is gathered, away from life's pain;
We know we shall meet thee, dear comrade, again!"

"Come, come, come,
Come to the banquet of love,
When seed-time and harvest have ended below,
We'll rest in the mansions above."

"For all the good the year displays, Accept, O God, our greatful praise."

"When misfortunes come in view,
Cling to those who cling to you."

"Whilst our Order,
Reared in love shall ever stand."

"God of the universe! whose hand,
Hath sown with suns the fields of space."

"Come Patrons assembled to bow at our shrine."

"Keep each obligation a jem of thy soul."

"When order shall cease, and when temples decay,
May each, fairer Granges, immortal survey."

"Beseeching God, in whom we trust,
To bless the Grange assembled here."

"Our Father, in this evening hour,
We cast our cares in trust on Thee;
Oh may we meet and sing on high."

"Come, join your prayers with ours; address Kind Heaven our peaceful Grange to bless."

The object of transcribing the above portion of the grange hymn book for publication, is to make manifest to the most casual reader:

1st. That under the modest title of "Songs," etc., the book or pamphlet referred to, is in reality a collection of social and religious hymns; many of them designed to be sung on stated occasions, and most of them breathing religious fervor, and prayer and praise to God.

2d. That the grange is a social and religious society.

3d. That it is designed to be permanent.

4th. That to be dutiful members of the order is all that is needful to secure to them certain passports to the blissful grange beyond the grave.

5th. That it was designed to forestall or take the place of the churches in the hearts of men; and is, therefore, their rival.

6th. That as there is no mention of, or even allusion to Christ in the foregoing extracts, so also a careful perusal of the book failed to disclose any mention or even the most distant allusion to him.

7th. That though the grange is a religious sect, it is nevertheless, not a Christian sect.

8th. That selfishness is its chief corner-stone; see above, "Cling to those who cling to you."

9th. That love to their enemies is nowhere inculcated, but the opposite.

10th. That in consideration of the above legitimate conclusions, in connection with the fact that high Masons and Odd-fellows put together the materials of the constitution, by-laws, rites and ceremonies of the grange, prove it to be an off-shoot of Freemasonry.

INVESTIGATOR.

"Out of Order."

BY R. FAUROT.

Well, it is getting to be my fate to be "out of order." I am trying to be resigned to the belief that I was "born under the wrong star." It was out of (Masonic) order to inquire into the secrets of Masonry before "going in," since "none but the initiated could know;" and so I was kept out of the lodge. Had I not been so anti-Royal Arch, as to refuse to "stand by a brother so far as to deliver him right or wrong," I might probably have been lecturing against Masonry, to-day, in Indiana. But didn't know why I was slighted, or that anti-Masons required this rule, until a report was made to me of a remark made by the "General Agent and Lecturer" at Waterloo. Yet, after all these sad experiences, I failed to learn wisdom. I couldn't quit reading up Masonry and the Cynosure, and the more I read the less I felt my ability to "preserve my jewel," and finding so many willing listeners, many of whose eyes privately I have opened, and whose feet I may have turned from "dark dens" and "hidden ways." So this week again I lost my jewel on this wise. Being in the State of Michigan, I was invited to attend a "District Ministerial Association;" and as there were but six or eight ministers present, I was invited to read an essay. Well, I at once thought of a subject it seemed to me of much importance in the work of the ministry; and being far from home, I hastily condensed into twenty minutes reading, a few note paper pages, on one of the many specific forms of infidelity of the day, namely, secret societies, a subject I had never presented in such a meeting and so expected it would be somewhat new. Of these societies, I selected Masonry, and quoting only Masonic authorities, I showed: (1) That it claimed to be a religion, but one of "pure theism." (2) It was not only a despotism, but absolute, irresponsible and cruel (3). Its design was the overthrow of all religion and civil government or church and state, putting Masonry in their place.

The critic happened to be the only Mason present. I am happy to say, except a lay brother who kept his jewel to perfection. The critic arose, pale and a little unsteady as to the nerves and "lost his jewel" by a fierce attack upon me and my poor essay; said it was entirely out of order; in bad taste; only the malicious and perverted statements of the enemies of Masonry; not in the line to fit a minister for the work of the ministry, but merely introducing a bone of contention which would divide that church and all the churches and work ruin; that many ministers and good men were Masons; the Bible was carried in their processions; that the sentiments of Voltaire and other infidels could have no place because all were required to believe in God, etc.

The Advocate arose and said. "At my answer no man stood with me;" so it seems Paul was equally unfortunate in his answer to Alexander the coppersmith, nevertheless he stood firm to his sense of duty, though all men forsook him," so the brother felt that he had in his mind's eye a craft equally dangerous to the progress of the Gospel. Hence it appears to me it was eminently in order to introduce just such a theme in just such a place. and if Masonry be as represented, and ministers are fellowshiping it it was highly important they should be warned and exhorted to repent as a preparation for the holy work of the ministry. Moreover the brother has handled the subject with a masterly familarity and in a very gentlemanly manner. And if it disrupts churches, etc., so much the worse for Masonry" With many other outspoken manly words.

Thereupon the President arose and said. "It was very proper and right that all claims to the patronage of society should be called upon to give a clear account of their nature and design, and the very fact that these were secret, was proof that they were not good and safe. He considered that the subject had been properly and most ably presented; and this was the very place to do do it, where as brethren, interested in each other and a holy calling, might talk it all over in a spirit of love;" with many more equally out poken words. He was followed by others in the same strain. One brother said, he was amazed that Christian brethren could not speak freely and kindly on any subject pertaining to human interests; and he could not understand why Masons should be so touchy when Masonry was mentioned. He had been invited and urged to join, but being cautious resolved to examine it first The result of which was that Masonry was ant-Christian, and hence he could have nothing to do with it.

The poor critic finding himself alone, and hearing me give names and dates and Masonic language, etc., so familiarly, and seeing his jewel was gone, calmed down and asked if I had ever been a Mason? I said no! but I had learned these things from Masonic authority. "And now," I said, "suffer me to ask you an equally plain question. How many degrees have you taken?" "I am a Royal Arch!" "Oh!" I said, "seven." This I did not for my own sake, but to those to whom he ministered, who afterward came to me and said with surprise, they did not know he—was a Mason!

Well, I suppose I am again out of order, in the length of this, but I felt anxious to tell of my pleasure at such a reception by this people (Disciples) whose pioneers were so earnestly and unanimously opposed to secret societies. and yet many of whose ministers are apostazing from Christ and becoming "Sons of the widow."

The Church and Adhering Freemasons.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

The Word of God affords an unerring rule for the church, and one only safe ground is to abide by its teachings.

In Eph. v. 11th, we are told to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them." Some commentators suppose that this had special reference to the ancient mysteries which were Freemasonry in another form; but manifestly it applies to every unfruitful work of darkness. We must have no fellowship with, but rather reprove them.

Now Freemasonry is "unfruitful." It does not recognize Christ the source of all fruitfulness. (See John xv. 4-5.)

It is a work of darkness.

(a) It is secret.

(b.) Its oaths and ceremonies are immoral and profane.

(c) Its obligations require its members to disobey God. In the third degree they swear to conceal crime, and in the seventh to help a companion whether right or wrong. Now to retain a member in the church who continues in such practices, after due admonition, is to have fellowship with that practise, and to fail to reprove him is to sin against both our God and our brother; for we are not only to reprove his works, but God has said "Thou shalt not suffer sin upon thy brother, but shall in anywise reprove him." (Lev. xix. 17.) Again in 2d Thess. iii. 6th: "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly."

Now while we may admit that many Freemasons are our brethren in Christ, yet we cannot admit that the oaths and ceremonies of Masonry are a part of an orderly Christian walk. Aside from the nature of his obligations the fact that he is "unequally yoked together with unbelievers" (2d Cor. vi. 14-18) marks his walk as disorderly. Now the command is "withdraw from" him; not because he is not a Christian brother, but because he walks disorderly. Again, if we tolerate Freemasonry in the church we thereby declare that it is good Christian moralty; and if it be good Christian morality we do wrong to oppose it. We cannot expect to have a higher standard of morals in the world than in the church, or to be successful in a political warfare on that which we admit to be good enough for Christian fellowship, and hence as an essential element of success in our work we must begin by seeking the deliverance of our beloved Zion from all complicity with this sin.

Which?

Right or wrong? Courage or cowardice? Of course every one agrees that courage and right are infinitely superior to cowardice and wrong, or even to the toleration of wrong. But prudence or imprudence in the advocacy and support of the right are different quality from either; and thousands justify their passivity towards evil practices because of the power and strength or influence of such practices.

On this principle there could be no patriots, no martyrs, no beginning of, nor opportunity for the exercise of those faculties of man which have in all ages elicited the admiration of our race. There would be no self-sacrifice in the cause of the right, for the wrong is first supreme. Every one would wait until the right became popular before he would show his colors. Men would be such fools as to wait for saloon-keepers to become the first champions of temperance; for slaveholders to advocate the abolition of slavery; or for the devil's agents to preach Christianity. Never would fines or imprisonments of good men have been recorded. Never would dens and caves in the earth have been a refuge for the best of men. No such folly as going against the majority would ever have adorned the page of history. Conscience would have fled. Reason would have been dethroned, and with all the dreadful literalness of the infallable record would be the fact. that "all are gone out of the way," and there are none that do good.

But we live in a time when proofs of the true nobility of man's position abound. He was created in the divine likeness, and has before him an immortality of joy and love, a foretaste of which is enjoyed on earth by the few. Therefore true men desire to destroy every thing hostile to the spirit and principles which shall reign in the glorious beyond. These are the men who shine as stars and give hope to debased humanity. These, as it were, man the life-boat, or spring into the water to save the drowning ones. These are, as it were, the firemen of the moral world, to save sleepers from destruction at the risk of their lives. Your Luthers and Washingtons are made of such stuff. Aye, but these are the men who have often been stigmatized as fanatics and who have borne the heat and burden while others gathered the rich fruit of their labors. As it has been, so it will be. There is much yet to be done before the right reigns and wrong hides its hydra head. There is much time and trouble to be given, much anxiety and sacrifice to be endured before prevalent customs, utterly antagonistic to the best interests of man, can be overcome. Who will volunteer? Who are willing to be soldiers in the great and glorious war? Where is the coward knave who lives, appropriating the blessings derived by the past labors of his forefathers and will not spend a cent nor a second to add to such blessings for prosterity? Who among us has the sense of right and will not let his light shine? A curse is upon him. Let him show himself, and thereby enjoy the gold, whoever else may hoard the dross of mere self-indulgence. God speed the day when our people free, politically, shall be emancipated from secret societies so antagonistic to the whole spirit of Christ and his cause. H.

The Last Anti-Christ.

Some twenty-five years ago Alexander Hislop, of Abroth, Scotland, best known in the literary world by his magnificent book "The two Babylons,' has, in a little work "The Red Republic," given it as his deliberate judgment, that prophesy clearly teaches that the last form of anti-Christianism, "the beast of the Abyss,' with which the church of Christ will be called to conflict, will be infidelity, in active alliance with the world powers of Europe, and in a union offensive and defensive with Rome and other false systems of religion. That the world powers show a strong tendency to national infidelity is unquestionable, and that Rome could be brought to such an alliance, if it would promise her support in gaining her lost ascendency in Europe, he explains by the saying of Adolphe Monod, "There is a power in popery which God knows, and which the devil knows, but which I do not know," whilst there is nothing more natural than such an alliance with unorthodox bodies, even nominally Protestant, for "He is anti-Christ, that denieth the Father and the Son." And certainly infidelity is now in a state of wonderful activity in seeking to ally itself with everything. and has attained wonderful success. What is Secularism in the State, or Rationalism and Voluntaryism in the church, Scepticism in literature, Secularism in the school and college, Materialism in Science, Communism in the masses, and practical atheism and godlessness in morals, but infidelity in active combination with everything, which it can take into its service? And this by way of distinction is the enemy of Christianity in our day,—the spirit of bitter enmity to Christ that harmonizes the Herods and Pilates of otherwise opposing systems, and if true Christians and truly Christian churches only aright interpreted the "signs of the times," they would, forgetting minor differences, concentrate their whole united forces against this foe, who must either be overthrown or religion will perish by his hand. He is not an enemy we can afford to despise. He cannot be turned back by banter or ridicule, or scathing sarcasm. He can array himself in the ponderous armor of Science, kill with the gaudily-feathered, but poisoned-tipped arrow of modern literature, intrench himself behind the deliverances of church councils, and write his name on papal encyclicals. He can wield the power of politics and use as his auxiliaries the devices of state craft. He is equally at home when he heads a revolutionary mob, rises a barricade, and urges the commune to deluge the streets with blood, or when he mounts the platform to talk free love, or shouts the atheism that would disorganize society. Philosophy, however, is his special favorite and friend, and whether he watches the retort, gazes at the stars, or in the editorial chair mixes his poisoned cup, he affects mightily the look of learned wisdom. In fact, he is an enemy so multiform and ubiquitous, that he assaults us at once from every quarter, and is so armed and intrenched, that nothing can reach him but the weapons that are "mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds."—Christian Statesman.

The Meaning of Providential Calamities.

BY REV. D. M'FALL.

The past few years have been heavily freighted with judgments to our nation. The great fire of Chicago, in 1871, has been followed up by a series of varied and distressing calamities. Fire has been added to fire, and flood has followed upon flood; the arm of business has been paralyzed by panic and plague; while the drouth in one part, and the grasshoppers in another, have materially diminished our hopes of the present harvest. And yet, "For all this his anger is not turned away, and his hand is stretched out still."

The pulpit and the press, both religious and secular, have noticed the more striking of these events as they occurred, and have given very different solutions of them. Some deny that they have any meaning at all; others draw unimportant lessons from them; while others again regard them as judgments inflicted on certain localities for their excessive wickedness. The Bible, we believe, does not countenance any one of these views. It uniformly assumes that such dispensations are ordered of God, Psalms cxlviii. 8; while it distinctly denies that they are sent directly on account of the sins of those who immediately suffer, Luke xiii. 1-5. Between these two points their real meaning must lie. In ascertaining what that meaning is, it may be necessary to take a view of God's judgments in general. Some of these are for destruction; others are intended to work reformation. To the former class belong the flood, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, the overthrow of Egypt and Babylon, and indeed of every nation or kingdom that has been overthrown. A little attention to this class of judgments will show the circumstances under which they are inflicted.

1. Not until repeated warnings of the impending doom have been given and rejected. The history of the flood is brief, yet it brings this point distinctly in view. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, was commissioned to reprove the men of his age, and denounce the judgments of heaven on the incorrigibly wicked. From Jude, we learn how explicit the warning was which he gave: "The Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon all." This testimony was solemnly emphasized by the translation of Enoch to heaven, in the presence of those to whom he spake. Such an event was well calculated to be more convincing than the thunders of Sinai. After the translation of Enoch, Noah appeared, and for a hundred and twenty years, ceased not to testify of the coming judgment. The sound of every hammer that fell on the ark was a signal of the approach of the coming deluge. At last it came, and it seems to have been as unexpected as the Mill River flood on the inhabitants of the quiet valley, but it was not because they were not warned, but because they gave no heed to the warning:

The same is true of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. Lot was there uttering his testimony, however feebly, and some of their own citizens were smitten with blindness as a direct check on their wickedness; nor must we forget that the flood itself was a beacon of warning in all after ages to the impenitently wicked. As for Egypt, she was warned ten times. And each intimation was more expressive than another of what the end would be in case she steadfastly refused to let Israel go. It was only when she followed after Israel, determined to bring them again under the unjust and cruel yoke, that God lifted up his hand in wrath and dashed her forever beneath the waves of the Red Sea. Belshazzar was informed by the prophet, that the chastisements which his father suffered should have been a warning to him "to humble his heart before God." But when he refused to do so, and lifted himself up against the Lord of heaven, then was the part of the hand sent from him. And this is the writing that was written, "God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it." And did history furnish the full facts in every case, we would see that no nation was ever "finished" without abundant premonitions of the coming doom.

2. They were not inflicted until the appointed means for redressing the wrong had entirely failed to do it. "God governs the world," is a concise statement of an extensive truth; but in the administration of his government, he employs many delegated powers, and it is only when these fail, or utterly refuse to execute judgment, that he himself directly interferes. His providences never usurp the functions of those "powers" which he has "ordained;" they are intended rather to prompt and aid them in the discharge of their duties. As an illustration of this point, take the defeat of Israel before Ai. God had given specific directions in relation to the capture of Jericho, and these were to be enforced by Joshua. But a member of the tribe of Judah transgresses the command, and takes of the "accursed thing." Under these circumstances, three thousand men are sent to take Ai, but they are defeated, and thirty-six of them fall by the sword. Then Joshua inquires of the Lord the cause of the defeat, and the answer is returned, "Israel has sinned in taking of the accursed thing, and therefore they could not stand before their enemies." The important points are these: God does not directly punish the criminal; had he done so, his providences would have been taking the place due to civil government; nor does he directly inform on him, for then he would have been setting aside his own ordinance of the lot; but he simply says, "Israel has sinned, and therefore they cannot stand;" and in commanding Joshua to put away the evil, he, in effect, says, You have the means of detecting the criminal, and the power to punish him, and of you will I require it." But had Joshua and all Israel repeatedly refused to take action in the case, and continued to shield the criminal, we are safe in concluding that God would have overthrown them as utterly as he overthrew Egypt. "Though hand joined in hand, the wicked shall not go unpunished."

In the light of these facts, our present providential calamities are easily explained. They are not retributions on certain localities for their excessive wickedness. However wicked such may be, it is not God's province to punish them. That is the duty of the nation through its government—the "power" which he has ordained among us for the execution of righteous judgment. But they are intimations to that power that there is some evil or evils within its jurisdiction which need to be corrected; and solemn warnings that if it neglect or refuse to do so, God will himself require it in final overthrow, when once his long-suffering patience has come to an end. What the evil is which God would have us correct is for every patriot to inquire. It may be the stupendous corruption which prevails in high places; or our unjust and dastardly treatment of the Indians; or our thirst for gold to the neglect of God and his laws; or our silent contempt of his authority in the Constitution of our government. One thing is certain, the curse does not come causless.

Let the Christian inquire and confess his own sin and the sins of the people, for even here "the prayer of the righteous man availeth much." Gen. xviii., and Dan. ix. In the meantime, while we see such "a childish waste of philosophic pains" in endeavoring to prove that God is an unnecessary factor in his works, both of creation and providence, let the believer discern in these things, reassurances of the truth that the "Lord God omnipotent reigneth," and that "He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he has set judgment in the earth."

No real disorder arises from the propagation of truth; disturbance may ensue, but all from error opposing. Men may be thrown into commotion, because truth compels them to abandon false principles and practices, and improper business, and to make confession, and to restore money fraudulently obtained, and ecclesiastical establishments may be shaken; but this is only a revolution from disorder to order. This disturbance may be charged to the advocates of truth, but we answer Ahab, "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's (the devil's) house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim."—Earnest Christian.

[The following article appeared Dec. 27, 1873, in the Alliance of this city, and is given a place in this connection as representing the views of those who celebrate Christmas. A reply, and some further considerations of the subject, will be found on the editorial pages.]

Merry Christmas!

This is the great day of the world, and of the ages. Even the Puritans themselves, or at least their lineal descendants, are beginning to think so. It is a day so grand, so beautiful, and so sacred to the grateful heart of humanity, that even the "Abominations of Rome" are unable to kill it by their sacrilege. It survives the indiscretions of its most indiscreet friends.

In the origin of this anniversary sang the glad angels out of the rosy dawn; and ever since it has been a day of songs, of joyous melodies, of all sweetest tones and strains. A day of chiming, pealing, clanging bells in ten thousand belfries; and of the infinitely more delicious tones of happy children's voices in millions of radiant homes.

And as all Christendom kneel about the Babe of Bethlehem, and look up to the same bright star, trembling with mystic joy in the heavens, the real unity of Believers is assured and verified. Apostolic successions, decrees of Councils, Lutheran theses, Calvinistic joints, Arminian demurrers, bishoprics, synods, immersions, sprinklings, old schools and new schools, radicals and conservatives—how they all blend in the common glow of love and devotion!

This day, too, is the first-fruit of the millennium; no Saint's day, nor Sunday, but the birthday of the Jewish Virgin's Holy Babe. Reckoning from this day, all churches are old enough to be wiser and better than they seem to be; and not reckoning from this day, no church is old enough to be worthy of our reverence and faith.

And so let the old warriors of dogma draw near to this holy manger; but let them not come striding in with ringing heels and clanking sounds. This is the place for peaceful shepherds, devout Magi, and the wondering common people, all crowding close to the marvelous light which streams from the Divine Child.

Thus far, at least, and in the circling year, we forget our difference in our common heritage. For a single day, if no longer, we are simply Christians, lowering all the flags and rags of sects and schisms, and hauling high, to the very top of the staff, the universal banner of the cross.

They who celebrate the mass of Christ in solemn cathedral service do thus still hold fast upon the main root of Christianity; while they who only bedeck, in their homes, the illuminated tree of presents, do thus recognize him, who, having ascended on high, "led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men."

And as in our human households the infant of the cradle becomes often the best reconciler, so, in the family of Christendom, may the somewhat discordant household of faith find reconciliation at the Manger of Bethlehem.

FORM OF BEQUEST TO THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of———dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

To the Friends of the Cause.

Suffer me to say to those desiring lectures that I am recognized as an anti-secret lecturer by the National and State Associations; also by the Lower Wabash Annual Conference, U. B. Church of which I am a member. Yet I am not in the employment of any organization and my services can be secured at reasonable compensation. I profess to be a master of my subject, and know to a certainty what Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship are. I am opposed to those organizations, because they are socially, politically, and morally wrong; and I treat them upon this line. Those desiring lectures can address me at Center Point, Clay county, Ind.

Meeting of the New York State Association.

MEN OF NEW YORK, TO THE RESCUE!

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty!" Our liberties are in danger! The lodge despotism is increasing in power, and its encroachments are being more and more sensibly felt. This is no time for the sluggards song, "Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep," but rather the warrior's inspiring slogan. Awake! arise! or be forever fallen! Come up to our anniversary, to commence in Lockport, Tuesday evening, Dec. 22d, and to hold over two days following.

Stoddard of Illinois is to be there with his experience and skill. Rathbun, the mobbed, shot and poisoned, is expected to pay his respects to the spirit of secrecy and moblaw. Barlow, New York's State Agent will do what he may. Prof. Clark will cheer us with his songs, and other good men and true will be ready to add the general interest. All this is well. But the times, and our cause, call for the coming together of men who need no inspiration to impel their action but their sense of the importance of the work to which God invites them through us. Come with your brains! Come with your hands! Come with your hearts! Come with purses! Come, oh come! There is grand work for brave men, and women, too. Let woman come. We need her.

Let those intending to come send on their names to Rev. E. P. Marvin, or to Rev. N H. Brown, Lockport, Niagara Co., N. Y.

BY ORDER OF EX-COM.

REV. H. H. HINMAN, with the assistance of others has planned a LECTURE CAMPAIGN on the Illinois Central Railroad. He wishes to give a lecture or course of lectures during the week, commencing Dec. 7th in New Rutland, El Paso, Normal, and Bloomington; the week commencing December 14th (or sooner) at Heyworth, Decatur and Pana; the week commencing Dec. 21st (or earlier) at Patoka, Sandoval, Sparta and Salem; the week commencing Dec. 28th (or earlier) at Irvington, Richview, Mattoon and Milton; the week commencing Jan. 4, 1875, (or earlier) in Champaign, Paxton, Loda, and Onarga; the week commencing Jan. 11 (or earlier) in Chebanse, Manteno and Peotone.

Be sure to have the notice of his lecture or lectures (if he arranges for more than one) given out in every church in the place, and also on the Sabbath before he speaks and also published in the local papers a week before hand.

The expense of lectures given in this regular way would be much less than if given with no order; and in places where the friends of this cause are few and not able to raise much money, if they provide a place for the lecturer to speak in and entertain him while in the town and pay his railroad expenses, it will be all that is necessary in order to secure the lectures. Yet it is hoped, in most places, they can raise something towards paying the agent's salary besides.

Reform News.

—Rev. B. Rollins, the aged veteran of Vermont, writes under date Nov. 26th: "I now have an appointment next week to lecture on secret societies, and shall probably continue to lecture in this State through the winter, having received invitations from many places where I have formerly labored." The tract now appearing in the department of "Forty Years Ago" is from his pen.

—Already three Anniversary Conventions have been held by the New York Association, the first in Rochester, December, 1861; the second in Syracuse, March, 1873; the third in Seneca Falls, and now the fourth begins Tuesday evening, December 23d, and is to continue the following days and evening, in the city of Lockport, N. Y. See the Ex. Committee's call.

——The Wesleyan says of the New York State Agent: "Rev. J. L. Barlow has recently been sick from over work and exposure. He has recently lectured in Courtland, Tompkins, Broome, Stuben, Lewis, Madison, Chenango, Cayuga, Niagara, Jefferson and other counties, and being partially recovered he has again taken to the "open field and free fight" on the great moral issue in which he labors."

—A debate of the character and aim of the lodge in the Baptist Theological Seminary of Chicago has developed an inquiring spirit and Prof. C. A. Blanchard has been invited to speak to them on the subject on Thursday (this) evening.

—He has also a call from the ladies of Pittsburgh, to defend their Temperance Union from the assaults of Freemasons, which were likely to effect its destruction.

—The anti-secret society men polled from 100 to 110 votes this fall for their candidates in Fulton county, Ohio.

How many names have you on your petition?

From the Illinois Agent.

EL PASO, Ill., Dec. 8, 1874.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—I left home Nov. 30th and went to LaSalle, where I found a lecture announced for that evening in the Baptist church. The night was dark and stormy and the attendance small, but an interest was awakened in the minds of two of the pastors of the twin cities (LaSalle and Peru) which I trust will be abiding and fruitful.

My next point was at Mt. Palatine in Putnam county, where I spoke in the Congregational church to a good audience. Considering the state of the roads and weather, I found the brethren taking a decided stand against nonfellowship with the works of darkness. My next point was at Tonica, where I spoke in the Congregational church to a respectable audience and was followed by the pastor, Bro. Avery, in some most excellent remarks, endorsing what I said and commending the subject to his people. I reached Lostant on Saturday evening and spoke in the Baptist church to a good audience. Here the mind of the people had been prepared by the labors of Rev. A. Osgood, who is a veteran in our cause. I preached on Sabbath morning and lectured again in the evening to a full house. A good impression was manifestly produced.

Here at Lostant we have an illustration of Masonic charity. A poor laborer suddenly died, leaving his family in destitution. He was a Master Mason in good standing and had always paid up his dues, but his poor wife applied in vain to the lodge for aid for herself and little ones. The town now supports them, and the lodge having taken the money of the husband and the father, refuses to fulfill its promises to his family.

Yours for Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

Prof. Blanchard in Carroll County, Ill.

LANARK, Ill, December 10, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Please give notice through your paper that Professor C. A. Blanchard has favored the people of Lanark with three lectures on secret organizations.

Although the weather was bad and the nights very dark, the hall was full. The lectures were powerful and eloquent, and we have abundant evidence already of good results. Such as young men who were intending to join one or the other of the lodges, say now that they will not. Some of the Masons failed to be present the three evenings, as they promised at the beginning. Good order was kept all through. Very few left the hall during the speaking. There were quite a number who said that to have a course of lectures delivered here would make Masons and Odd-fellows. This has proved false, and I would recommend to the readers of the Cynosure that there be an effort to have a good man to lecture in your neighborhood or town, and remember that it is the lodge members who oppose them. I have sent for the Cynosure for one Mason since our lecture and I think there will be some more. The Masons and Odd-fellows look and act as though they had been to a wake for the last week, and we may look for a change on their countenance when they return from the burial of their pet institution. May God speed the time and save our nation from the demoralization of secrecy.

Report of Work in Indiana.

CENTER POINT, Ind., Dec. 2, '74.

BRO. K:—After attending the Indiana State Convention held in Dublin, Wayne Co., Oct. 28-9, I went down into Franklin county and lectured three evenings in the Franklin church. This is said to be the first United Brethren church-house built in this State, it is a very neat brick, arranged after the Quaker style. Here we have some good brethren and warm friends among whom are Father Koennor 53 years old, yet alive in the cause, Rev. H. Miller, U. B., who is a zealous and able opponent of darkness. Here is where brothers John McNamer and Farmer, pioneer ministers of the U. B. church, who renounced Masonry publicly at an annual conference held in Butler county, Ohio, June, 1826, labored with great success, and their memory is very dear to many of the old brethren and sisters of this community. If I will not be considered vain I will say that I feel proud to have had the privilege of lecturing to a church and in a church-house built up under the labors of those seceding Masons, and that has stemmed the current nearly forty years.

I went from Franklin to Sand Run in Union county, where I lectured three evenings to large and attentive audiences. We have a small congregation of living United Brethren here who are not ashamed of their principles, amongst whom are Bros. Atkinson, Harvey, Miller, and Rev. Samuel Miller. I spent the Sabbath with these brethren, and preached for them.

I went from Union to Newcastle, the county seat of Henry county. At this place the Odd-fellows have a lodge of 103 members, and the Masons a lodge of eighty-nine members. Here we have several friends who are at heart opposed to secret organizations, but owing to the influence and threatening attitude of the lodges, are unwilling to commit themselves. I spoke two evenings here in the U. B. church. On the second evening there was quite a number of lodgemen out who conducted themselves very respectfully. At the close of my remarks a "jack Mason" arose with one question: "If Masons take such oaths and engage in so much loose and nonsensical twaddle, how can you fellowship them?" My answer was "we don't."

The next Morning I received a petition signed by twenty-one of the citizens requesting me to remain and repeat my second lecture. Owing to previous arrangements I could not comply with their request, but promised to visit them again in the future if opportunity served. I went from Newcastle to Cambridge City, where I found Rev. A. E. Evans anxiously awaiting my arrival. Stepping off the cars and into his buggy it was but a short drive to his home in Dublin, where we have many warm-hearted, outspoken, zealous friends amongst whom are Rev's. A. Butler, C. Witt, A. E. Evans, and Elder Floyd of the U. B. church. W. M. Givens.

Work in Connecticut.

Weatoque, Conn., Dec., 7, 1874.

I enclose a report of one of our meetings in this town (Simsbury). Your humble servant as you will see was absent at the last meeting, but it was not the weather that kept me. I was hard at work making arrangements for the other meetings at which I have succeded far beyond my expectations. Truly I can say that the Lord has helped me for which my heart goes out in praise and thanksgiving. I arranged for brother Levington to preach twice yesterday and to lecture Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of this week in Unionville, and to lecture Thursday evening in Terryville, and to preach next Sunday in another large village where the lodge is very strong. and to give two lectures.

Philip Bacon.

The following is the report sent, cut from the Hartford Evening Post:

The Anti-masons here being desirous to do something "to pull down the strong-holds of sin," secured the services of a Mr. L , from Detroit, Mich., to deliver a course of three lectures against Masonry. The speaker put in his appearence and commenced the lecture, "as per bill," Sunday evening, in the old Town Hall, whereupon he proceeded to inform his hearers that "Masonry was an unholy thing, its votaries being liars, infidels, atheists, &c. That it had its origin with Voltaire and Tom Paine; its oaths were dangerous, and the whole thing was only fit for savages and uncivilized beings." That was the substance of the first lecture. The second lecture was delivered on Monday evening and was like the first, only more so, wherein he tried to show to his hearers the way they made Masons (although he thanked God that he never was a Mason himself). In unfolding the mysteries according to his style, two or three ladies, whose curiosity had brought them thither, became so disgusted that they left the hall. Then the young boys being somewhat offended on account of the calumny with which the speaker had traduced the Masons, took the liberty to put some questions to the speaker, and more especially to his "right bower," who is a very strong anti-tobacconist, etc., hence there was some confusion, but the plate was passed for the benefit of the speaker. As to the amount of the collection it was very small indeed, and thus with some minor incidents ended the second lecture. On Tuesday evening the speaker was on hand, but his right bower was absent, probably owing to the inclemency of the weather. In the third lecture, like those of the two evenings previous, your correspondent failed to see any good, sound reasoning, it being mostly made up of ridicule and abuse, and while the speaker was warmly advocating his cause, a horrid stench arose which was said to proceed from raw onions and red pepper on a hot stove, hence another sensation, and the assembly were dismissed without a prayer and with tears in their eyes. Thus ended the third lecson. One word to the boys: Boys, your names are known! The Masons themselves behaved well and quietly sat and listened while being traduced; but those persons who put onions and red pepper on that stove, thereby disturbing the speaker, are hereby warned that this thing must not be repeated again in this community.

Debate in Chautauqua County, N. Y.

Sherman, N. Y., Dec. 5, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

On the 20th of Nov., last past, we held a public debate on the question of secrecy and its evil. A Freemason of Sherman Lodge championed the side of secrecy. He forgot himself and said all who had renounced Masonry had perjured themselves and were not to be believed; and all who were not Masons could know nothing of Masonry. As much as to say if you are not a thief you cannot know what stealing is. He waxed warm in his argument and lost his jewel, turning upon us fiercely and said "Durfee, the course you are taking toward secret societies courts martyrdom." Of course I was annihilated, and perhaps it will be the last you may hear from me. A. M. Durfee.

Correspondence.

Dying Out.

At Wolcottville, Ind., much trepidation is reported in the lodge and a total suspension is strongly expected. Soon after a series of lectures in that place the following incident occurred. One Mason was heard to say to his brother Mason, "Are you going up to the lodge to-night?" and received the laconic reply, "No, what in hell is the use, its all out." To which No. 1 replied, "You ought to go to help keep up the lodge."

Indications are that efforts to "keep up the lodge" have failed; for, as I am told, there is no evidence to "cowans" outside that the nocturnal brotherhood hold meetings or are doing anything on the Masonic "Tressel Board."

The General Conference of the Free Methodist Church on Secrecy.

Editor of the Cynosure:

Dear Sir:—At the General Conference of the Free Methodist church held in Albion, Orleans Co., N. Y., in Oct. 1874, the Committee on Reforms reported the following on secret societies which was adopted by the Conference, and by a vote of the same it was ordered that a copy of said report be forwarded by the Sec'y to the editors of the Christian Cynosure and Free Methodist for publication in their respective papers. W. Manning, Recording Sec'y.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON REFORMS—SECRET SOCIETIES.

This General Conference having referred to its Committee on Reforms the consideration of the subject of secret societies, we herein report: There is an alarming growth of the secret orders in our midst, each operating in its distinctive sphere, though they are one in root and principle.

Seizing the reins of government, plundering our public treasuries, aquitting the guilty criminal, disturbing the course of trade and commerce, so that the natural law of supply and demand is made to give place to ring-power and secret society manipulation. While in the South the "White Leaguers," and in the colliery regions the "Molly Maguires," by intimidation and murder, over-ride law and defy justice.

On the Sabbath day in some of our cities, beneath the flaunting of their blood-red flag—the emblem of the commune—men meet and talk their schemes of levelism and infidelty, and notwithstanding the fact that government detectives have been employed, Congressional Committees appointed, facts and data collected, still these outrages continue; for judges and jurors, prosecuting attornies and witnesses, have tied their own hands, padlocked their own mouths, and stultified their consciences by affiliating with secret societies of an apparently more harmless character. Thus, as the nature and character of the various secret orders amongst us, and their relations to the church of Christ and our commonwealth, are becoming more fully understood by the increasing light that in the providence of God is being dissimenated, we are more than ever satisfied with the position we, as a people, occupy in relation to these various orders, viz., that of total separation from all, and every one of them; and are thankful that we were led, as we believe, by the providence and Spirit of God in the formation of our church and the adoption of its Discipline to take this stan for righteousness and truth; and although our position on this question has entailed upon us some little persecution and misrepresentation, and in some places seemed to stand in the way of many good persons joining our societies, and has surely limited the number of our present membership, yet such is the consciousness of the rectitude of our position in the minds of our membership that there does not exist amongst us the faintest desire for any compromise in the matter. We know of no desire for a change in our Discipline on this subject, nor does your committee suggest any.

We are thankful that God in his good providence has, and is raising up various agencies in the land to combat this giant evil, and recommend to our membership that they co-operate with the National Christian Association and all other bodies that in a Christian manner are endeavoring to reform society by the suppression of the secret orders.

Moral Courage the Need of the Times.

Martinsburg, Ill., Nov. 30, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I have always been opposed to secret societies though I knew but little or nothing about their secret workings. I consider the principle of organized secrecy wrong in its nature and tendency, especially where it afforded undue advantages to men to the detriment of others, thus secretly robbing them of their just rights. I fail to see where in they are better than highwaymen, who perform their deeds of robbing under the cover of midnight darkness, whereas the minions of the lodge perform their deeds under cover of secrecy where those who are wronged by them can have no knowledge of their method of operations; and whether it be money, character, or political or religious privileges and rights that are thus stealthily wrested from another without his knowledge or consent, and without a sufficient return or compensation for the same, the principle is the same, and ought to be classed in the same category. But, although I opposed them for these reasons, I had little idea of the power and influence the secret fraternities (especially the Masons) are swaying over the masses of the people, in and out of the lodge. But since I have become a regular reader of "our" excellent paper, the Christian Cynosure, about two years ago, I have been looking about among the people and find almost everywhere and among all classes and professions those who are opposed to secret fraternities who are afraid to open their mouths against what they conceive to be wrong, and all because they are afraid of suffering in reputation or property on account of it. Ministers are afraid of losing salary or position; merchants afraid of losing custom; others afraid of suffering in their business relations in some way or other, and even when approached on the subject will rather say nothing, or something commendable of the lodge than anything against it, unless they happen as they think to be only in the presence of some one whom they feel sure will not let their sentiments be known to the patrons or friends of the orders.

As an evidence of this, only a few days ago I fell in conversation with an intelligent and active business man, who said to me that he could not see much harm in secret societies; but afterwards, when the crowd had gone and we were left alone where he felt safe in uttering his sentiments, he said that he had been seriously wronged through the instrumentality of Masonry and felt that there was much evil in the institution; but when I requested him to give me the circumstances for publication in the Cynosure, he refused, saying he was afraid it would injure his business.

When we see such an influence exerted over those not inside the lodge, what must it be over those within the meshes of the lodge. Certainly it must be stronger and more powerful. I have no doubt in my mind that if it were not for this, a great many members of these fraternities would speak out against them, and a great many more would secede; but what can we say of a man thus fettered? Is he a free man? Is he not rather an abject slave, bowing to the worst of masters? Where is his manly independence? Certainly it is gone, surrendered to the worst of despots, and that too, where the tree of liberty stands her boughs overreaching and offering protection to all. Where are the hearts of brave men? Have you not given way to base cowardice? May we not appeal to your sense of justice and right and manly independence to come out and show yourselves men, and declare for the truth, regardless of the consequences? Adopt the language of the Apostle Paul, "Quit you like men, be strong!" But we thank God that some are manfully and in Christian boldness displaying their colors, and the number is multiplying, and the omens are still good. May the good Lord bless the cause and efforts of this reform and hasten the day when these unfruitful works of darkness shall be swept away WM P. PEASE.

From an Encouraging Letter to the General Agent.

CRESTLINE, O.

DEAR FRIEND:—Your very welcome letter came to hand last evening, and I hasten to answer. I was glad to hear of your success in the noble and glorious cause in which you are engaged. It is the cause of freedom and civil and religious liberty. It is a holy war fought against a despotism and a dangerous and most subtile enemy of our holy Christianity. The influence of secret orders in our government is a power behind the throne greater than the throne itself, and, like Jesuitism of former times, commands kings and powers and principalities to bow in silent submission before its secret, irresponsible, anti-republican, infidel law.

My good wishes and prayers shall ever follow you in your good work. I know how arduous the work and how dangerous and difficult the task you have to perform; but you are right. Trust in God and go forward. When I knew less than I do now I thought that if we could abolish slavery and correct a few other lesser evils our work of reform would be completed, and there would be but little for philanthropists and Christians to do. But now I begin to see that the world is a great work-shop in which man is to work out his salvation and no sooner is one work performed than another great work is laid out by God and is waiting and ready for our hands to perform. In the moral as well as the physical world God gives us the material in the rough. God does not give food ready to eat, but tells us to toil in the field to produce it out of the means and elements he has given. He does not furnish us ready made clothes to keep us from the cold, but gives us the material and tells us to weave it into cloth for our comfort and protection. And so in the moral view; the world is to be redeemed by work in building up moral and Christian character. I can now see as long as sin remains in the world there will be work and great labor to perform in the moral world by the friends of liberty, morality and Christianity. The work in which you are now engaged in my opinion is the most needed now, and therefore I think the grandest and most noble in which a Christian of high moral sentiment and devotion to duty could be engaged. I have no doubt but God will give us victory in the end. Some martyrs have fallen. others may fall; but the final victory is sure. I have no doubt but in the future sin may show her hydra-head in some other form, but that does not concern us now, that will be a battle for our children. Our duty is to fight manfully against this most wicked, hidden, foul, deceiving, liberty-destroying, soul-destroying institution of to-day. God grant that we may not falter, but do our whole duty and set an example worthy our children and all coming generations.

EDWIN BOOTH.

OUR MAIL.

R. B. Smith, Aurora, Ill., writes:

"I must stop some paper but cannot spare the Cynosure. Its solid and true."

Mrs. Eliza Baker, Vicksburg, Mich., writes:

"I want the paper and intend to have it, and if I have it I am in duty bound to pay for it, so when I get a few pennies I lay them aside for my paper until I get enough, and then when the time comes I am ready. There are two Masonic lodges, two Odd-fellows, two grangers and a Good Templar lodge in this town, and nearly all that do not belong to some of them are asleep. We need some good lectures here. Some men pretend that Masonry is older than religion, and some with equal proof agree the devil himself was a Mason.

And when he courted madam Eve,
Mankind's great grand relation,
He promised knowledge to deceive
Like any other Mason.

And when the crafty sin was done
To hide her situation,
She put a little apron on
And looked just like a Mason."

Rev. J. P. Richards, Bowensburg, Ill., writes:

"I have received the petitions sent me, and intend to make good use of them. Names already engaged. I intend to present the plans of the Cynosure and get subscriptions if I can. The devil and the lodge hold first mortgage on Hancock county, but I hope, pray and labor to lift the mortgage for Christ and truth, so far at least as my influence extends. The Masons are down on me I am told for circulating the other petition against corner-stone laying, but they don't like to say much to me in person, as I am always ready to give as good as they send. There are a few souls here who have not defiled their garments with Masonry, but we are weak, and yet I trust we are strong."

Peter P. Barnard, Hemlock Lake, N. Y., writes:

"Never stop the paper so long as you know I am alive, for the pay will be good and prompt."

Rev. A. H. Springstein, Ypsilanti, Mich., writes:

"The secrets of the lodge are fully exposed wherever I am; and I shall, in the name of Jesus, continue to oppse secretism with all my might, whatever it may cost me. Glory to Jesus! I rejoice in all my sufferings. Masonry must go down! The people must have a pure Gospel! I advertise the Cynosure in all my appointments, and try everywhere to get subscribers. I shall continue trying till I succeed. I pray that God may give you great success in so good a work. I expect to be at the Pittsburgh Convention next summer. I was appointed a delegate by the Michigan Conference Free Methodist church."

We are glad to have delegates looking forward to the National meeting. Let us begin now to appoint delegates everywhere, so that the country will be well represented.

Joel Sogen, Earlville, Ia., writes:

"I am trying to do all I can for the Cynosure."

Justus Miller, Pikeville, Ind., writes:

"I cannot do without your paper. I have taken it one year, and I hope to take it while I live. I will send in some new subscriptions in a short time. I have commenced working for your paper."

John Fink, Mt. Vernon, Ia., writes:

"I sent you two new subscribers last year, and I think I can double that this year."

This is what we wish all our workers would resolve to do. To accomplish at least twice as much this year as last. Do not let a paper which you prize, work along without money enough to pay its expenses Persevering, enthusiastic efforts to get subscribers will sooner or later be successful. Will you not make the list ten thousand strong this year?

Rev. N. R. Luce, Lockport, N. Y., writes:

"I will do all I can for the Cynosure. Financial pressure precludes the success we would love. . . My heart and soul are with you in this noble work."

J. B. Logan, Opdyke, Ill., writes:

"I am active as ever against Masonry. Have a good strong Anti-masonic community here."

Geo. E. Hathaway, Masonville, N. Y., writes:

"I am in a hot bed of Masonry here battling for God and the souls of men. Some have already left the lodge and I am sure that more will."

Elijah Gibbs, College Springs, Ia., writes:

"I am not willing the publishers should fail as they must without money for their subscriptions."

J. B. Stowell, Middleton, Idaho Ter., writes:

"I find some good Christian men here that love the paper. I let them have it to read."

J. L. Phillips, Centreville, Pa., writes:

"The Cynosure gives me the greatest of satisfaction. I am greatly interested in the Anti-masonic cause."

L. C. Foster, Onarga, Ill., writes:

"Out of a community of fifteen hundred there are, perhaps, two hundred who belong to some secret society, either Masons or Odd-fellows or Sons of Temperance. In consulting with our minister who belongs to no secret organization, and who sympathizes entirely with you still, he says as the Sons of Temperance have been the means of closing up all houses of resort where ardent spirits can be obtained, and our village at present is very quiet, and strictly temperate, a lecture of this kind would be likely to raise a breeze that would set in motion and disturb the peace of the whole community."

We think defective morals, like leaky roofs, are best repaired in fair weather. That is the best of all times to consider questions which sooner or later will show themselves to be vital to Christianity and good citizenship.

A friend in Illinois who has a cancer on his face, and has been doctoring for it without obtaining relief, writes:

"I am sorry to say I will have to do without it (the Cynosure) after my time is out (24th Dec.) for a while at least, for I cannot raise money to pay for it. . . I lend my papers to those who will read them, so I am doing what I can in that way. I am not able to go around much."

If anyone of our readers is able and willing to cheer this sick friend by sending him the Cynosure for six months, we will give him the name and post-office address of this friend.

J. A. Knepper, Delta, O., writes:

"I think there can be a goodly number of subscribers obtained for the paper. All it needs is some good man to canvass. The cause is gaining here in Fulton county. . . Is there not some seceder of the grange that is able to give the thing in full? I think it would help the cause here at least."

We think there are many localities like Delta in which all that is needed to increase the circulation of the Cynosure is "some good man" to canvass. "Good man," will you not go to canvassing wherever you are and help double the subscription list? If any seceding granger is able to warn his honest brethren against the swindle by exposing it, we would be glad to hear from him. The grange changes her regulations a little, occasionally, and is more sly than she used to be.

Hiram Delap, Viroqua, Wis., writes:

"I am in the hot bed of Masonry. I will have some subscribers for the Cynosure here soon."

C. W. Dain, Norwich, N. Y., writes:

"I have distributed those tracts, nearly, and by their means have found out a few Anti-masons, and you may rest assured they will tell for the cause. I live in the very hot bed of secrecy, and there is scarcely a man that dare open his head against the beast. I am in hopes I can procure a hall for brother J. L. Barlow to speak in here soon. I think it is high time the cry was heard in these streets."

Jacob Ring, Marion, Ind., writes:

"I want to lend and give away all I can afford; for I see more and more of lodge power every day where it ought not to be."

Rev. W. W. Ames, Menomonee, Wis., writes:

"I have been burnt out, or was in the fall, and moved a mile out of town the same day, and have just now moved back again and am scarcely settled, besides having a barn built, working on that. I have been painting it myself, and preaching three times almost every Sabbath."

Surely this is enterprise the contemplation of which may benefit us all.

Mrs. M. A. Gamble, Milford, Mich., writes:

"If there were some powerful lectures given in and around Milford and Commerce, we think that it would stir up some or many that would aid in this blessed work of reforming this land. . . The cause is the cause of Christ. It is truth against error; light against darkness; Christianity against infidelity in its worst form, as it tends to allure and draw men off to another foundation, not Christ."

We would be glad if all our agents could render as good an account as John G. Miller, Centerville, Ill., does. He has asked every man in the neighborhood that would be at all likely to take the paper to do so; and also asked some men whom he thinks better able to take subscriptions than he, to act as agents, and has secured their services.

H. Kingsley, Geneva, O., writes:

"I have taken the paper from the first number; in fact was one of the directors when it was started. . . . I wish to see the good work go on."

Chas. F. A. Gantzckow, Hartsville, Ind., sends two new subscriptions, and writes:

"This makes twenty-six Cynosure subscribers since Oct., 1873. I feel if all would do their duty that are opposed to secrecy, the Cynosure would be soon in the hands of thousands in the State of Indiana alone."

Now the Cynosure is so cheap, considering its size and form, and as this is a good time to work, will you not perseveringly and resolutely take hold, for the purity of your church and your country as well as for the prosperity of the paper and double its subscription list?

James Andruss, Amboy, Ind., writes:

"I am about eighty-two years old and very dependent. . . . But I hope I shall have a home in heaven when I am called from this world that will be far better than the Masonic heaven which Masons expect to gain by the help of grips and signs without the Saviour's help. I am joyful in thinking our cause is gaining so fast."

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

What is the title of our lesson? What does review mean? What is the object of a review? The lessons of the last quarter may be arranged under three topics.

What is the first topic? Give the title of the first lesson. Repeat the Golden Text. How many of the topics can you remember? Name the second lesson, Golden Text and topics. Also the fourth and fifth lessons. Why is the third lesson omitted? What interested you most in these four lessons?

What is the second topic? Give the title of the third lesson, Golden Texts, topics. Of the sixth, seventh, eighth. Who was the subject of each of these lessons? What did you learn from these lessons?

What is the third topic? Give the title, Golden Texts, and topics of the ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth lessons. What did you learn from the ninth lesson? What from the tenth? What from the eleventh? What from the twelfth?

What is the fourth topic? How long have we been studying these lessons? How long a time do they cover? (The lessons for the first half of the year covered 120 years; for the last half, 8 years.) How long was it from Moses to Jesus? (About 1,700 years.) How was the 120 years divided? (40 in Egypt, 40 in the desert, 40 in the wilderness.) How many lessons can you name by their titles? Which lesson has done you the most good?

What is the fifth topic? How often have we met this year? Where was our last parting before to-day? (On the mount from which Jesus went to heaven.) Do you expect to meet him? Dear scholars, let the writer of this lesson ask you to-day to accept of Jesus as your Saviour. Will you?—National S.S. Teacher.

—It was a Scotchman who made this beautiful discovery in grammar, in the matter of the "principal parts" of verbs. The perfect of "strive," he says is "strove;" so the perfect of "live" must once have been "love."

A Circular, Addressed to the People Denominated Christian Brethren.

BY REV. E. B ROLLINS, 1829.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—Amidst the changing scenes of time, which are transpiring under the overruling hand of him who ruleth in the heavens, and doeth his pleasure among the inhabitants of the earth, a crisis has arrived in which the exigencies of the case, and my circumstances, render it my duty to address you on the subject, which, till of late, I little expected to publicly investigate. A subject which, although not religious in its nature, yet in its pretentions, claims affinity with it, and in its tendency and consequences has a powerful effect, to adulterate professors of Christianity with those principles which lead to sacrilegious and idolatrous practices, and if adhered to strictly, according to its obligations and ancient land-marks, must end in a horrid violation of every principle of humanity, morality, and religion. I mean the subject of speculative Freemasonry.

This is a subject which has occupied the attention of many, and excited the admiration of thousands who have been credulous to believe its professions. Many volumes on this subject have been published to the world, by Freemasons, pretending to show its origin to be ancient, and by divine economy; its nature to be pure, and its influence to be beneficial to mankind. Some of whom have identified it with the Christian religion, making its origin from God, its nature divine, and its influence the most salutary, on the eternal felicity of the souls of mankind. Mr. Town, who has published "A System of Speculative Freemasonry," "exhibited in a course of lectures before the Grand Chapter of the State of New York," which was reduced to a system by their request, and recommended to the public by them, and many Grand Officers of the fraternity as a system of Freemasonry; says in pp. 13, 53, 174, 37, 31.

"The principles of speculative Freemasonry have the same co-eternal and unshaken foundation, contain and inculcate the same truths in substance, and propose the same ultimate end as the doctrines of Christianity." "The same system of faith, and the same practical duties taught by revelation, are contained in, and practiced by the institution." "Speculative Freemasonry comprises those great and fundamental principles which constitute the very essence of the Christian system." "It is no secret, that there is not a duty enjoined, nor a virtue required in the volume of inspiration, but what is found in, and taught by speculative Freemasonry."

"The characteristic principles are such as embrace the whole subject matter of divine economy."

Mr. Bradley, who has written a treatise on the same subject, says, page 4, "Our principles, being drawn from revelation, do not require us to make the secrets of Masonry known."

Mr. Town says, p. 37, "It is no secret that Masonry is of divine origin." p. 172, "So Masonry was transmitted from Enoch, through Noah, Abraham, Moses, and their successors, till Solomon, being inspired by God, established a regular form of administration."

From these quotations and many others which might be brought from the writings of different Masonic writers, it appears evident that Masonry not only claims affinity with religion; but even pretends to have the same co-eternal and unshaken foundation, and to be equal with it in inculcating truth, and in enforcing practical duties. It professes to be a regular form of administration, established by direction of divine inspiration, and of divine origin; more ancient than any dispensation known among men. Having had my attention excited by reading the works of such writers, and being encouraged by many respectable men whom I considered men of judgment and veracity, I concluded there must be something in the institution of Freemasonry worthy of attention. Accordingly, I made application to Temple Lodge, in Strafford, Vt., in 1825, and received the three first degrees. On receiving these degrees, I was much disgusted with the barbarous ceremonies; but being told that they were ancient usages and land-marks that must be observed, and that the propriety of them would be explained to my satisfaction in the sequel, I complied with them, in hope that in being raised to what is falsely called the sublime degree of a Master Mason, I should be satisfied. But when I had reached this degree, I was still left in the dark, and could form no correct opinion concerning the origin, or nature of the institution. I suggested some of my doubts to several Masons, who told me that they never knew why they were Masons till they were exalted to the degree of Royal Arch; and that if I would go on to that degree, I should fully understand the whole of what was called ancient Masonry. Being solicitious to know the whole, I soon made application to the Chapter in Bradford, Vt., and received the four higher degrees, all at one communication. These degrees seemed to be clothed with more of a religious character than the others, and many passages of Scripture were used to explain them, with many striking representations of important things and events that we have an account of in the Bible. Whether this circumstance was the cause of my being deceived concerning the nature and origin of the institution, or whether it was the confusion that pervaded my mind after going through such a multitude of ceremonies, or both of them combined, I cannot tell. But one thing I am free to acknowledge, and feel it a privilege to acknowledge before God and men, that I was deceived and, consequently stated that I was satisfied with the institution. Having been somewhat disappointed in my pursuit after some real good, which I was often told I should find by advancing farther, and being dissatisfied with the conduct and characters of many of the members of the lodge where I resided, I refused to sign the by-laws, and become a member, and absented myself from them; concluding that I could spend my time better than to attend lodges among such corrupt characters as most frequently attended, or even to labor to purge the lodge from such characters, which to me appeared a moral impossibility. Why! the profane, the drunkard, and such like characters, were not only received into the fraternity, but were frequently promoted to office, and being more constant to attend the communications than the virtuous, would combine their influence and evade, or check almost every exertion made to discipline bad members. After being repeatedly summoned to attend the lodge, I told them they must not expect me to frequent the lodge, since which time I have never been in a lodge, till a few days ago, when I attended for the purpose of declaring my views of the institution, and warning the Masons against its idolatrous and sacrilegious practices. Being convinced that the institution is corrupt, that its principles and obligations are contrary to pure religion, and lead to a violation of the laws of my country, I have felt it my duty and privilege to confess my error both publicly and privately, and to warn my fellow men against being ensnared by it, either in joining the fraternity, or in aiding the Masons to support its tottering fabric.

In doing this, I have been under the necessity of exerting my influence in opposition to Masonry, which renders me an Anti-mason. This, I am aware, is contrary to the request of the assembly of elders and brethren, who requested the brethren "not to associate with Masons or Anti masons." At that time I was agreed with my brethren in the assembly on these points, and think now that it was the most prudent course we could have taken with the light we then had on the subject. It is probable that most of my brethren recollect that I solemnly promised in that meeting, that I would investigate the subject more thoroughly; and that, if I became convinced that the institution was corrupt, I would renounce it. This I have done. And now I feel it my duty to give my brethren my reasons, for the change which has taken place in my mind, and which may serve to show the cause also why I cannot comply with the request of the assembly of elders and brethren any longer.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DEC. 17, 1874.

THE FINAL CONFLICT.

We are told that the triumph of Christ in and over this earth shall not come "except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped." (2 Thess., ii. 2, 3.)

The devil began his efforts against Christ's plan of redemption, by denying the future punishment of the wicked to Eve, and by omitting the atoning Lamb from the worship of Cain. These two errors have come down the ages hand in hand. If God's law has no penalty there is nothing to be saved from. And if men can escape wrath by universalism, by purgatory, by annihilation, or by restoration, after sinning and suffering in hell, Christ's atonement is needless and nugatory. And if men can escape divine wrath by inventing and practicing a parcel of ceremonies, then Christ may be ignored with equal propriety. Everywhere Christless ceremonies are being invented and practiced, and everywhere sound doctrine is being relaxed.

When Christ approached his final struggle at Jerusalem, Satan boldly attacked his disciples. He is doing this now as the great conflict of all draws nigh, and the simple, plain words of Christ in the gospels are disputed and set aside, as Peter contradicted his words spoken, because they conflict with the ideas and feelings of weak and corrupt men, who say to him as Peter did, "This shall not be." But the things which Peter said should not come, came. They were then nigh, even at the doors. So will be fulfilled all Christ's words concerning the salvation and damnation of men; and the time draweth nigh. We commend on this theme the ideas given by C. B. Boynton, D. D., in a Thanksgiving sermon in Cincinnati, especially concerning those doctrines which "have been the strength of the church in former times. He says:

"When such men as Bismarck, and Disraeli, and Gladstone, who stand at the very center of political thought and movement, tell us virtually that the greatest struggle of modern times is imminent, and when such tremendous forces are being arrayed against each other, we can see that the shock of this battle will be a great earthquake among nations; and what institutions, what thrones may be shattered and pass away, what religious revolutions may result, none now can tell.

Let us not imagine, however, that we shall wholly escape the crash when earth and the political heavens are shaken, and when we have among us some five millions of Catholics who owe supreme allegiance to the Pope, and who, in such a crisis, will do the bidding of their leaders. I think we have great reason to be thankful for this clear revealing of the aspect and intentions of the Catholic church; and if we give no heed to these signs of the times, and the storm comes upon us unawares, the fault will be our own.

I had written thus far when Mr. Gladstone's pamphlet was sent me, presenting this whole subject in a masterly manner, and giving solemn warning to England and the world. Of course his statements are boldly denied, but those who know what Jesuitism is, and what the facts of history are, will not be thus deceived.

Archbishop Manning's denial is no denial at all, and in his inaugural address to the Catholic Academy on the 8th of November he urged upon his hearers to claim everywhere that all nations should return to their allegiance to the Pope; and that we are on the eve of one of the greatest conflicts in the world.

Again, in view of what is coming, we may be thankful that recent events have raised serious questionings in regard to the effect of that kind of preaching, that tends to destroy belief in those doctrines which have been the strength of the church in former times, and upon which she has stood firm through so many persecutions and assaults of Satan.

However fashionable it may be to sneer at and discard what some are pleased to call the stern, hash doctrines of the Puritan or Pauline faith, all history shows that these truths have shaped our Christian heroes, and we may safely say that the men and women who will be found in the front ranks, with an enthusiasm, firmness and courage equal to the great conflicts coming on, will not be those who have been nurtured on an easy-going Christianity, which dwells mainly on the nobleness of manhood and the love of God to the exclusion of his sovereignty, his love and its penalty, the demerit of sin and coming retribution.

Such a Christianity agrees well with the gratifications of wealth, luxury, amusements, and the joy and pride of life, but it cannot produce those deep, strong, steady convictions which alone can form the heroic character."

COLVER AND THE MASONS.

The Chicago Standard (Baptist) lately published an article from Rev. A. D. Freeman, Downer's Grove, Ill., giving the well-known experience of Dr. Nathaniel Colver in the lodge, and also a bitter and malignant reply of a Freemason, consisting of general denials and personal abuse of Mr. Freeman, which the Standard editor properly condemns. He also endorses and defends Mr. Freeman, and says Dr. Colver "was required to take an oath equivalent in form to that which Bro. Freeman quoted."

We are sorry to be obliged to add that this Chicago organ of the Baptists goes on to make peace with the Masons by speaking lightly of our late Chicago Convention, and promising to exclude the discussion of secret societies from the paper, on the ground that its columns are wanted for subjects more "germane to us" (Baptists) and "more important." And yet the editor, Dr. Smith, was replying to a Freemason, doubtless a Baptist, who solemnly denied what he declared to be true, to-wit: that Colver was required to swear to protect and help criminals who were Masons; and he knows that a multitude of Baptist members and ministers have taken, and adhere to that horrible and blasphemous oath; and so are sworn confederates with felons! This by his own declaration. We respectfully ask this religious editor how he answers to his conscience and his God for withholding needed truth from his people? If, as he says, both in Colver's memoirs and in the Standard, Freemasons swear men to aid and "extricate" criminals, "right or wrong," and he knows it, and yet is silent while he sees hundreds of young men, who are Baptists, being sworn and swindled in the lodges, by men who falsely declare that "No living or dead man even took an oath as he quotes it,"—how will he meet those young men at the bar of God and answer for their souls, which he might have saved by telling them the truth?

The only reason he assigns for excluding the discussion from his columns is that the discussion is intemperate and stormy. And so he will emulate that keeper of a light-house, who blew out his light on stormy nights to save his oil to burn in calm ones! Has he never read the Word of God by Ezekiel to watchmen such as he: "If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thy hand." (Ezekel xxxiii. 6.) He knows and says he knows that Masons swear men to "extricate" criminals. He sees his brethren stumbling into the cess-pool of the lodge to die there, but he has more "important" business than to save them!

THE FREEMASONS: WHAT THEY ARE, WHAT THEY DO, AND WHAT THEY ARE AIMING AT. Translated from the French of Mgr Segur.—The Anti-Masonic Christian Herald, Bentonville, Ind., notices this Roman Catholic work which we have not seen. But we are in receipt of many Romish papers, showing that the authorities of the church are moving against the lodge as a hated rival in the attempt to absorb all religion and government in this world into itself. But these dark powers must fall before Christ can be honored or man be free. This, the leading statesmen of the day, Bismarck, Gladstone, and Disraeli, are endeavoring to show the civilized nations. Ritualism is the general antagonist of truth, and the mother of the one stupendous falsehood that men by ceremonies can save souls. We read Rev. xvii. 16, "These [kings] shall hate the whore, and make her desolate and naked." This is coming. For a church or lodge which can save men by its ceremonies proposes itself as a substitute for Christ; and it falsely claims to save men in eternity that it may tax and rule them in time. This brings it in direct collision with civil government and salvation by Christ.

CHRISTMAS.

This is probably the last we shall say for the present on this subject. We leave it with the consciences of our readers, therefore, with a brief review of patent facts, of the arguments already published, together with some further considerations.

The argument for Christmas is fairly stated in the editorial from the Alliance on the third page of this issue. This journal is especially devoted to the local religious interests of Chicago, and is edited by Prof. Swing, Drs. Helmer, Thomas and Powers and Prof. Mathews, representing respectively the Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist Episcopal, Episcopal and Baptist denominations. The article has, therefore, a representative character, and will be noticed in its place.

The first question for every Christian in deciding this matter must be: Is the special celebration of any day as an occasion of rejoicing for the birth of Christ commanded in the Word of God or fairly derived therefrom? We answer, it is not; and for the following reason: The death of Christ is the crowning glory of the Christian system. In this centers all prophecy, all religious history, all religious labor and teaching and suffering; in short, the history of the world acknowledges this as the fact of time. The evangelists acknowledge this last act of the Saviour to be of the first importance by the unusual fullness of their accounts of his last words and suffering; the epistles continually affirm it. Christ himself, by ordaining its remembrance, says the same. If God has designed his birth to be celebrated would he not have given us his word for it? On the contrary two of the gospels give no account of Christ's entry to the world, and only one makes particular mention of the fact. The birth of Jesus was only an accident in the case, a subsidiary fact, and the Bible so regards it. If it is said that angels rejoiced at the time, so Christ says they rejoice at the return of a soul to its allegiance to God. We are no more required to celebrate his birth than we are his baptism or the Sermon on the Mount. It is a circumstance in the life of Jesus for which we should daily rejoice as we should for any other fact of his life. The special observance of any day, therefore, is a tradition of men, against which Christ warns us in Matthew xv. 9, and Mark vii. 7 and 13; and Paul in Colossians ii. 6-8.

If the birth of Christ is not to be celebrated by his will on any day, much less should it be on the 25th of December, which is evidently not the day of his birth. The facts heretofore published in these columns prove this. If any doubt let them examine such undoubted authorities as Chamber's Encyclopedia, the Encyclopedia Brittanica and Dr. Robinson's Greek Harmony. On this point authorities agree that the 25th of December was fixed upon during the second century because almost all the heathen nations, especially the Romans, Germans and Celts, celebrated the winter solstice as the most important part of the year, as the beginning of renewed life and activity in the powers of nature; which powers their gods represented symbolically. Hospinian and others have been of opinion that the festivities connected with the celebration of Christmas were intended to make up for the Saturnalia, conformably to the practice which had been acted upon from an earlier period of smoothing the way for the conversion of the heathen by presenting their idolatrous ceremonies under a new form.

Thus we have the origin of the day as an attempt, superintended we believe by Satan, to conform true religion to the world, by a substitution of a subsidiary fact for the great and crowning grace of Christ's mission. Its history in past ages may be inferred from its origin—a season of frolic, revel and crime. In proof see the Encyclopedias above mentioned and from recent papers, such articles as the following: From the Chicago Tribune, Dec. 27th, 1873:

The sad list of crimes which were printed in the Tribune of yesterday morning shows that Christmas was not only altogether merry, and that the sacred associations which cluster about the day were powerless to prevent fatal manifestations of human passion and wickedness. At Riga, O., two brothers quarreled over the silly question which should load a rifle, and during the dispute, one of them shot the other. The excited spectators aggravated the crime by hanging the murderer to a tree until he was dead. In St. Louis, a drunken driver, the father of six children, killed his wife by striking her on the head with a fence-paling. In Boston, one young German killed another, —his friend and room mate,—shooting him at first, and the bullet not accomplishing the deadly work, hacking him to pieces with a hatchet. In Groveton, N. H., while two men were attempting to enter a disreputable house kept by a Frenchman, the latter and his son and one of the intruders were killed, the other intruder being badly wounded. In Lincoln county, New Mexico, one of those sanguinary affrays characteristic of the border occurred, in which three men were killed, and three or four others were severely wounded. In each of these instances, whisky was the cau e of the fatal troubles. In addition to these crimes, a gang of burglars was arrested in Boston, the Sheriff's clerk and two Deputy-Sheriffs in New York were arrested for the robbery of a wealthy Virginian, a New York merchant fled the city to avoid being prosecuted upon the charge of fraudulent bankruptcy, three unfortunate people committed suicide in Milwaukee, and a very foolish young man, smitten with love, took poison at Elgin leaving behind him a love-letter, a lock of hair, a picture of his inamorata, and some maudlin scribblings. The sad category shows that the gratifying announcement of the angels on the first Christmas morning of peace on earth and good will to man is a long way off from fulfillment, and that many Christmases have yet to elapse before the world-old struggle between good and evil will come to an end.

A correspondent of the Essex Co. (N. Y.) Republican wrote Dec. 26, 1873:

You will preceive that I write under date of Christmas week. I spent yesterday in a city of five thousand inhabitants For several days previous, the strees had been thronged and the stores filled with purchasers of Christmas presents, of both white and black races. The day before Christmas, the work of celebration begins. Firecrackers, whiskey-toddies, and eggnogg are the chief concomitants. Christmas night is made hideous by drunken brawls, sky rockets, and pistols. In the town whence I write, one man was cut, and another shot. The streets were more like bedlam let loose, than a Christian community. Yet this is such a community, for in one church there was a Christmas-tree, and presents were distributed to the member of the Sabbath-school. In truth, Christmas is observed by the majority here, like your celebration of the Fourth of July, only more so.

A further argument of its character is the deception invariably connected with the celebration of the day. See the Alliance editoral, which implies a falsehood, and is every where re-echoed, as does the Sunday-school paper of the United Brethren, thus:

"Teach the heathen that for them
On this happy Christmas morning,
Christ was born in Bethlehem."

See also the tradition of "Santa Claus," and the exaggerated manner of introducing that personage as stated in these columns last week. The same trickery is practiced in many churches throughout the country.

It is the growing religious character of this celebration that makes it more to be dreaded. To the Alliance editorial add the following from the Christian Union of a late date: "In the American calendar there are four great days. One is the birthday of the nation. Two belong to the church: Christmas, the Day of Promise, and Easter, the day of Triumph." The Missionary Visitor of the United Brethren church in its two numbers for December has six or seven Christmas songs, a Christmas sermon and other articles of the same character. If the celebration of the birthday of Christ is not in accordance with God's Word, but a human tradition, it is certainly a turning away of the soul from God, a detaching of the religious feelings from his Word; and the more solemn is the soul made to feel and the more sacred is the day made, the farther the soul from God and and truth, and in the way beset with danger and ending in spiritual dakness and death.

The Masonic Goat.

Under this stale dodge a Freemason in the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, gives a carucature of our late Chicago State Convention. A few days after, a reader of that influential paper thus handsomely takes it up. So the light spreads. We give his letter entire.

THE MASONS AND THE ANTI-SECRET SOCIETY FOLKS.

To the Editor of the Republican:

You deem the anti-secret association which recently met at Chicago worthy of an editorial under the heading, "The Masonic Goat," in this morning's issue. In another column, under "The Masons at Nashville, Tenn.," is an abstract of the business of the grand Masonic chapter. Now, candidly, Mr. Editor, would it not have been fairer to have given an abstract of the proceedings of the Chicago Convention, and left your readers to judge of the merits of the two? It cannot be denied that at the Chicago Convention were men of honest purposes of integrity and influence. In moral and intellectual worth they were not beneath those convened at Nashville. Why, then, should the latter be treated with courtesy, and the other only with ridicule and contemp, and that when not a syllable of the utterances, nor one of their principles is presented; and all in an "independent journal" which claims "impartiality of intelligence" and promises "to give all news . . . . without verbal padding or magnifying confusion?" The animus of the editorial is evident. I do not write to defend the doings of the Chicago Convention. As in most attempts at reformation of abuses, the evils are magnified, no doubt, very much. Many things are proposed which are both impracticable and objectionable. Yet a real evil is aim at, an evil affecting every class of society, and one which may, some day, attain serious proportions. But the danger is not immediate, and the evil is not sufficiently manifest to awaken much attention. If I were attempting to defend the position of the anti-secret society convention, I could give numerous examples, both from my own observation and from the lips of Masons (not those who have withdrawn, but those in good standing and some in the higher orders) which would show to how great an extent the influence of these secret organizations affects every interest, from the selection of officers and the decisions of courts and juries to the most unimportant matters. But I have no such object in writing. I only desire that they shall not be misrepresented; that they be fairly presented. I would be very glad to see the Republican come up to its standard and "give all the news without verbal padding or magnifying confusion." C. S. McCracken.

NOTES.

—Josiah H. Drummond of Portland, Me., has formed a personal union of the long severed and jealous York Rite and Scottish Rite Masons. He is said to be the highest national official in both, and so not long ago they celebrated the event in Cincinnati.

—The Secretary of the United Order of Workingmen says that body numbers 74,000 lodges which will act uniformly to promote such political interests as its leaders may advise. The order has so many members probably, not lodges; and it will amount to just as much as has every other political order—a tool for demagogues.

—The grange commission house in Chicago came to grief a week or two ago. One of the firm swindled the rest, who promise the grangers that they shall lose nothing. By the time the few grange middlemen that are left are marked out, farmers will begin to find out what kind of a viper they have been warming in their bosoms.

—The Grand Encampment of Knights Templar met December 3d in New Orleans, and elected James H. Hopkins, member of Congress from Pittsburg, Grand Master. The next day courts closed to see the Masons drill, even the Mayor proclaimed a suspension of city business. Every night balls ware held in various halls in the city.

—The following petition has been circulating in one of the Chicago churches: We, the undersigned, believing that, by observing men's traditions in religion we make void the law of God, and believing that if a Christmas festival is not religious it has not a a good name; and if it is religious, since its observance is not commanded in the Bible, but by men, by keeping it we offend God by following human traditions while attempting to worship him, respectfully ask the committee on a a holiday festival to have a New Year's instead of a Christmas festival."

—A friend in Crestline, Ohio, writes to the General Agent of his effort to obtain his church for lectures. Although a majority of the church are opposed to the lodge, the official board refused the request for fear of making dissension and threats were even made that the house would be mobbed and windows broken. The brother improved his opportunity and says in his letter:

"I took occasion to give them a good moral lecture which I think had its effect and ended with the hope and prayer to God that if the church did not overcome the world the world did not entirely overcome the church. I also gave them notice that Masonic funerals, with their sticks and swords and heathen ceremonies, were very offensive to me and a majority of the church, and I should object to any such performances in the church hereafter, but insist that they should take all such heathen performances to their heathen temples. So you see the leaven is working but the lump is large and solid and hard to affect. But I must close. You must come here and lecture you shall have a hearing at some place."

—The corner-stone of a Baptist church (close-communion) was recently laid in an adjoining State by a Masonic lodge. The time chosen was Tue day. A procession was formed consisting of Masons, church-members, and citizens, and, headed by a brass band, they marched to the foundation with measured step, under the inspiration of the martial strains of "The Red White and Blue.' On arriving at the spot tney filed around the stone, when the Master and other officers of the lodge "squared, leveled, and plumbed the stone, and pronounced it a proper stone," after which prayer was said. The pastor and other ministers of the Word present stood back and took neither part nor lot in the act. Such a performance robs the corner-stone of its true significence, divests the act of laying of its religious character, exposes the lodge to the charge of profanity and sacrilege, and exhibits the Baptist pastor and his congregation in the sorry plight of practicing close-communion with other Protestant Christian denominations around the table of the Lord, but open communion with a secular association of Freemasons around the corner-stone of their church. —Lutheran Observer.

Oren Cravath—A Testimonial.

The following extract from a discourse preached by Rev. Henry M. Tenny, pastor of the 1st Congregational church in Winona, Minn , at the funeral of our late brother and fellow-laborer, Oren Cravath, is deserving special notice.

Among the many things so forcibly and aptly embodied in this discourse is the following, showing the attitude of our good and now sainted brother towards Freemasonry:

"Our brother's feelings were intense also—and from his history not unnaturally so—upon the subject of Freemasonry. Believing in the Bible doctrine of the universal brotherhood of man, he could not readily tolerate an organization which seemed to restrict the rights and privileges of brotherhood in any degree, or to make any distinction other than that which is based upon character. Then, too, as in slavery, the circumstances of his early life were peculiarly calculated to increase his hostility to this institution. The celebrated "Morgan tragedy" occurred just as he was reaching his majority. The whole country was excited by it—the State of New York especially so. For a time the intense hostility to Masonry threatened the utter extinction of the organization. It was carried into politics, and Mr. Cravath's first vote was cast in the Anti-masonic interest. He continued an active opponent of the order to the end. Of late years he has been a frequent contributor to the columns of the Cynosure and has been earnest in his endeavors to secure the dissemination of an Anti-masonic literature in the communities where he has resided."

The Altered Motto.

O the bitter shame and sorrow,
That a time could ever be
When I let the Saviour's pity
Plead in vain, and proudly answered,
"All of self, and none of Thee!"

Yet He found me; I beheld Him
Bleeding on the accursed tree,
Heard Him pray, "Forgive them, Father!"
And my wistful heart said faintly,
"Some of self, and some of Thee."

Day by day His tender mercy,
Healing, helping, full and free,
Sweet and strong, and, ah! so patient,
Brought me lower, while I whispered,
"Less of self, and more of Thee."

Higher than the highest heavens,
Deeper than the deepest sea,
Lord, Thy love at last hath conquered;
Grant me now my soul's desire—
"None of self, and all of Thee."

An Old Story of God's Providence.

Dr. Joseph Stennet resided in Wales many years ago, and preached in Abergavenny. There was a poor man, a regular attendant on his ministry, who was generally known by the name of Caleb; he was a collier, and lived among the hills between Abergavenny and Hereford; had a wife and several small children, and walked seven or eight miles every Sabbath to hear the Doctor. He was a very pious man; his knowledge and understanding were remarkable considering his situation and circumstances.

Bad weather seldom hindered Caleb's attendance at the house of God, but there was a severe frost one winter which lasted many weeks, and blocked up his way so that he possibly could not pass without danger, neither could he work for the support of his family. The Doctor and others were concerned least they should perish for want; however, no sooner was the frost broken than Caleb appeared again. Dr. Stennet spied him, and, as soon as the service was ended, went to him and said, "Oh, Caleb, how glad I to see you! How have you been during the severity of the weather?"

Caleb cheerfully answered, "Never better in all my life. I am not only had necessaries, but lived upon dainties the whole of that time, and have some still remaining."

Caleb then told the Doctor that, one night soon after the commencement of the frost, they had eaten up all their stock, and had not one morsel left for the morning, nor any human possibility of getting any; but he found his mind quite composed, relying on a provident God, who wanted neither power nor means to supply his wants. He went to prayer with his family, and then to rest, and slept soundly until morning. Before he was up he heard a knock at his door; he went and saw a man standing with a horse loaded, who asked if his name was Caleb. He answered in the affirmative. The man desired him to help him to take down the load. Caleb asked what it was. He said, "provisions." On his inquiry who sent it, the man said he believed God had sent it; no other answer could be obtained. When he came to examine the contents, he was struck with amazement at the quantity and variety of the articles—bread, flour, oatmeal, butter, cheese, salt meat and fresh, etc., which served them through the frost, and some remaining to that present time.

The Doctor was much affected with the account, and afterward mentioned it in hopes of finding out the benevolent donor; but in vain, till about two years afterwards he went to visit Dr. Talbot, a noted physician in the city of Hereford.

This Dr. Talbot was a man of good moral character, and generous disposition, but an infidel in principle. His wife was a gracious woman, and a member of the church. Dr. Stennet used to go and visit her now and then; and Dr. Talbot, though a man of no religion himself, always received Dr. Stennet with great politeness.

As they were conversing pleasantly one evening, Dr. Stennet thought it his duty to introduce something that was entertaining and profitable. He spoke of the great efficacy of prayer, and instanced the circumstance of poor Caleb. Dr. Talbot smiled, and said, "Caleb! I shall never forget him as long as I live."

"What, did you know him?" said Dr. Stennet.

"I had but very little knowledge of him," said Dr. Talbot, "but I knew he must be the same man you mean."

Then Dr. Talbot related the following circumstances.

"The summer before the hard winter above mentioned he was riding on horseback, as was his usual custom when he had a leisure hour, and generally chose to ride among the hills, it being more pleasant and rural. As he was riding along he observed a number of people assembled in a barn. He rode up to the door to learn the cause, when he found, to his surprise, that there was a man preaching to a vast number of people. He stopped and observed that they were very attentive to what the preacher delivered. One poor man in particular attracted his notice, who had a little Bible in his hand, turning to every passage of Scripture the minister quoted. He wondered to see how ready a man of his appearance was in turning to his places.

When the service was over he walked his horse gently along, and the poor man whom he so particularly noticed happened to walk by his side. The Doctor asked him many questions concerning the meeting and minister, and found him very intelligent. He inquired also about himself—his employment, his family, and his name, which he said was Caleb. After the Doctor had satisfied his curiosity he rode off, and thought no more about it till the great frost came the following winter.

He was one night in bed—he could not tell for certain whether he was asleep ar awake, but thought he heard a voice say: 'Send provisions to Caleb.' He was a little startled at first, but concluding it to be a dream, he endeavored to compose himself to sleep. It was not long before he heard the same words repeated, but louder and stronger. Then he awoke his wife, and told her what he had heard, but she thought it could be no other than a dream, and she fell asleep again. But the Doctor's mind was so impressed that he could not sleep. At last he heard the voice, so powerful, saying: 'Get up and send provisions to Caleb,' that he could resist no longer.

He got up and called his man, bade him bring his horse, and he went to his larder, and stuffed a pair of panniers as full as he could of whatever he could find, and having assisted the man to load the horse, he bade him to take the provisions to Caleb.

"Caleb, sir?" said the man, "who is Caleb?"

"I know very little of him," said the Doctor, "but that his name is Caleb; he is a collier, and lives among the hills; let the horse go, and you will be sure to find him."

The man seemed to be under the same influence as his master, which accounts for his telling Caleb, "God sent it, I believe."—Selected.

Thoughts for Skeptics.

If the Bible is not a good rule of life, why not provide us with a better one? We have "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself;" and "All things whatsoever ye desire that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," in the Bible. Now, if you have anything better produce it, or else stop finding fault with the Bible.

The idea that nothing is to be taken on trust, is a favorite one with many; and is as absurd as other infidel arguments. Infidels talk of the Bible, but how much have they read of it? They talk of the Koran, the Shasters, and a lot of other heathenish trash, which they could not read a page of to save their lives. They argue about astronomy, when they do not know enough to calculate an eclipse of the moon; they disprove the Bible by geology, of which they know nothing except what some one of a dozen wrangling geologists has told them; they say the New Testament was compiled by the Council of Nice, when all history shows that Council never had anything whatever to do with the matter; they quote learnedly from authors which they never saw, and could not read if they should see them; and then they pretend that they cannot be humbugged by pious cant, and that they receive nothing without due investigation.

By this rule they would not ride in a steamboat till they could build an engine; would not believe the time shown by a watch, until they knew how to make one; would not call a doctor to a croupy child till they had explored the whole domain of medicine with all its 'ologies' and 'pathies;' would not send a telegram till they understood telegraphy; would not do anything till they knew everything.

On a thousand occasions in common life we are forced to consult those who are honest, truthful, and experienced in matters with which we are unacquainted. We do not surrender our judgment to them, but our judgment tells us that their opinion and their experience is worth our careful consideration. In nine-tenths of the affairs of life we depend for guidance at the first, upon those who are better informed than ourselves. To do otherwise would be accounted folly in business;—why is it less foolish in matters of religion? Surely prejudice is a poor guide; and a candid weighing of the facts in common life would silence many of the arguments of which infidelity boasts.

Come.

During a religious awakening in a factory village, some time ago, a foreman was awakened, but could not find peace. His superior sent him a letter, requesting him to call at six o'clock. Promptly he came. "I see you believe me," said his master. The foreman assented. "Well, see; here is another letter sending for you by one equally in earnest," said his master, holding up a slip of paper with some texts of Scripture written on it. He took the paper, and began to read slowly, "Come—unto—Me—all—ye—that—labor," etc. His lips quivered, his eyes filled with tears; and then he stood for a few moments, not knowing what to do. At length he inquired: "Am I just to believe that in the same way I believed your letter?" "Just in the same way," rejoined the master. This expedient was owned of God in setting him at liberty.

The Christian Era says: "A young man, who was a decided and thorough unbeliever—so decided that the arguments of modern infidels seemed to him very weak—at the age twenty-five years chanced to fall in with a copy of Strauss' 'Life of Jesus.' He eagerly devoured the book. He was charmed with the keenness of its statements and the completeness of its views. But the more he read, the more he was impressed by the conviction, that if the display of such keenness and ability was necessary to prove the gospel history a myth, it is a far simpler thing to accept the history just as it stands. Thus the scales fell from his eyes. His former system, on which he prided himself so much, and in which he had hoped and expected to find himself sustained by Strauss, parted like a rope of sand. Having read the last page, he exclaimed, 'I thank thee, Strauss; thou hast been my salvation!' From that day, now more than thirty years ago, he has been an earnest Bible student, and has read and reflected much on the argument for and against Christianity, and every year his faith in Christianity has grown stronger."

Mothers with their Boys.—Keep home bright, mothers! A lady was at the sea-shore last summer, whose four boys aged from eight to sixteen years, were the theme of even the busiest tongues. Such manly boys, so obedient, so thoughtful of mother and sister, such perfect gentlemen without a tinge of mannishness. Boys who could act like men in the parlor, but were full of fun and play in the field; who seemed innocent of late hours, rich dishes and champaign, and yet could be thoroughly at ease while they walked and talked with the girls of their age, or conversed with their elders. The secret leaked out one day. Mrs. S. spent many of her evenings at home with her boys in the parlor, and while she played "young lady," they made calls upon her. She did not tell us so, but we do not doubt for an instant that sweet lessons of politeness, purity and that interspersed with the "little nothings" talked during these "calls."—S. S. Times.

Wealth of the Ancient Hebrews.

In the times of David and Solomon gold existed in enormous quantities among the Hebrews. The figures given in the Old Testament appear almost fabulous. From 1 Chron. xxii. 14, we learn that David had collected together for the purpose of the temple building a hundred thousand talents of gold and a thousand thousand talents of silver; and from 1 Chron. xxix. 3, we learn that over and above this enormous amount he contributed from his own possession three thousand talents of gold and seven thousand talents of silver; whilst the people in addition offered, "for the service of the house of God, five thousand talents and ten thousand drachms of gold, and of silver ten thousand talents." (1 Chron. xxix. 7.) From these data the total value of the gold and silver has been calculated at nearly one thousand million sterling, a sum greater than our national debt, and larger than the combined annual expenditures of all the governments of Europe.—The Bible Educator.

Education in France.

We gather from Prof. Adams' recent work on "Democracy and Monarchy in France" some very interesting facts with regard to the condition of education in that country for the last century. At the inception of the Great Revolution, France had a population of 25,000,000. The colleges or schools in the country, in which the classics were taught, numbered 562, with an attendance of 72,747 pupils. During the Revolutionary regime these institutions were all swept away, the Professors were dispersed, and the property sold. A few private schools were afterwards established; but, for more than forty years before Louis Philippe ascended the throne, the great mass of the French people had no means of education whatever. During the eighteen years of Guizot's administration, educational privileges experienced a great increase; yet, in 1848, with a population of 36,000 000, there were only 69,341 pupils in the high schools of France. In other words, the proportion of pupils in these schools was 1 in every 419 of the inhabitants; while in 1789, at the outbreak of the Revolution, the proportion had been 1 in every 342.

In his work on the "Progressive Situation in France in 1827," Baron Dupin states that, of the 36,000 communes or townships of France, 14,000 were entirely without schools. In connection with this fact he says:

"France will have to put forth the greatest efforts to raise herself, by means of elementary instruction, to the simple level of those people whom we have been in the habit of regarding as ignorant. I say boldly that, in this respect, we are below the Irish and the Austrians. This inferiority is especially noticeable in the South, which is far less advanced than the North. . . . In 1817, France (with a population of some 34,000,000) had in her primary schools only 856,712 scholars; and, in 1820, the number had only increased to 1,116,777. . . . Forty years ago, 7,000,000 of French knew how to read; to-day the number has been increased to 12,000,000."

From this we learn that, in 1827, out of a population of 34,000,000, only 12,000,000, of the French could read. The report of the French Minister of Public Instruction for 1865 shows that, of the conscripts drafted in 1864, 30 to 40 per cent. could neither read nor write. In 1872, M. Taine states in his work on "Universal Suffrage," in all France, of every 100 male inhabitants, 39 can neither read nor write; and he adds that the ignorance and intellectual apathy of the French peasantry are indescribable. Hamerton confirms this testimony. In his "Intellectual Life," he remarks of the French peasantry:

"They read nothing, they learn nothing, thing of nothing, but money and the satisfaction of their appetites. Their ignorance passes belief, and is accompanied with an absolute satisfaction. M. Renan complains that the country is sinking deeper and deeper into vulgarity, forgetting its past and its noble enthusiasms. . . . 'The end of the bourgeoisie commences,' says Flaubert, 'since it is coming to entertain the sentiments of the populace. I do not see that it reads other journals, that it regales itself with other music, or that its pleasures are more elevated. With both classes there is the same love of money, the same respect for accomplished facts, the same necessity for idols in order to destroy them, the same hatred of all superiority, the same spirit of disparagement, the same class ignorance."

Joined to the above exposition of the ignorance of the lower classes of France, the following facts, which we convey in the language of Prof. Adams, assume an increased signification:

"In 1848, there were in Paris 1,050,000 inhabitants of whom more than one-third had been born out of wedlock. To be exact, the population, according to the census, was 100 illegitimate to every 185 legitimate. In Paris, then, there were, when the Revolution of 1848 broke out, 350,000 people of illegitimate birth. Since the Great Revolution, every third child in Paris received its first lessons of life in a foundling-hospital. . . . The enfant trouve, when grown up, becomes the gamin de Paris, whose peculiar nature is so graphically described by Victor Hugo in Les Miserables; and the gamin, when still further developed, is the proper tenor of any true civilization. He has generally, the rudiments of an education,—enough to enable him to read the worst literature,—that is to say, enough to enable him to imbibe temptation in every form, without enabling him to combat it. His parents are unknown to him, and his offspring are as strange to him as his parents; for they, as their father had been before them, are sent to the Foundling-Hospital.—Tribune.

Children's Corner.

Queer Tom.

Tom Flossofer was the queerest boy I ever knew. I don't think he ever cried. I never saw him cry. If Fleda found her tulips all rooted up by her pet puppy, and cried, as little girls will, Tom was sure to come around the corner whistling and say:

"What makes you cry? can you cry tulips? do you think every sob makes a root or a blossom? Here let's try to right them!"

So he would pick up the poor flowers, put their roots into the ground again, whistling all the time; make the bed look smooth and fresh, and take Fleda off to hunt hen's nests in the barn. Neither did he do any differently in his own troubles. One day his great kite snapped the string and flew away far out of sight. Tom stood still a moment, and then turned around to come home, whistling a merry tune.

"Why, Tom," said I, "aren't you sorry to lose that kite?"

"Yes, but what's the use? I can't take more than a minute to feel bad. 'Sorry' will not bring the kite back, and I want to make another"

Just so when he broke his leg.

"Poor Tom," cried Fleda, "you can't play any mo-o-re!"

"I am not poor, either. You cry for me; I don't have to do it for myself, and I have a splendid time to whistle. Besides, when I get well, I will beat every boy in school on the multiplication table; for I say it over and over till it makes me sleepy every time my leg aches."

Tom Flossofer was queer, certainly, but I wish a great many more people were queer that way. —Wood's Magazine.

A Trusty Boy.

A few years ago, says a New York paper, a large drug firm in that city advertised for a boy. Next day the store was thronged with applicants, and among them came a queer-looking little fellow, accompanied by his aunt, in lieu of faithless parents by whom he had been abandoned.

Looking at this little waif, the merchant in the store promptly said, "Can't take him; places all full, besides he is too small."

"I know he is small," said the woman, "but he is willing and faithful."

There was a twinkle in the boy's eyes which made the merchant think again. A partner in the firm volunteered to remark that he did not see what they wanted of such a boy; he wasn't bigger than a pint of cider. But after consultation the boy was set to work.

A few days later a call was made on the boys in the store for some one to stay all night. The prompt response of the little fellow contrasted well with the reluctance of the others. In the middle of the night the merchant looked in to see if all was right in the store, and presently discovered his youthful protege busy scissoring labels. "What are you doing?" said he. "I did not tell you to work nights."

"I know you did not tell me so; but I thought I might as well be doing something."

In the morning the cashier got orders to double that boy's wages; for he was willing.

Only a few weeks elapsed before a show of wild beasts passed through the streets; and, very naturally, all hands in the store rushed to witness the spectacle. A thief saw his opportunity and entered in a rear door to seize something, but in a twinkling found himself firmly clutched by the diminutive clerk aforesaid, and after a struggle was captured. Not only was a robbery prevented, but valuable articles taken from other stores were recovered. When asked by the merchant why he stayed behind to watch when all others quit their work, the reply was, "You told me never to leave the store when others were absent; and I thought I'd stop." "Double that boy's wages; he is willing and faithful." In 1869 that boy was receiving a salary of $2,500 a year, and in 1870 had become a partner in the establishment.

Origin of the Spices.

Nutmeg is the kernel of a small, smooth, pear-shaped fruit that grows on a tree in the Molucca islands and other parts of the East. The trees commenced bearing in their seventh year, and continue fruitful until they are seventy or eighty years old. Around the nutmeg, or kernel, is a bright brown shell.

This shell has a soft scarlet covering, which, when flattened and dried, is known as mace. The best nutmegs are solid, and emit oil when pricked with a pin.

Ginger is the root of a shrub first known in Asia, and now cultivated in the West Indies and Sierra Leone. The stem grows three or four feet high, and dies every year. There are two varieties of ginger, the white and black—caused by taking more or less care in selecting and preparing the roots, which are always dug in winter, when the stems are withered. The white is the best.

Cinnamon is the inner bark of a bean-tree, a native of Ceylon, that grows from twenty to thirty feet in height, and lives to be centuries old.

Cloves—native to the Moluccа islands, and so called from resemblance to a nail (clavis). The East Indians call them "changkek," from the Chinese "techengkia" (fragrant nail). They grow on a straight, smooth-barked tree about forty feet high. Cloves are not fruits, but blossoms, gathered before they are quite unfolded.

Allspice—a berry so called because it combines the odor of several spices—grows abundantly on the beautiful allspice or bay-berry tree, native of South America and the West Indies. A single tree has been known to produce one hundred and fifty pounds of berries. They are purple when ripe.

Black pepper is made by grinding the dried berry of a climbing vine, native to the East Indies. White pepper is obtained from the same berries freed from their husk or rind. Red or cayenne pepper is obtained by grinding the scarlet pod or seed-vessel of a tropical plant that is now cultivated in all parts of the world.

Religious Intelligence.

—The United Presbyterians have seventy-eight theological students in their seminaries this winter.

—The Congregational church at Akron, Ohio, is enjoying a precious outpouring of the Holy Spirit. On a recent Sabbath, fifty-four new members were taken into the church.

—Old Catholicism is making great headway in Baden, and seems likely to take entire possession. In sixteen places parish churches have been handed over to Old Catholic congregations.

—The corresponding secretary of the United Presbyterian board of Home Missions reports the indebtedness of the board to missionaries as likely to reach $10,000 by the close of the year.

—Rev. W. J. Shuey, publishing agent of the United Brethren church reports nearly $1,900 received at Dayton, O., and forwarded to the western sufferers up to Dec. 4th.

—Rev. James Mathews, late pastor of the Free Methodist church in Brooklyn, and one of the secretaries of the Syracuse Convention, is now preaching in Philadelphia. His congregation has nearly doubled since he began work in that city two or three months ago.

—The superintendent of the United Presbyterian freedmen's missions at Nashville, Tenn., has appealed to the members of that denomination for supplies for the colored people of that city, hundreds of whom are out of work and must suffer unless the hand of charity assists.

—Some idea of the religious awakening in Belfast was to be seen on Sunday, when the largest number of young communicants ever collected sat down to the Lord's Supper in several of the Presbyterian churches. In St. Enoch's Church (Rev. H. Hanna's) the young communicants numbered 250.

—In twelve months some thirty clergymen and twenty-five parishes have joined the Reformed Episcopal movement. Of the parishes five are in Illinois, four in New York, four in Pennsylvania, one in Virginia, one in Kentucky, one in Washington, two in Missouri, one in Maryland, and one in New Jersey, and others in Canada, all representing about three thousand communicants.

—The promise of the Sultan to the deputation from the Evangelical Alliance, which waited on him that the persecution of Christians in Turkey should cease seems of little value. The Governor of Syria has commanded the suppression of all Protestant schools in the province, and the building of one at Jaffa was stopped by his orders. A telegram from Constantinople of Nov. 20 announces that the residence of the American missionaries at Latakia, Syria, has been entered by an armed force.

—The spirit of the papacy is not changed toward sincere followers of the word. The pope calls Gladstone a viper and Archbishop Bailey wants to pull his nose. Numbers of Roman Catholics, and some few priests, have attended the meetings conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, in Dublin. Cardinal Cullen has issued a pastoral in which he says Roman "Catholics ought to pray for the conversion of those who are now giving up their articles of religion, and their Book of Common Prayer, to become followers of ignorant converted colliers, of roving minstrels or speculative travelers."

—The San Francisico Pacific gives an account of the burial of the Mexican martyr, the Rev. John L. Stephens. His body has been laid by the side of his mother in the cemetary at Petaluma. It was brought from Mexico at the instance and expense of his brother, Thomas A. Stephens, Esq., of Virginia City, Nev. The authorities in Mexico testified both to their own liberality and the blood-thirstiness of the priest-ridden populace among whom brother Stephens labored and died, by providing a guard of 1,200 soldiers from Ahualulco to Guadalajara and twenty-four from there to Celima. Christians of all denominations, and citizens of all classes, united in this last token of respect; for certainly in that community the childhood and youth of brother Stephens was spent.

—Great difference of opinion is expressed through the religious journals on the recent fraternal exchange between the Congregational and Unitarian bodies. One claims to be as orthodox as ever, the other denies any departure from the landmaks of the denomination. The United Presbyterian presents the following solution of the difficulty: "Our opinion is that if the denominations understood each other or themselves, they would be as distant as in former days. But it is not fashionable in these later days to have intelligent views on church doctrine. The more ignorant a man is about dogma the better Christian he is supposed to be, and the less he intrudes such questions as formerly determined church relations, the more is he disposed to assist the ecclesiastical peace. Like nearly all other churches, these have grown careless about formulated truth, and see in the fraternization of men something better than the doctrines of the creed."

News of the Week.

The City.

King Kalakana reached Chicago last Friday but was suffering from a bilious attack and disappointed both the reporters and the reception committee. No public demonstration was practicable.——Brete Harte lectured before the Young Men's Christian Association last week. His subject was the progress of American humor. He told his audience at the beginning that, carefully speaking, there was no such thing as American Humor, but that jokes had the same nature. He retailed a few grim satires, but the greatest joke of the evening was his pretense to come before the public with a lecture when he really had nothing but what a critical journal calls 'verbal swash."——The Woman's Temperance Union is experiencing discipline in the sickness of their President, Miss Willard.——Dr. J. V. Z Blaney, an eminent chemist, died last Friday. He was one of the founders of Rush Medical College and a skillful practitioner. He also held high rank in the Masonic order, having received 33d degree and holding various offices and honors with long titles and hollow dignity.——Charles Bradlaugh, the English Republican, lectured last Sunday before the Sunday Lecture Society. He is an avowed infidel.

The Country.

The Vicksburg massacre becomes revolting as facts come out one by one. It is known that over 100 negroes were killed and but one or two whites. Gov. Ames' course is denounced by the whites and the mayor of Vicksburg issued a counter proclamation. It is not yet possible to fix definitely on the instigators, but the White Leagues have been at work to displace the colored officials and the crime probably is wholly their work.——The Union Pacific Railroad depot at Lone Tree, Neb., containing a large amount of freight and supplies for the grasshopper sufferers, was destroyed by fire on Tuesday, Dec. 5th. The fire was incendiary.——It has been estimated that there are about 25,000 people out of employment in St. Louis at the present time.——Hamilton College has just received from Gerrit Smith, of Peterboro', the magnificent sum of $10,000. Mr. Smith in February last gave the College $10,000, thus making a total of $20,000 that the College has received from him during the year.——An earthquake shock was felt in Westchester Co., N. Y., and parts of Connecticut last Friday.——The White Leagues of New Orleans threatened the assassination of the Returning Board all week, and an outbreak was expected last Sunday when the election reports were published. In the state of the city, the Board deferred its report, but gave commissions to only such officers whose election was not contested.

The Capitol.

The currency question was brought up in the House last week by a bill of Mr. Kelly's of Penn. to turn greenbacks into convertable bonds, an inflation measure. Much time was spent to little purpose. The latest features of the discussion do not promise any effective measures embodying the President's suggestions on currency.——There is an unusually strong lobby force in Washington, working for appropriations, chief among them is the Pacific Mail Company, whose affairs are in a tangled state and are under investigation.——The trial of the Safe-burglary conspirators which ended a while since in the disagreement of the jury, is not likely to be revived, in spite of the damaging evidence brought forward. Richard Harrington, Jr., one of the conspirators, is assistant attorney of the District and a select friend at the White House as well as of the infamous District Ring.——King Kalakaua arrived in Washington Saturday morning, and was handsomely received——In an interview with Representative Sheldon, Saturday, the President said, in talking of Louisiana affairs, that he did not deem it advisable to take any further precautionary steps to prevent the White-Leaguers from trampling on the laws; but that, if they again attempted violence, he would resort to extreme measures and subject the ringleaders to severe punishment.

Foreign.

A St. Petersburgh dispatch confirms the report that the Emperor Alexander had consented to exempt the Mennonites from military service. This announcement it is thought, will probably have the effect of checking the increasing emigration among this sect.——The weather permitted favorable observations of the transit of Venus in India, at Cairo, Suez and Thebes. The weather was cloudy at Shanghai. A dispatch from Prof. Harkness, of the United States Naval Observatory, dated Hobart, from Tasmania, Dec. 9. says: "Although the weather was bad, our observations at the time of the transit were particularly successful. We succeeded in taking one hundred and thirteen photographs of Venus during her passage over the disk or the sun."——Arrests of Internationalists leaders continue in Italy. Over six are now in confinment and will be tried for conspiracy against the State. Many others who were sought for by the police have gone to France——Official acceptance on the part of Great Britain of the invitation of the United States to send Commissioners to the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia has been sent to Washington.——The Spanish Republicans continue their movements against the Carlists in a fashion which seems to imply imminent and descisive changes. It is said that the Alfonsists have made unsuccessful overtures to Marshal Serrano, but that they continue active and hopeful. The Spaniards in Cuba have had varying fortunes of late, but there have been no fights of any large consequence.——The trial of Count Von Armin began last week in Berlin. The developments of the case seem to wholly justify the German government in proceeding against him for insubordination in office. The evidence in the case was all taken on Monday.——Intelligence has been received in St. Petersburgh of a renewal of Turcoman raids on the Caspian. Many peaceful inhabitants have been slain, and their wives and children, to the number of hundreds, carried off into slavery.——It is feared that the steamer Pelican, from Cardiff for Cork, has been lost, with all on board. Her passengers and crew numbered forty-six in all. There was again a heavy gale on the English coast last week which caused considerable damage to shipping.

Home and Health Hints.

When the Clothes Take Fire it is important to know how to act. Three persons out of four would rush right up to the burning individual, and begin to paw with their hands without any definite aim. It is useless to tell the victim to do this or that, or call for water. In fact, it is generally best to say not a word, but seize a blanket from a bed, or a cloak, or any woolen fabric—if none is at hand, take any woolen material—hold the corners as far apart as you can, stretch them out higher than your head, and running boldly to the person, make motion of clasping in the arms, most about the shoulders. This instantly smothers the fire and saves the face. The next instant throw the unfortunate person on the floor. This is an additional safety to the face and breath, and any remnant of flame can be put out more leisurely. The next instant, immerse the burnt part in cold water, and all pain will cease with rapidity of lightning. Next get some common flour, remove from the water, and cover the burnt parts with an inch thickness of flour, if possible; put the patient to bed, and do all that is possible to soothe until the physician arrives. Let the flour remain until it falls off itself, when a beautiful new skin will be found. Unless the burns are deep, no other application is needed. The dry flour for burns is the most admirable remedy ever proposed, and the information ought to be imparted to all. The principle of its action is that, like the water, it causes instant and perfect relief from pain, by totally excluding the air from the injured parts. Spanish whiting and cold water, of a mushy consistency, are preferred by some. Dredge on the flour until no more will stick, and cover with cotton batting.

—There is scarcely any ache to which children are subject, so hard to bear and so difficult to cure as ear-ache, but here is a remedy never known to fail: Take a bit of cotton batting, put upon it a pinch of black pepper, gather it up and tie it: dip in sweet oil and insert it in the ear. Put a flannel bandage over the head to keep it warm, and it will give immediate relief.

—The late Dr. Marshall Hall of England said, "If I were seriously ill of consumption, I would live out of doors day and night, except in rainy weather or mid-winter; then I would sleep in an unplastered log house. Physic has no neutriment, gaspings for air cannot cure you; monkey capers in a gynasium cannot cure you. What consumptives wants is air, not physic—pure are, not medicated air—plenty of meat and bread."

Farm and Garden.

WINTER FEEDING OF COWS.—This point has received more attention from farmers, and has been so thoroughly discussed, that most dairy men are posted upon it. It may be laid down as a general principle that the nearer the winter food of a cow is brought to her ordinary summer diet the better will be her condition and the milk she will furnish. Few farmers are so behind the times that they undertake to make much milk from late cut, woody-fibered hay. Haying gives a highly succulent food, just the thing for a free flow of milk. Grass cut early, while the stalks and leaves are full of rich juices, must be the main reliance of the dairyman for the winter food of his herd. There is no substitute for good hay. Indian corn is a species of grass, and corn stalks cut before their juices have concentrated into the grain, make excellent fodder, but whoever attempts to winter his cows on stalks alone will wish he had some better food for a steady diet. Most Southern farmers know no other feed for their herds. Ask a planter what he feeds his cows upon in winter, and the almost invariable reply is, "fodder," meaning corn-fodder, but the cows do not bear testimony to its being the best of food.

There is virtue in good hay beyond the estimation of most farmers. We often hear it spoken of disparagingly in comparison with grain, and especially cornmeal. Hay-fed cows may not look as sleek as those fed liberally with cornmeal, neither are they so feverish. Corn is an oily food, and runs the animal machinery at a high pressure, but like all other machinery run at high speed, the lacteal system so run is apt to break down, or certainly get out of order. Garget or some other inflammatory disease sets in, and the cow gives out early. We would not, however, discourage moderate allowance of grain along with hay for the winter feed of cows, but instead of so much meal as is generally fed we would use rye or wheat bran more liberally. Bran may not put so much fat on the cattle as does meal, but it makes good milk, good muscle, good bones and good manure.

For producing milk in winter we have never found any fodder equal to rowen, especially the aftermath of orchard and Kentucky grass. The rowen crop of these grasses is pretty much destitute of stems, and makes a juicy, rich hay, that comes nearer to grass than any other fodder we have tried.

A few roots—sugar beets we like best for cows—should occasionally be fed in the winter. Pound for pound, roots have much less nutrition than hay, but they greatly improve the health of cows. Being antiseptic in their effects, roots counteract the feverish tendency caused by corn meal.—Interocean.

DEFENCE OF
JUDGE DANIEL H. WHITNEY,

Master of Belvidere Lodge, before the Grand Lodge of Ill., On charge of Unmasonic Conduct, in bringing Samuel L. Keith the Murderer of Ellen Slade to justice.

CONCLUDED.

NOTE:

This DEFENCE OF JUDGE WHITNEY will be published in Pamphlet form Jan. 1st, 1875.

Price 20 cents each, Post Paid.

$1.50 per Dozen, Post Paid. $8.00 per 100, by Express.

Lodge has been fully informed, as was the Grand Lodge, of the transaction referred to in my defence, of Masons here secreting and aiding the flight of a murderer from a forign country, and it has not been deemed worthy of note; and not the least of the bitterness against me was prompted by rebuking the members, and making public the transaction.

The resistence of the law by Masons, in case of the death, of Miss Slade, was well known to the Grand Lodge, and their committee, and they have approved it, and this Lodge has quietly acquiesced; and having their Charter restored by the present Grand Master, and several of the most culpable of the members have been elected to the most important offices in the Lodge.

The question will naturally occur to every one, "Is there no remedy for this growing evil?" This is more easily asked than answered. One thing seems to me certain, that while professed ministers of the Gospel and members of churches are permitted to associate themselves with these organizations, the task to apply a remedy will be a hopeless one; and just so long will the declaration made to me not long since by a high Mason and a worthy man prove true, that "a Masonic Lodge is the strangest medley of priests and murderers—deacons and whoremasters—church members and gamblers—decent men and loafers—drunkards and rowdies, that the All Seeing Eye looks down upon."

Those who are not Masons are under the impression that there is something about Masonry that is mysteriously instructive and sublime. Now there is nothing under the circle of the sun further from it. Any half dozen of my readers may assemble together and agree upon certain grips, and signs, and passwords, and upon a ceremony of initiation, obligate themselves to keep this from all the world but those to whom it shall be revealed according to their establshed rules, and solemnly pledge themselves to stand by each other, and all who shall become associated with them, through thick and thin, and they will have an institution similar, as instructive, as august and sublime, as is the Institution of "Ancient Freemasonry."

Freemasonry teaches no historical, no geographical, no mechanical nor scientific truths; her ceremonies are childish and puerile; her charities more in sound than in substance; and selfishness supplies the bond that unites them in an irresistible brotherhood. I can readily anticipate the inquiry why I remained a Mason so long? I declare I was always a suspicious Mason, and I have long watched the Institution with a full determination to ascertain, beyond reasonable doubt, if the charges made against the Institution were true—if the witness stand and jury box were corrupted, and the judicial ermine soiled by influence; and if found true, I determined to renounce it. It would not be fair to say that all the members of the fraternity are corrupt; there are many who could not be induced to act in accordance with the constitution of Masonry, indicated by the actions of the Grand Master, the committee of the Grand Lodge and the majority of the members of this Lodge; and yet but few of such have the firmness to act, and their silence is the earnest of their safety.

And further, in regard to my remaining a member of the fraternity—the reader will please bear in mind that I conclude my letter to the M. W. G. M., "as I have learned and taught Masonry, and as I presume you have learned and teach it," &c. Now this plainly implies, as it was intended, that Masonry may be differently taught, and this is true; hence the bitterness against me, on the part of "Simon Pure" Masons. In conferring degrees, I have always used the words "worthy brother," and then strictly charged the initiate that he must judge of the worthyness of a brother from the very act or service he requires him to perform, and if it conflicted with morality, the laws of the land, or the rights of others, he must treat such an one as unworthy and disregard his demands. This, it is contended, fritters away the objects of Masonry, and makes it a mere charitable institution. This I have always admitted, and claimed nothing more for Masonry; repudiating as dangerous the doctrine, (which I am now of the opinion is well settled and has been for ages) that no Mason has a right to regard and treat another as unworthy until tried and suspended or expelled.

The members of Belvidere Lodge, as nearly as I can recollect, when I left it, were, S. A. Hurlbut, W. T. Burgess, S. Bassett, S. C. Gooding, R. D. Rix, C. Gardner, A. E. Jenner, H. J. Doolittle, L. A. Magher, J. Florida, J. Johnson, Isaac Benson, J. Curtiss, Rev. O. Miller, E. A. Woodruff, S. Longeor, S. Peck, A. Williams, D. S. Brooks, Isaac Miller, G. A. Barrows, J. W. Westfall, H. Jackson, C. Ladd, A. Birge, S. Mack, S. Leach, O. Miller, Jr., A. Mather, Rev. T. L. Breckenridge, Mr. Simpkins, Mr. Renwick, J. D. Hammond, A. Lathrop, S, Carpenter, Leroy Benson, H. A. Turner, H. R. Meade, J. D. White, E. S. Courtright, H. C. Miller, Mr. Millard, L. Andrews. Horace Robinson, A. C. Fuller, Esq., Rev. M. Decker, C. Connel, Col. Freeman, Hon. L. Fuller, Col. Avery, W. F. Peebles, Esq. J. Powell, Rev. S. Park, Lyman Benson, and several others, I presume, whose names do not occur to me; and since, have joined, Dr. Jones, and the Rev. R. A. Blanchard.

And now, I leave the whole matter to the candid judgment of an enlightened public, who have a deeper interest in the subject than they are generally aware of.

D. H. WHITNEY.

STEPHEN A. HURLBUT AS A SOLDIER.

From the Chicago Tribune, Sep. 26, 1874.

In the preceding pages we see S. A. Hurlbut loyally fulfilling his Masonic obligations in shielding a brother murderee, here he appears as a swindling Federal officer.

ROCKFORD, Ill., Sept. 25.—The Journal of this city publishes to-morrow morning the report made to the Secretary of War in 1865 by a special Commission appointed by President Lincoln to investigate the conduct of Gen. Hurlbut, at that time in command at New Orleans, now a member of Congress from the Fourth Illinois Distriet, and the Republican candidate for re-election. The Journal says:

Two years ago, when the Republican Convention nominated Gen. Hurlbut as its candidate for Congress for the Fourth Distriet, the Journal refused to support him on account of his personal unfitness. Prominent among things that disqualified him was his administration of affairs in New Orleans while Military Commander of the Department of the Gulf, which had become so notoriously bad that President Lincoln appointed Maj.-Gen. W. T. Smith, of the Regular Army, and the Hon. James T. Brady, of New York, an eminent and distinguished jurist, a Commission to proceed to New Orleans to inquire into the truth of the charges of misdemeanors committed by his sanction. These misdemeanors were referred to in general terms only, for the reason that the report of the Commission could not be obtained by the Journal to lay before its readers. These charges were, as a matter of course, denied by Mr. Hurlbut and his friends, and proof of the existence of any such report challenged. A copy of this report we were at the time unable to obtain.

The report itself, now published for the first time, makes several columns of the Journal, but the gravamen of the charges against Hurlbut is contained in the following letter attached to the report, and addressed officially to Gen. Canby, then in command of the Military Division of Western Mississippi:

THE CHARGES.

OFFICE OF THE SPECIAL COMMISSION,
NEW ORLEANS, April 12, 1865.

Maj.-Gen. E. R. S. Canby, Commander Military Division, Western Mississippi:

GENERAL: The Special Commission has the honor to report that it has proceeded so far in examining the conduct of Maj.-Gen. S. A. Hurlbut as to be entirely satisfied that their duty requires them to recommend his being dealt with as being guilty of henious offenses.

The Commission has already asked the Major General commanding the Division of Western Mississippi to confine certain officers of lesser rank in the military prison for frauds committed by them upon the Government of the United States, and they cannot in justice to themselves or those officers longer refrain from suggesting that Maj.-Gen. Hurlbut be treated in the same manner. The testimony taken warrants full belief in his having been guilty: First of official falsehood in an indorsement made by him on a letter addressid to him not in his official capacity, by Col. H. Robinson, Provost-Marshal-General, Department of the Gulf, which letter is dated Jan. 2, 1865; but, as Gen. Hurlbut knew, was not written till long after that date (correction sent to Maj.-Gen. Canby), April 14, 1865. Second, a similar falsehood, addressed by him as Commander of the Military Department of the Gulf, to Maj.-Gen. Smith, one of the Commissioners, denying all knowledge of the channels by which the letter above mentioned had reached him, although he well knew by whom it had been delivered. Third, guilty complicity with the aforesaid Col. Robinson while the latter was Provost-Martial-General, Deparlment of the Gulf, in receiving bribes or gratuities from Clark & Fulton, and C. A. Weed. Fourth, writing, on or about the 4th day of April, 1865, a letter to said Rrobinson, intending to create false testimony in his favor as to the taking of bribes as aforesaid, antedating the letter as of the 19th day of November, 1864. Fifth, granting, on the application of his brother-in-law, L. L. Crandall, permits for trade, for obtaining which he knew that the said Crandall received payment in one instance of some $5,000, and yet neither reproving or taking any cognizance of the act as illegal or unjust. Sixth, perjury committed before the commission, in falsely swearing, with willful and corrupt intent, that he did not know of the receipt by said Crandall of the $5,000 aforesaid, though he well knew the fact as above stated. Seventh, perjury, and willfully, corruptly, and falsely stating before the Commission, under oath, that the aforesaid letter, purporting to be written on the 19th day of November, 1864 was written on the day it bears date, when he well knew it was not. Eighth, conniving with the said Robinson to prevent the detection of offences that had been perpetrated by said Robinson as above mentioned. Ninth, willfully interfering to obstruct and hinder this Commission in the discharge of its duties so as to prevent the discovery of fraud and injustice practiced in this department by officers in the service or employment of the Government.

There may be other charges founded on new discoveries o monies received by Maj.-Gen. Hurlbut, or evil practices atf which he connived. The present seems abundant to call for arrest and imprisonment.

We respectfully submit that the higher the rank of the officer who prostitutes his office the more promptly should be the method of dealing with him. and with this feeling we commend this communication to your early action.

Your obedient servants,

WM. T. SMITH, Major-General.
JAMES T. BRADY.

Temperance.

How They Take their Poison Out West.

The people of Lincoln, Nebraska, have been growing inquisitive about their drinks, and recently set Prof. Hughey, of the University there to analize them. The result was an analysis of twelve different specimens of whiskey, brandy and wine with results of which the following are fair samples:

"Quick's "Best Whiskey."—This contained: 1. Sugar of Lead, 8 grains to a quart; 2. Strychnine; 3 Strontia; 4. Potash; 5. Benzine; 9. Brazil wood: 7. Alcohol, 18 per cent.

Leighton & Brown's "Best Port Wine."—This contained: 1. Sugar of Lead, 3 grains to a quart; 2. Potash and soda carbonates; 3. Logwood; 4. Alcohol, 9 per cent.

Kelly & Read's "Brandy."—This contained, 1. Sugar of Lead, 7 grains to a quart; 2. Strontia; 3. Brazil wood; 4. Alcohol, 25 per cent.

McLaughlin's "Gin"—This contained: 1. Sugar of Lead, 5 grains to a quart; 2. Strychnine; 3 Strontia; 4. Potash; 5. Benzine; 6. Alcohol, 16 per cent.

Prof. Hughey concluded his report which is addressed to the Lincoln Temperance Society in these terms:

The analysis is not exhaustive, as I did not separate the sugar which some of the liquors contained in the form of caramel, nor the Cayenne pepper, which all the whiskeys contained more or less. The poisonous substances, however, I have carefully separated. The absolute amount of sugar of lead. strychnine and strontia was remarkably large. The poisonous qualities of these substances is so well known that nothing here needs to be said about them.

In many of these liquors there is strychnine enough to a quart to kill a man if it were taken separate from any other mixture, and at one dose; the same is true of the sugar of lead.

In good whiskey the amount of alcohol should be from forty to fifty per cent, but in these liquors it ranges only from fifteen to twenty-five per cent, the largest percentages belonging to the brandies and gin.

As good liquors, some of these whiskies can be profitably manufactured for thirty cents a gallon; but none of these liquors are what they purport to be.

If any one doubts that these poisons are found in common liquor, if such doubter will come to the University Laboratory in the afternoon, I will separate and precipitate lead, strontia, etc., in their presence.

The Physiological Effects of Tobacco.

For a number of years, my vocation has constantly called my attention to the evils enacted upon our race by the use of tobacco. Containing one of the most active poisons known to our materia medica, its use could only be expected to result in evil. Nicotine, its active principle, is a potent sedative. Through the nervous system, the heart, the lungs, and the brain, all come under its vicious influence. In tobacco users, fatty degeneration of the heart has come to be very common. These furnish our morning papers with a very large per cent. of their obituary notices, commencing, "Found dead in his bed. A post-mortem revealed the fact that he died of heart disease."

In another class—and a very large one—its sedative effect upon the lungs renders them peculiarly liable to become an easy prey to tubercle. This is especially the case with smokers, or those who often breathe tobacco smoke. Thus it plays its role in consumption, and often causes "the mourners to go about the street."

Every now and then the brain undergoes softening from the same cause; insanity supervenes; and the asylum becomes the shelter of those who, else, would have been an honor to every department of society.

Then, again, the brain becomes the seat of cancer. It is but a few weeks since one of my friends died. He was an inordinate tobacco-chewer—often said that it was killing him. But its sedative influence so destroyed his will-power, that he could not quit until death closed the scene. Then we found a cancer the size of a hen's egg in his brain, proving the correctness of his presentiment, and accounting for the very singular phenomena that for many months had marked his case. This man had wealth at his command. His check would have been honored for fifty thousand dollars; but nicotine had so destroyed his powers of mind, that he would not turn his back upon the enemy who was destroying his life!

Thus we see a few of the ways in which tobacco is causing disease and death. A drop or two of its essential oil would do the same work in a very few moments. Is it not to be expected, then, that continual tampering with this dangerous thing will, sooner or later, conduct to the same results? Again I have noticed many cases where it takes twice as much medicine to reach a case of sickness, when the patient uses tobacco, as for one who does not, and on some of this class of patients medicine wholly refuses to act, leaving them without hope to disease and death.—Christian Worker.

How Drinking Causes Apoplexy.

It is the essential nature of all wines and spirits to send an increased amount of blood to the brain. The first effect of taking of wine or stronger form of alcohol, is to send the blood there faster than common, hence the circulation that gives the red face. It increases the activity of the brain, and it works faster, and so does the tongue. But the blood goes to the brain faster than common, it returns faster, and no special harm. But suppose a man keeps on drinking, the blood is sent to the brain so fast, in large quantities, that in order to make room for it the arteries have to enlarge themselves; they increase in size, and in doing so they press against the more yielding and flaccid veins which carry the blood out of the brain and thus diminish their size, their pores, the result being that the blood is not only carried to the arteries of the brain faster than is natural or healthful, but it is prevented from leaving it as fast as usual; hence a double set of causes of death are in operation. A man may drink enough brandy or other spirits in a few hours, or even minutes, to bring on a fatal attack of appoplexy.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its introduction, doings progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

That the book is one of great interest and value is shown hy the following

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samnel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal; or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issned by him, pnrporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of t..e Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made snch a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is snpposed hy many to be, in its obligations, the anthor of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acqnainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y.,, and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

Publisher's Department.

A New Regiment.

We have prepared a muster-roll on which to record the names of that regiment of friends who, for the sake of light, truth, holiness, and for the sake of the prosperity of the Cynosure, will pledge themselves to send in the subscriptions of six persons during the year 1875. We quote the plans from Mr. Hickman's letter which appeared last week:

A NEW REGIMENR FORMING—ENLIST!

Not long since I pledged to the publishers that I would send up six new subscribers within one year. The time is not more than one-third up, and yet I have nearly redeemed my pledge, and yet I have not neglected my business in the least. Let us act at once and in unison and send up one thousand pledges on postal cards by Jan. 1st, 1875, pledging that within one year we will each send up six new names as subscribers for the Cynosure, and if through sickness or any unforseen cause a few should fail to meet our obligations, we would be morally released and our publishers would so consider. Let us form a regiment at once, and those of us falling back and failing by January, 1876, of having six new subscribers to receive credit from those having more than that number.

Lodgemen say a great deal about 'light' in the lodge and yet there is nothing they dislike more than the "light." Let's give them a plenty of it during the year 1875, and the Cynosure well circulated will assist in bringing about this much desired end.

Let us organize a regiment between now and January 1st, each one pledged to furnish six new subscribers during the year 1875. Respectfully yours,

JAS. S. HICKMAN.

Since publishing the letter from Mr. Hickman we have received the names of ten new subscribers and twenty dollars secured by Mr. A. B. Copeland, Parnasus, Pa., and have put his name down as an officer in this regiment. We would be glad where it is convenient, to have others fulfill their pledges when they send them.

Does your subscription expire in January? Please get a few other subscriptions and forward your renewal before the first of January.

We receive some orders for petition headings now and would like to receive more. We want to get the clerical register of the German Baptists and of other denominations which oppose secrecy in order to have petitions circulated as widely as possible.

Remember the Cynosure report which is to be made out in two weeks and try to make it a good one.

Postage on the Cynosure.

After Jan. 1st, 1875, THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. The postage on the CYNOSURE is 20 cents a year.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 year a we cannot do this.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscriber for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shal have to shorten the time of subscription to pay sufficientlyit.l
